The ads are scheduled to run for the next six months in 19 major newspapers as well as Fortune, Forbes, Business Week and trade magazines including ADVERTISING AGE. Philip Morris is believed to have included trade magazines in an effort to drum up advertisers for its Philip Morris Magazine.

But initial reaction to the ads is negative.

"Ridiculous—it has no credibility," Philip Dorf, exec VP of Robert Marston Associates, a New York PR agency, said of the campaign. "Trying to position smokers as a market is a futile exercise. To even suggest that smokers constitute a market, except for tobacco products, is really stretching the definition of a market."

$1 trillion is too much financial power to ignore.
PHILIP MORRIS

Philip Morris print ads touting smokers' clout broke last week.

John Cox, senior VP-communications at Avon Products, sees the campaign as a "sound rear-guard action, but rear guards don't win wars."

The tide of public opinion has swung so far against smoking that it's not going to move back, said Mr. Cox, a smoker. But, he added, the Philip Morris action could be an effective delaying tactic.

The Tobacco Institute, the industry trade group, said it will use the Philip Morris ads—and possibly the

Pediatricians wail at Carnation

By MARCY MAGIERA

LOS ANGELES—The American Academy of Pediatrics has jumped on Carnation Co.'s new baby formula before it even gets to market.

Carnation, which last week announced the fall introduction of its Good Start H.A. and Good Nature entries into the $1.6 billion category, is feeling the heat for its plans to promote directly to mothers, a break from standard infant-formula marketing practices.

Carnation says it plans strictly an "information campaign," using print ads to alert new mothers to the potential problems of formula intolerance in their babies.

The ads won't promote Good Start, a whey-based hypoallergenic formula for newborns through 6-month-old babies (AA, June 13).

"It's a sham," academy President Richard Narkewicz said of Carnation's pitch to mothers of newborns. "There will be only one formula from Carnation on the market. . . . Our fear is that many people won't consult their physicians, and will just take what they read summarily."

Charged with creating the "information campaign" for Good Start is Ogilvy & Mather, Los Angeles, which also will develop a TV, print and direct-mail campaign for Good Nature, a follow-up formula for babies about 6 months or older who eat solid foods.

The ad budget isn't known, though industry analysts earlier suggested it would take $50 million to $100 million to enter the market against established competitors.

The bulk of the advertising will be for Good Nature.

Dr. Narkewicz said the academy will consider mounting a counter-campaign advising mothers that breast-feeding is recommended for infants. "We're not an organization that would advocate a boycott," he said. "We give advice."

He expressed the organization's concern in a recent letter to Carnation President Timm Crull, warning that "any attempt to dissuade mothers from breast-feeding by direct public advertising of formulas would be strongly condemned by the academy."

Action for Corporate Accountability, a successor to the original Infant Formula Action Coalition that fought Nestle's overseas marketing practices a number of years ago, said it will monitor Carnation's U.S. marketing efforts for Good Start. Carnation is a subsidiary of Nestle.

The advocacy group plans to reimpose a boycott on Nestle products on Oct. 4 unless Nestle promises to adhere to the World Health Organization's marketing rules. ACA National Chairman Douglas Johnson charged Nestle has reneged on its 1984 agreement to comply with the WHO marketing guidelines for infant formula.

Nestle waged a long battle in the late 1970s with WHO over its proposed marketing rules but finally agreed to comply. Consumer groups, led by IFAC, boycotted the company during that period, charging it with

- Glamour, with 1987 gross advertising revenues of $87.6 million, is Advance Publications' top magazine by gross ad revenues (AA, June 27, P. S-12). This was incorrectly listed in a table in the "100 Leading Media Companies" report.

Europe opens wallet: Saatchi

By LAUREL WENTZ

LONDON—Saatchi & Saatchi Co. predicts Europe will have the fastest growth in ad spending this year, while North America will have the slowest.

Worldwide, Saatchi is forecasting a 9.2% increase in ad expenditures in major media in 1988 to $163.7 billion (AA, June 27). Excluding inflation, real growth would be 6%.

Saatchi predicts major media spending in North America will increase by 8.5% to $80.8 billion in 1988 but will increase by only 6.8% in 1989 and 6.9% in 1990.

From a January prediction of 11% growth, Saatchi has lowered its projections for North American 1988 network TV expenditures to 10%, reflecting the uncertainty caused by the Writers Guild of America strike.

The 1989 network TV forecast also has been downgraded from 8% to 6% because of current softness in parts of the scatter market.

Internationally, the decline of the U.S. dollar caused the value in 1987 of the European market to increase by 15%, about $5.6 billion, and the value of the Asia/Pacific market by 12%, about $3 billion.

Major media ad spending in Europe, the fastest-growing region, is predicted to increase by 10.8% to $47 billion this year, by 9.8% in 1989 and by 9.3% in 1990, due partly to the deregulation of TV throughout Europe.

In the U.K., Saatchi predicts a 1988 ad spending increase of 10.3% —amounting to 6.1% after inflation —to $10.4 billion. The anticipated addition of a fifth U.K. TV channel in 1993 and the launch of three channels by direct broadcast satellite in late 1989 should keep the TV market growing.

In France, TV commercials filled seven hours a week in 1986. However, spots aired 20 hours a week last year, when two new channels started and TF-1, France's largest channel, was deregulated and sold off by the government. Saatchi is looking this year for a 13.6% increase (9.9% after inflation) in ad spending to $6.7 billion.

In West Germany, deregulation is moving more slowly, with two state-owned networks each airing 20 minutes a day of advertising and 82% of ad spending still going to print. Saatchi expects ad spending growth of 4.5% (3% after inflation) to $9 billion in 1988.

Ad spending in Italy, Europe's most deregulated TV market, is expected to jump 17.4% (or 11.3% after inflation) to $5.2 billion this year.

Three European markets—Spain, Portugal and Greece—are expected to increase ad spending by more than 25% this year.

In Spain, growth of 28.4% (18.9% after inflation) to $4 billion this year is predicted despite the impact of a ban on TV advertising for cigarettes that takes effect in September.

In Portugal, Saatchi sees a 36.9% increase (26.8% after inflation) to $278 million this year.

In Greece, ad spending shot up by 70% in the first quarter of 1988, prompting Saatchi to boost its 1988 forecast from 24.5% to a 34.9% (14.4% after inflation) increase to $304 million.

Asia/Pacific is slated for an 8.6% increase in ad spending to $31.4 billion in 1988, followed by an 8.7% increase next year and 9.4% in 1990.

Saatchi cited three reasons for strong growth in the region: fast growth in private-sector consumption in key markets like Japan; more media opportunities in markets including China, where TV set ownership is expanding quickly; and lifting of restrictions on advertising and media in several markets.

For Japan, the second-largest ad market in the world, Saatchi predicts spending will increase by 6.9% (5.4% after inflation) to $23.5 billion this year.

In Australia, spending is expected to increase by 9.9% (2.3% after inflation) in 1988. New Zealand is predicted to grow by 13.8% (5.5% after inflation).

Saatchi didn't make individual forecasts for Latin American countries but predicts the whole region's spending will grow by 9.2% this year to $3.2 billion and by 8% in 1989 and 8.1% in 1990.#

P&G fabric softener makes fresh start

By MARINA SPECHT

MADRID—Procter & Gamble Co. is relaunching Lenor fabric softener in major European markets, an effort to regain market share lost to Unilever and other rivals.

The reformulated product, using new technology the company says improves softness, begins its rollout in Spain, where Lenor wasn't previously sold. P&G launched it there last month, backed by an estimated $3.5 million ad campaign via Grey Advertising, the Lenor agency throughout Europe.

The new technology surfaced in the U.S. in mid-1987, in the company's Downy brand.

Unilever executives said the relaunch was spurred by P&G's declining share in fabric softeners.

Lenor is a liquid fabric softener throughout Europe, except in West Germany where a Lenor dryer sheet was added to the Lenor liquid, liquid concentrate and liquid refill pouch product line last year.

P&G's share of the U.S. liquid softener market fell from 42% in 1981 to 38% in 1986, while Lever Bros.' share climbed from 7% to 36%, a Unilever spokesman said.

In 1981, P&G and Unilever were tied in Europe with 21% of the softener market each. Unilever now claims a 25% share, followed by P&G with 17%, a Unilever spokesman said.

Colgate-Palmolive Co. and Henkel each hold 13% to 14% of the $900 million European fabric softener market, which is growing 7% yearly.

"P&G is reacting to every Lever move in Europe because they don't want us to be even further ahead of them," said Gonzalo Sordo, marketing manager at Lever Iberica.

Unilever is relaunching in Europe its fabric softener, known as Snuggle in the U.S.

The brand is sold in Europe under various names that indicate something cuddly in local languages. The brand is called Mimosin in Spain; Cajoline in France; Cocolino in Italy; Robijn in Belgium and the Netherlands; and Kuschelweich in West Germany and Austria.

Unilever has centralized production of European spots at Lintas:Worldwide. Previously, each country created its own spots featuring the same teddy bear used in the U.S. Snuggle campaign.

Now, a pool of European commercials is produced in New York from European creative work.

In Spain, P&G introduced Lenor softener a week after the relaunch of Mimosin, the market leader. Mr. Sordo said Mimosin has a 25% share, while a P&G spokesman put the Lever share at 22%.

Ten-second TV spots by Grey urge consumers to "Discover Lenor, a new world of softness." Longer spots, also by Grey, broke last month.

"P&G sped up the Lenor launch in Spain in order to make it coincide with Lever's relaunch of Mimosin," Mr. Sordo said.

A Spanish P&G spokesman denied any link between the launches. Lintas handles Mimosin.

Lever boosted Mimosin's ad budget by 80% to $2.8 million this year and expects P&G to spend $3.5 million on Lenor in its first year. P&G refused to disclose ad spending.

P&G may have trouble carving a place in the $110 million Spanish fabric softener market from well-established brands like Mimosin, Henkel's Vernel and Flor, owned by local marketer Camp.

The latter two have about 20% of the market each.

In other European markets, P&G introduced New Lenor in the U.K. in June in two fragrances. An ad campaign by Grey breaks this summer to challenge U.K. market leader Comfort, another Unilever brand.

Lenor is brand leader with a 43% share in Germany, P&G's biggest European market and the country with the world's highest per household consumption of fabric softener. Last month, P&G added a Summer Fresh Lenor line, including a concentrate and refill pack, also backed by a Grey-created campaign.

In France, where Lenor's 10%-to-15% market share trails Colgate's Supline (33%), Unilever's Cajoline (25%) and Henkel's Mini Doux line (25%), the superconcentrate market is heating up.

Henkel has won about 20% of the French softener market with its Super Mini Doux line extension, now accounting for the lion's share of the Mini Doux line.

P&G and Colgate followed last year with Lenorette and Ultra Doux Supline superconcentrates but haven't stolen share from Henkel.#

Big Bang II: Shops seek media ties

By LAUREL WENTZ

From New York to Singapore to Sydney, the next wave of "Big Bang" agency combinations is arriving, only this time among media-buying departments looking to increase their clout.

Even giant Saatchi & Saatchi Co. said it would consider linking up with non-Saatchi agencies outside the U.S. and the U.K. to jointly buy time and space in media.

In the U.S., Saatchi will decide soon whether to implement a feasibility study focused on joining the media-buying operations of its three key units: Backer Spielvogel Bates, Saatchi & Saatchi DFS and Campbell-Mithun-Esty.

The total domestic billings of those three agencies are about $3.6 billion annually.

The fear that Saatchi will aggressively pool that media weight and position itself for huge media discounts is what's spurring concern—and action—among other major agencies and agency groups.

As many advertisers consolidate buying at one agency or take it in-house in the U.S., agencies without enough clout to demand the best prices and ad schedules are fearful they'll be left out in the cold.

Agencies that would never think of joining operations with competing shops—because of client conflict problems—are putting together deals outside the U.S.

In the Netherlands, six competing agencies—including Young & Rubicam, Ogilvy & Mather and J. Walter Thompson Co.—will launch a media-buying group in September, called the Media Buying Center.

In Argentina, Spain, Belgium and France, competing agencies already have formed huge media-buying units.

Industry executives now see this happening in the U.S. Sources say every major agency—and particularly those that aren't part of a large holding company—are talking to one another about teaming up for media buys (see story on Page 1).

Omnicom Group and O&M parent Ogilvy Group last week confirmed they were talking about a worldwide joint media-buying venture that would have massive client conflict implications in the U.S.

BBDO Worldwide and DDB Needham Worldwide are the two largest units of Omnicom.

"If they can join their media-buying departments, it's

Wanted: Media muscle

Ad agencies race to form buying linkups

By GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—Major ad agencies, worried that they need to increase their media-buying clout quickly, are considering the unthinkable: linking up with competitors.

An even bigger shock is that several advertisers appear to be going along with the potential client conflicts such combinations might cause (see story on Page 74). One key source even termed the agency moves to consolidate "client-driven."

Executives at many large agencies and holding companies, including Omnicom Group; Ogilvy Group; Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt; Foote, Cone & Belding Communications; and J. Walter Thompson Co. all say they are exploring media-buying consolidations.

"Everybody's talking to everybody," said Joseph Ostrow, exec VP-worldwide media director at Chicago-based Foote, Cone & Belding.

"The exploration deals more with the efficiency of operations in many cases than it does truly with clout," said Charles Peebler Jr., ceo at BJK&E, New York. "If it's done right, it will probably increase agency profitability and efficiency, while offering clients the same or better service."

Last week, sources said Omnicom and Ogilvy executives were talking about worldwide linkups of the two, including setting up a separate company to handle all global buying. Each company confirmed that talks were being conducted but declined to name who they were talking with.

Saatchi & Saatchi Co., London, has completed an internal study of media centralization and said it may link up with rival agencies in addition to combining the buying operations of its already massive agency units.

One source said a major fear among agencies that work for Procter & Gamble Co. is that Saatchi will put together an efficient media-buying operation for its units and that P&G at some point will consolidate all its buying at Saatchi.

P&G refused to comment on that scenario. "We ask our ad agencies to work constructively with us to understanding our strategies and then to make the most efficient buys possible in the execution of those strategies," a P&G spokeswoman said. "How the agencies organize to achieve that [goal] for us is their business."

Some large agencies or agency groups—including Interpublic Group of Cos. and N W Ayer—said client conflicts and other competitive issues appear to outweigh the benefits of media combinations, particularly in the U.S.

"We're not convinced that being bigger is necessarily buying better," said Marcella Rosen, senior VP-managing director of media services at Ayer.

Philip Geier, Interpublic chairman-ceo, remains wary of creating any semblance of conflict among his holding company's units. For now, he said, worldwide media consolidation isn't in the cards, adding, "I'm not saying it won't happen three to five years from now."

Young & Rubicam, D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles and Grey Advertising are closely monitoring these media developments and may decide to join the fray.

"We're always looking for ways to better serve our clients," said Y&R Chairman Alex Kroll.

There's concern that once agencies link buying units and get clients with competing accounts used to the idea, they can then more easily move into other combination arrangements, including media planning, research and even creative.

"I would be very, very surprised to learn that our major competitors are not involved in similar discussions," said Omnicom Chairman-CEO Allen Rosenshine when confirming his group's interest. "We've clearly and obviously been talking to several potential partners. It's quite a prevalent concern at many agencies."

Kenneth Roman, chairman-ceo of Ogilvy Group, said in a statement that "partner-

Spielvogel, Connors joining Dukakis team

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

Democratic presidential contender Michael Dukakis is putting together a high-power team of ad advisers that includes agency chieftains Carl Spielvogel, Marvin Sloves, Jack Connors and Frank Mingo.

Messrs. Spielvogel, Sloves and Mingo said they committed to work, in a limited fashion, on campaign ads for the Massachusetts governor after they'd been approached by Dukakis aide Tom Kiley.

Sources said Mr. Connors, president-ceo of Boston-based Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, and Mr. Spielvogel, chairman of Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, New York, are advising the campaign on advertising personnel matters, such as who to recruit and how to form an ad team.

Mr. Sloves is chairman of Scali, McCabe, Sloves and Mr. Mingo is chairman of Mingo Group.

Dukakis aide Mr. Kiley initially asked Mr. Spielvogel, who's active in New York Democratic politics, if his agency would be interested in handling the Democratic presidential ad effort. The assignment would have given Backer Spielvogel Bates a good chunk of the estimated $55 million in federal funds that will fuel the Dukakis campaign.

"But I told them there was no way the agency would handle their account," Mr. Spielvogel said. "We don't do political accounts in the U.S.

"I counseled him instead to try to put together a group of people patterned after Reagan's Tuesday Team, and he agreed . . . that cherry-picking the best people is a better idea."

Mr. Spielvogel said he advised the governor's aides to find a "first-class general manager" to oversee an ad team comprising at least two full creative units, in addition to the political ad executives who handled the Dukakis campaign's primary election ad-

NBC rakes in upfront deals

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—The network TV upfront market blasted off last week, with NBC pulling in an easy $600 million in 1988-89 prime-time sales.

The top-ranked network should close in on a record $1.3 billion any time soon, in what has been a surprisingly energetic advance-sales market.

A surge of automotive money from Detroit reportedly is leading to higher prices than expected, although some agency executives disputed that.

Sources said NBC was getting high single-digit increases on costs per thousand last week while CBS was cutting deals at increases of about 6% and ABC was holding out for even higher prices.

Leading the charge was Leo Burnett Co., Chicago, which bought more than $200 million worth of NBC inventory, much of it for McDonald's Corp. and General Motors Corp.

Procter & Gamble Co., the nation's leading TV advertiser, also weighed in with a multi-million-dollar commitment on NBC.

Burnett's buy was believed to be twice what it spent on NBC for the 1987-88 TV season. Young & Rubicam and D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles also are close to completing buys on CBS and NBC.

If last week's buying binge seems like a one-network party, it was. By early Friday, ABC and CBS together had closed less than half the amount of NBC, though American Home Products Corp. reportedly made an unusual multiyear, multidaypart deal with CBS. Neither company would confirm that.

The outlook appears uncertain for second-ranked ABC. Sources said that network's pricing was extremely bullish.

ABC reportedly refused to close anything below 11% price increases, which apparently is why it did so little business last week. Burnett reportedly spurned ABC because of high prices.

"ABC has not been receptive [to lower prices] because they feel they . . . hold a lot of cards, and they do," said one agency executive. "They're saying, 'You can't walk away from us,' and there's some validity to what they're saying."

ABC appears to be waiting for NBC to become heavily sold; at that time, NBC's prices could surge and advertisers would be forced to buy ABC, which thinks the market is larger than its rivals believe.

Observers speculated that NBC opened the market with lower prices to establish a solid base for higher pricing as inventory was depleted.

Despite last week's [illegible] this year's sales aren't expected to m[illegible]st year's $3.1 billion in upfront spend[illegible]

The upfront market has been thrown into confusion by the Writers Guild of America strike, now in its 20th week.

Late last week, the guild approved an interim agreement allowing writers to work for independent production companies that signed the union's pact. But the Big 3 networks insist they won't buy shows coming out of that alliance, and that may prolong the strike that has crippled TV production.

NBC earlier had agreed to air certain ex-

IBM eyes big shops as list shrinks to 6

By JON LAFAYETTE
and GARY LEVIN

Big Blue wants a big shop—and one that knows computers.

That's the message behind IBM Corp.'s decision to meet this week with D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles; Grey Advertising; Lintas:Worldwide; and Wells, Rich, Greene in addition to incumbents Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein and Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners about its $138 million ad account.

In limiting itself to these New York agencies, the giant computer marketer appears to have eliminated all the smaller shops it initially had contacted, as well as DDB Needham Worldwide; Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor; and Scali, McCabe, Sloves.

The agencies in the final review will be given identical briefings and assigned identical projects to complete. IBM didn't provide details about the nature of the project.

The company expects to decide how to split up its account by the end of August.

Industry observers expect Lord Geller and Lord Einstein to keep some IBM work, but also think that at least one of the bigger agencies will get the bulk of the business.

IBM has said little about why it selected these finalists. "We feel that each has potential to meet our current and future advertising needs," a spokeswoman said.

The anointed agencies were told only that they had advanced to the next round of the review, and the time and place of the briefings.

But size and current or past connections to the computer marketer apparently counted.

Camel rides Old Joe

RJR aims new ads at young smokers

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. is updating its Camel and Salem advertising to lure younger smokers away from Marlboro country.

Slick gimmickry in new efforts for both RJR brands is designed to bring back the segment now dominated by Philip Morris Cos., whose share of the youth market (smokers ages 18 to 24) is 65%, compared to RJR's 17%, according to Salomon Bros. analyst Diana Temple.

Much of that younger segment smokes PM's flagship Marlboro, which long has used cowboy imagery in its advertising.

Old Joe, the camel that has symbolized Camel cigarettes for three-quarters of a century, has discovered the fountain of youth in a new campaign breaking later this month.

Ads themed "Smooth character"

Old Joe is up to some new tricks, trying to appeal to younger smokers, in new ads from R.J. Reynolds and McCann-Erickson.

International agencies report on key clients

Who has what accounts where

For this fourth annual Advertising Age report, agencies listed their major multinational clients using the following criteria:

- Accounts must be served in at least three countries as of Dec. 31, 1987.
- The combined client business must total at least $3 million.

Charts don't break down all offices; information about some countries was not included. Additional business is listed in the footnotes following the summaries. An asterisk denotes an agency that included affiliated agencies in its report.

Democratic National Committee Chairman Paul Kirk (c.) introduces the candidates.

Duke's strategy:

2 teams to handle ad needs

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

Delegates to the Democratic convention who are getting ready to nominate Michael Dukakis for president also will be sanctioning perhaps the most unusual image-making structures for a candidate in the party's history.

Four years after the severest thrashing in presidential political history, Democrats are dipping deep into Madison Avenue to fashion an ad team that will include 50 or more people, including some instantly recognizable names from major agencies.

This "Madison Avenue team" resembles the "Tuesday Team" that helped Republican Ronald Reagan in his landslide 1984 re-election drive.

But while the Madison Avenue group plots "big-picture" image advertising, the other half of the Dukakis structure, a "political" team, will be doing quick-response and—if needed—negative ads to address specific issues raised by polling or by the opposition. This political team is made up largely of consultants.

It's this two-team structure that sources say is unusual in the annals of presidential campaigns.

Although Dukakis campaign officials refused to confirm the names, the core of one team is believed to consist of Bill Tragos, chairman, TBWA, New York; Gary Susnjara, president-chief operating officer, Saatchi & Saatchi DFS, North America; Ken Bernhard, former vice chairman, Ogilvy & Mather; and Ted Voss, a Boston ad consultant and formerly Polaroid Corp.'s VP-advertising.

That team will be responsible for what one insider described as the "consumer," or long-term, strategic media that establishes and reinforces the campaign's theme.

Expected to contribute, in varying degrees, to that team's output are Frank Mingo, chairman, Mingo Group, New York; Carl Spielvogel, chairman, Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide; Marvin Sloves and Ed McCabe, chairman and former partner, respectively, of Scali, McCabe, Sloves; Mike Hughes, vice chairman-creative director, the Martin Agency, Richmond, Va.; Roy Spence, president, GSD&M, Austin, Texas; and Tom Amico and Jim Proimos, a copywriting team from Smith Burke & Azzam, Baltimore.

Because the ad team will be made up of people scattered across the country, only its top echelon will be at the Dukakis offices in Boston. The political team also will be headquartered in Boston.

Altogether, this ad team will consume the lion's share of about $50 million in federal funds that will be handed over after Gov. Dukakis officially

Saatchi near U.K. media buying link

By GARY LEVIN
and LAUREL WENTZ

NEW YORK—In a major development for global agencies, Saatchi & Saatchi Co. last week began seeking clients' approval to consolidate all its agencies' U.K. media buying.

At the same time, Young & Rubicam and Foote, Cone & Belding Communications are negotiating their own worldwide media-buying combination, sources said.

These moves come in the face of new opposition to the idea of agency media-buying combinations by big clients such as Philip Morris Cos. and Thomas J. Lipton Inc. (see story on Page 50).

Major agencies continue to pursue media-buying combinations, partly because of fears that Saatchi & Saatchi will do it first and bring the concept to the U.S. Saatchi officials have decided against setting up a similar operation in the U.S. for now.

Saatchi executives in London said they would decide in August, pending client approval, whether to combine U.K. media buying for its three main agencies—Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, BSB Dorland and KHBB.

The three agencies began contacting clients last week to dis-

HHCC's pact to ban merger

By CLEVELAND HORTON
and JON LAFAYETTE

Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos is negotiating a "conflict insurance" pact with Nissan Motor Corp. USA to assure the client that the agency won't merge or sell out for five years.

Nissan recently awarded its estimated $60 million Infiniti account to Hill Holliday.

"We not only have no plans to sell," said Jack Connors, Hill Holliday president-ceo, "but we have given Nissan protection from that for the next five years."

"Nissan wants to be assured that they will not be dropped as the result of a sale or merger," said Jack Sansolo, president of the agency's U.S. division.

"They're not interfering in our business decisions, but are saying, 'If you make such a decision, we don't want to be put in jeopardy.' I think that's a balanced and fair arrangement," he said.

The fine points of the contract were still being worked out last week by the legal departments of both parties.

CBS shakes up broadcast unit

Stringer gets turnaround task

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—Howard Stringer, CBS' new broadcast group president, says he's bringing a new theme to CBS—"creativity."

But Mr. Stringer, 46, will need the creativity of a da Vinci to fix what ails CBS.

Those problems include its worst prime-time ratings performance ever, a clouded sales picture and, perhaps Mr. Stringer's biggest challenge, morale problems.

In the pivotal move of a major shake-up last week, CBS President Laurence Tisch promoted Mr. Stringer, the former CBS News president, and hired David Burke, an exec VP at ABC News, to succeed Mr. Stringer.

Gene Jankowski, who held the broadcast group post for an unprecedented 11 years, was shifted to the newly created, non-operational post of broadcast group chairman.

No one will report to Mr. Jankowski, who in turn will report directly to Mr. Tisch, advising on matters such as company expansion and regulatory issues.

But the key move was promoting Mr. Stringer. The new CBS Broadcast president said he will visit the West Coast in August, where he will seek to improve CBS' relations with the production community.

He flew last Friday to Los Angeles to meet with CBS Entertainment President Kim LeMasters and his staff before heading to Atlanta for the Democratic convention.

"I am more interested in stimulating than meddling with the creative process," Mr. Stringer said.

H. Stringer

According to industry experts, Mr. Stringer is well-suited to his task. "He's a leader," said one executive familiar with Mr. Stringer's style. "He's a multifaceted guy with a lot of energy."

Observers said that Mr. Stringer's style will be critical. "The last time a network was turned around was NBC, and the person who turned it around was Grant Tinker. The way he did it was to let everyone calm down and get to work," said Paine-Webber analyst Alan Gottesman.#

Upfront frenzy might put dent in scatter sales

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—The surprisingly strong prime-time upfront network TV market has left agency executives wondering what will happen in next year's scatter market.

As upfront sales wound down last week, top agency executives claimed the sale was the oddest in recent memory.

Partly because of the uncertainties surrounding the Writers Guild of America strike, many experts had predicted the market would never exceed $2.9 billion. But by the end of last week, upfront sales had already tied last year's $3.1 billion record. And some predicted it could reach $3.2 billion.

The big question now is whether advertisers placed the bulk of their network TV dollars in the upfront market instead of saving it for scatter (or short-term) sales next year. The networks suffered a weak scatter market this year and would like to avoid another one.

"I think there will be a scatter market next year," said Jake Keever, exec VP-sales at ABC, who argued that many advertisers are more optimistic about the economy than last year.

Jerry Dominus, VP-sales, CBS, agreed. "I think there will be a ton of money," he said. Mr. Dominus said the money advertisers spent last year on this year's Olympics—an estimated $800 million—will return to the scatter market next year.

But other sources said they were worried that this year's unexpectedly strong market was aided by low prices, which lured advertisers into committing more money upfront.

Agency sources cited automotive advertisers, which pumped about $550 million into upfront, a 10% increase over last year.

CBS and NBC closed deals at moderate to low price increases. CBS closed at 2% to 6% cost-per-thousand increases while NBC got 5% to 10%. ABC did slightly better with 6% to 10% increases, TV and agency executives said. Last year's increases were in the high double digits.

NBC sold about $1.3 billion worth of time, CBS sold about $900 million to $1 billion and ABC about $800 million to $850 million, sources said.

The total prime-time market was virtually completed by July 13.

Daytime, late-night and news sales also started to heat up last week. Sources said daytime sales would hit about $1 billion this year, down about $200 million from two years ago.#

IBM test puts shops on line

By JON LAFAYETTE
and GARY LEVIN

IBM Corp. has handed six agencies competing for its account a daunting task: create in a month an IBM corporate campaign and ads for its troubled personal computer line.

IBM last week briefed New York agencies D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, Grey Advertising, Lintas: Worldwide and Wells, Rich, Greene, plus incumbents Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein and Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners. The computer giant is deciding how to divide its $138 million account.

IBM gave the agencies "very little specific direction," one agency executive said. Said another: "They gave us the bare bones. They revealed no secrets."

The agencies believe they've been given wide latitude so that IBM can evaluate their strategic thinking.

At the briefings, IBM explained its image advertising should present the company as an innovator and good corporate citizen. The product assignment, primarily for the PS/2 personal computer, should focus on desktop publishing.

The agencies are free to decide on how to link the two campaigns. They're expected to provide "rough creative" plus "media approaches."

IBM has asked that the projects be completed by the week of Aug. 15.

Soon after it hands in its project, Lord Einstein will find out whether it will even be allowed to accept business from IBM. Lord Einstein is still under a temporary injunction that prohibits it from accepting any more IBM business.

Last week, acting New York state Supreme Court Judge Herman Cahn, after being asked by Lord Einstein for clarification of an interim ruling, said, "Lord Einstein may take part in the IBM competition, including making presentations of projects which will be assigned by IBM. The above does not change the underlying temporary restraining order. . . . A formal decision will be issued in due course."

That ruling is expected after Judge Cahn returns from vacation on Aug. 22.

The lawsuit was filed in March by Lord Geller parent WPP Group against Lord Einstein and Young & Rubicam, which backed the agency created by six former Lord Geller executives.

The suit asks that Lord Einstein be enjoined from accepting business from Lord Geller accounts, especially IBM, and be prevented from hiring any more Lord Geller staffers.

Both sides recently filed briefs on whether Lord Einstein should continue to be barred from accepting business from Lord Geller clients.

Sources familiar with the briefs, which haven't been made public, said WPP focused on claims that the six former Lord Geller executives violated their fiduciary obligations by resigning, planning beforehand to start a new agency and accepting Lord Geller employees and clients.

The sources said WPP toned down earlier allegations that clients were presolicited and that the executives tried to sabotage the agency to force WPP to sell it to them.

The brief by Lord Einstein and Y&R, sources said, claimed that the executives didn't violate the law through their actions. Because the executives had no contracts, they had no obligations under New York law to WPP once they resigned, the defendants argued.#

Retailer struggles to make fashion statement

Editor's note: Last week Crain's Chicago Business, a sister publication of ADVERTISING AGE, analyzed the problems at Sears, Roebuck & Co., the world's biggest retailer. CCB contended that many Wall Street analysts and others think a breakup of Sears would be hugely profitable. One problem these analysts cite is Sears' sputtering efforts to carve a niche in apparel, and that portion of the CCB story follows.

By DAVID SNYDER
and PETER D. WALDSTEIN
Crain News Service

At the brightly lit Sears, Roebuck & Co. store in Atlanta's Cumberland Mall, a clothing shopper becomes immersed in a sea of items bearing the names of Cheryl Tiegs, Stefanie Powers and Yvonne Goolagong—faded celebrities who have represented Sears' private-label women's fashion merchandise for nearly 10 years.

Don't look for the hottest designer labels. Liz Claiborne is a no-show. So are Calvin Klein, Adrienne Vittadini and virtually all the popular designers who are fashioning moderate-price apparel in easy-care fabrics.

That's because the big names in the fashion business—with rare exceptions, the most notable of which is Levi Strauss & Co.—refuse to sell to Sears. They're afraid of tarnishing their own fashion images.

"A few key national brands would really lend some acceptability and credibility to the whole mix," says Sears Merchandise Group CEO Michael Bozic, 47. "We think people maybe would give us a try. We pay our bills on time. We're going to continue to work on some of that where it's appropriate."

Sears fails to move

The problem shows how far Sears must go to establish any kind of authority in apparel. Once driven by price and value, the mass-market clothing business today rides on status and style. But Sears has failed to move with the industry.

By several measures, Sears' fashion apparel business is sick. In 1979, 14% of Chicago women surveyed in a fashion research project said they shopped most often at Sears for fashion apparel. By last year, that number had dropped to 4%.

"Right now, Sears is competing with downscale discounters among older, fashion-averse customers shopping for commodity items," says Douglas J. Tigert, a professor of retail marketing at Babson College in Massachusetts and leader of the research project. "Sears either has to get out of that end of the market or strengthen it."

Similarly, when asked to name the best place to buy men's dress shirts, only 13.3% of respondents surveyed by Leo J. Shapiro & Associates, a consumer research company, spontaneously mention Sears. That number falls to 10% for jeans and drops to 1.3% for dress blouses. Only 0.4% of respondents think Sears women's clothing is the best available anywhere.

That doesn't mean Sears isn't big in apparel. Last year, the company sold $4.3 billion of men's, women's and children's clothing, not including catalog sales, according to company documents.

Sears does, in fact, sell basics by the truckload—"tonnage items" as Mr. Bozic likes to call them. These include panties, pantyhose, robes and even jeans and activewear.

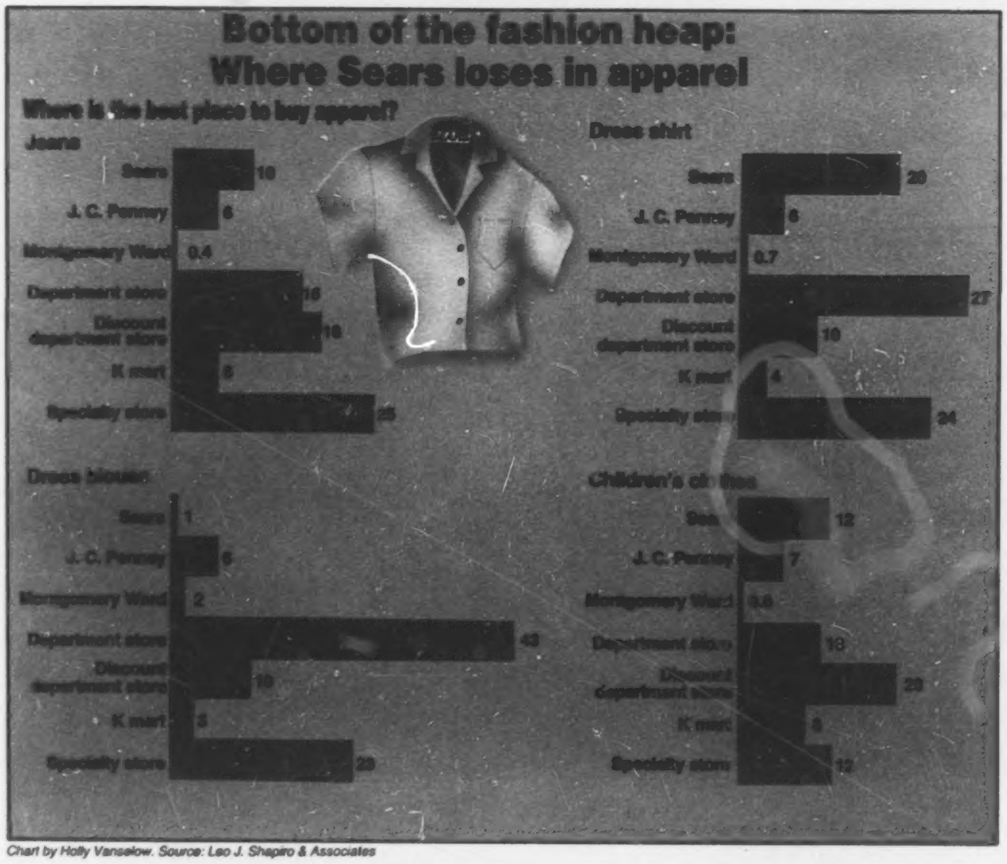

Chart by Holly Vanselow. Source: Leo J. Shapiro & Associates

But that emphasis on quantity belies Mr. Bozic's uneasiness with the quality of Sears' image in the marketplace. For fashion apparel—and today, that includes sports clothes as well as one-of-a-kind evening gowns—sends the clearest message to the market about whom a store wants to serve.

If customers don't see their lifestyles reflected in clothing and store displays, the store strikes out.

For Sears, the problem is compounded by the enormous amount of floor space devoted to apparel in its 819 stores.

A typical multiline Sears store ranges in size from 140,000 to 214,000 square feet, only half of which is selling space, usually divided between two floors. Apparel often takes two-thirds of one floor. Without exciting fashion merchandise to draw shoppers to that space, the productivity of the entire store lags, notwithstanding the strong performance of certain basic items.

But Sears can't readily use the space for other purposes. Apparel affords Sears—and all other general merchants—the highest profit margins of any products carried. Apparel turns over more quickly than big-ticket hard goods and costs relatively little to stock and display.

"The rock-bottom reason for staying in apparel is there's a helluva lot of floor space," says Jay Levine, an independent retail consultant and formerly Sears' chief economist. "You can only use so much space for hard goods. They won't give up soft goods unless they give up the stores or sublease the space to someone else."

Department stores in the past decade all have faced the same problem: too much floor space and not enough productivity. To survive, successful department stores learned from the specialists how to offer theater and value.

Publicly, Mr. Bozic fends off comparisons between Sears' dowdy apparel business and the glitz of department and specialty stores.

"We are what we are," he says. "When you get down to the kinds of goods that people believe require some status or theater, then that's not us. But in terms of the kinds of things that are more quality and value-oriented, then that is us."

But behind the scenes, Mr. Bozic has set in motion an effort to make Sears a hip fashion retailer in its own right.

On the fourth floor of the retailer's Visual Merchandising Laboratory, a prototype apparel department is taking shape.

In a part of the experimental retailing laboratory known as Mainframe, a shop for teens, ceiling-mounted TV screens pump out rock videos above black-and-chrome high-tech racks filled with leather and patchwork clothing.

A pilot, stand-alone Mainframe store already is being tested in the lobby of Sears Tower in Chicago.

In Apostrophe, Sears' department for fashionable sportswear, mannequins wear combinations of tasteful clothing and accessories to display several possible looks. The clothing racks themselves look sharp, devoid of the cardboard "Sale" signs found throughout Sears stores.

In Carriage Court, the department for Sears' traditional female customer, a creative display of cable-knit sweaters set against a backdrop of wooden crates and burlap wallpaper makes an appealing autumn fashion statement, the kind one would expect to find in any of a dozen leading clothing stores.

Throughout all the departments, the goods contain a higher percentage of natural fibers than customers have ever found in Sears stores.

If Sears could install its new apparel displays in all 819 stores three months from now, it could grab headlines as a rejuvenated source for fashionable, affordable casual clothing.

But the retailer isn't likely to get those looks into all its stores even three years from now.

Disincentives built into Sears' cost-accounting system compel local store managers to pay for store improvements out of their own profit-and-loss statements. Those expenses pose additional hurdles as the managers, burdened by local slow-growth retail conditions, strive to meet the earnings targets set by corporate headquarters.

In women's apparel, Sears wants its managers to improve gross profits this year by 9%, confidential internal documents show. And in men's and children's apparel, gross profit targets have been set at nearly 10%.

"There's an affordability question here that I can't broad-brush," says Vern L. Page, until recently VP-women's apparel and the man behind the Visual Merchandizing Laboratory. Last month, Mr. Page, 57, was named to the new position of VP-catalog merchandising.

Strides made in merchandise

"The [store's] physical environment is significant," he said. "But 10 times as significant are the strides we've made in the merchandise focus. And the goods are in the stores today."

Indeed, the goods being tested in the lab are stylish, though their tastefulness easily could pale in a run-of-the-mill setting.

In the past year, Sears has taken other significant strides to update the look of its clothing.

Most notable is the much-touted agreement with McDonald's Corp. to market a line of McKids children's clothes.

The apparel creates a strong presence in Sears' better stores, where bright kiosks composed of McDonaldland characters and videogames draw kids' attention to the merchandise. Sears hopes to sell $175 million of the goods this year, according to the internal documents.

"McKids is very successful," says a competing clothing retailer in Atlanta who asked not to be named. "McKids represents the kind of thing Sears can do that no one else can do."

Indeed, few retailers have sufficient distribution, finances and public acceptance to strike such a far-reaching marketing alliance with the world's most popular fast-food chain.

Yet even Sears may not have what it takes to harvest the potential of McKids.

McDonald's, hesitant to license its name to any outside company, is holding up approval of a national rollout of free standing McKids stores. Also, the two companies have yet to decide how to split profits from sales of the clothing in those stores.

Says Jack M. Greenberg, McDonald's exec VP-chief financial officer: "We have given permission for nothing beyond what Sears is doing right now."

Sears is gradually remaking its big catalog—Page 26

Another effort to crank up the apparel business rests on the major restructuring of Sears' buying organization, announced last March. Mr. Bozic wants to slash the bloated staff by as much as 50% to reduce the dozens of layers of bureaucrats through which purchase decisions now percolate.

"The fact is the buyers are underworked," says one recently departed senior merchant who requested anonymity.

Sears today has 25 buying departments—down from more than 40 a decade ago—each with a national merchandise manager who oversees senior buyers, buyers and assistant buyers assigned to one of 138 distinct product categories.

Sears once prided itself on the depth of its buying organization; it had merchants who specialized in nothing but men's cotton low-rise briefs. Cost and time constraints are relegating that system to the clearance rack.

"Specialization went too far," says the former buying executive. "These people can buy more than one line. Now, they'll be busy, but they're paid well."

The reorganization, like the redesign of women's apparel, ideally should be in place today. But it isn't likely to be completed any time soon.

Sears' specialty store strategy, launched last year, is testing the concept of buying existing apparel chains and letting them operate under their own names.

The first such test involves Pinstripe Petites, a 25-store chain of working women's boutiques based in Minnesota.

But Sears will need a much larger operation than Pinstripe Petites to significantly affect the bottom line. If one could be had, a chain selling moderate-price men's dress clothing would make an attractive acquisition, since Sears concedes it does poorly in that category.

"It's a possibility," Mr. Bozic says.#

Advertisers harbor island ad skepticism

Despite the leap made by National Car Rental, the center of attention in daily newspaper financial page mostly draws local ad buys

By Ira Teinowitz

The newly created island in the sea of ad placements is showing slow growth as a port of call for national advertisers.

Four months after the Newspaper Advertising Bureau proclaimed island advertising in financial pages as a major new weapon to stem the continuing decline in newspapers' national advertising share, local or regional advertisers appear to be doing the bulk of the island buying.

Aside from National Car Rental—the only national advertiser to make extensive use of the position, with $2 million worth of ads in 21 newspapers in 20 major markets—local or regional car dealers, banks, stockbrokers and even department stores are proving the mainstays of island ad spending. However, some of those advertisers are dealers' groups or offices of national companies, many of which are watching results.

Industry observers say it's too soon to tell whether the island position will remain primarily a local buy or will attract more national advertisers.

"How long did it take cable to get where it is today?" asks James Dunaway, VP-director of information for the bureau, whose Future of Advertising task force developed the recommendation calling for greater use of island advertising. "We are in this for the long range. Media changes aren't something that happen overnight."

In recent years, newspapers have had big problems attracting national advertising. While dollar revenues have increased, newspapers' share of national advertising shrank from 16% in 1950 to 11% ten years later, 8% in 1970 and by last year had plummeted to 6%, or $3.6 billion of the $60.6 billion advertising market, according to the newspaper bureau and McCann-Erickson Worldwide estimates.

Seeing the unusual financial pages positioning as a hot property for its upscale cars, Jaguar is using an island ad in selected U.S. markets.

To help bolster that figure, the bureau generated support for island advertising adoption among the nation's daily newspapers. In March, it announced that more than 215 newspapers had agreed to break longstanding tradition against selling island ads by offering the ad space surrounded on all sides by stock listings, with the one-quarter or one-third page ad guaranteed to be the only one on the page. At last count, 242 newspapers with a combined circulation of 22 million were offering the space.

More recently, the newspaper group worked out a 13-week national ad campaign for American Express Travelers Cheques.

In the $1 million campaign, 13 major newspapers, including the Chicago Sun-Times, The New York Times and The Washington Post, will run the same ad on either the bottom of Thursday's weather page or the adjacent page.

Jaguar Cars, BMW of North America and Prudential-Bache Securities have used financial page island ads in several markets for local or regional concerns. "We've been using it for some of our dealer group ads," says Barry Wood, senior account exec for Ammirati & Puris, Dallas, which placed ads for BMW's dealer groups in Denver, Houston and Fort Worth. "We like it because our ad is frequently the only advertisement in three or four pages."

One Rate. No Debate.

No matter how big your ad budget, how small your account, how fat your franchise, or how regional your retail, New Jersey's one-two combination—The Record and The News Tribune—guarantees one low rate for all advertisers whether national, retail, or co-op. This means you're able to reach the only two markets in New Jersey with median household EBI's in the nation's top 10, for just the agency commission over local rates.

While many newspapers continue to charge national advertisers a premium of up to 150 percent above local rates, The Record and The News Tribune eliminate the national and local rate differential, and also offer you contract options at all levels. So now, your advertising message in The Record and The News Tribune can reach an audience of fashionable and affluent big spenders for small change.

Reach across the Hudson to the head and heart of New Jersey...where residents wield a combined disposable income of over $32 billion. is using but says the company has bought island positions in many of its market areas. "It seemed as though this was a hot property for cars and when it was made available, we jumped on the bandwagon."

Early on, National Car Rental made its commitment to the island position. "We had talked to the Newspaper Advertising Bureau and they had originally talked about double-truck ads," says Bob Zach, VP-media director for Chiat/Day, New York, National's agency. "But we wanted something that was affordable on a continuing basis, not a blockbuster that we couldn't sustain. They came back with the island concept." The FOA's recommendation preceded the bureau's discussions with National, but National's quick interest helped propel newspapers into action.

National had been looking for an innovative way to announce its new Emerald Aisle counterless express rental program at several airports. "It was a perfect fit. Our target was the business market and stocks are certainly a place businessmen look," says Mr. Zach. National ads featuring the Emerald Aisle service broke March 17.

Cindy Hale, VP-marketing for Minneapolis-based National, says the company has been pleased with the results, but doesn't know whether individual rentals resulted from newspaper ads or other advertising. National will drop the ads this summer and resume its schedule in the fall when Emerald Aisle service is expanded to Los Angeles and additional cities.

What started out as a double-truck ad turned into an island for National Car Rental.

With no major national advertiser following National Car Rental's enthusiasm, it has been up to individual newspapers to sell the ads. The results have varied considerably.

"It certainly hasn't set the world on fire," says Jerry Ulrich, assistant sales manager for national sales of the San Jose Mercury-News. He says the only advertiser that has bought space so far is a financial institution.

Meanwhile in Dallas, Hartford, Conn., Houston, Los Angeles, Miami and Phoenix, newspapers report sales so heavy they are beginning to look at other possible island sites ranging from additional stock pages to islands on weather, TV, travel or comics pages.

"It's working wonderfully well," says John Naughton, general advertising manager for Phoenix's The Arizona Republic, which charges local advertisers a premium of up to 20% above local rates for the page. "We are virtually sold out."

Jim Currow, director of advertising for The Miami Herald, says the paper has sold ads to Florida Power & Light Co., Prudential-Bache Securities and Value Line. It also has had some interest from local banks, although local advertisers have to pay national rates—a 100% premium in Miami—for the page.

At the Los Angeles Times, Home Federal Savings & Loan Assn. and Nordstrom Inc. have joined National Car Rental in buying island ads with long-term commitments.

Bill A. Williams, assistant to The Hartford Courant Editor and Publisher Michael J. Davies, has been tracking the ads' success since Mr. Davies headed the NAB's Future of Advertising committee. "We've had no negative reaction and have picked up a couple of advertisers," Mr. Williams says.

Newspapers had expressed some concern the ads might generate reader complaints. But those that have run the island ads report surprisingly little reaction from readers.

"We had three or four calls the first week and didn't have any the second," says Jack Loftus, editor of the Houston Chronicle. "We've had 300 calls or letters for dropping a comic strip. I have to assume the readers totally accepted this."

The lack of complaints and the prospect of additional revenues have prompted several major newspapers to join the program since its inception, among them, Newsday and the New York Post. The Record of Hackensack, N.J., also began accepting the ads when it shifted to a.m. publication in May.

The Chicago Tribune, The New York Times, and The Wall Street Journal however, have refused the ads.

Nancy Nielsen, director of corporate relations and public affairs for the Times, says the paper views the ads as disruptive to readers and possibly not serving advertisers well. The Times, however, did create an alternative position under the stock tables.

At The Wall Street Journal, Charles Stabler, deputy director of corporate relations for Dow Jones Co., the paper's owner, says, "For years we have tried to make The Wall Street Journal a comfortable place for readers and advertisers. That means we don't accept sensational layouts or things that would be distracting. [Island ads] wouldn't fit the kind of atmosphere we want." ■

Spanish Eyes. Fabulous Figures. Affluent Readers.

In Miami, Diario Las Américas delivers it all. Diario is the one completely Spanish-language daily newspaper that's as much a part of everyday life in the Miami Hispanic Market as Cuban coffee, arroz con pollo and The Miami Sound Machine.

Diario's Spanish eyes generate figures that will open your eyes to a great media buy. The average annual family income of Diario readers is $30,318. 65% own their own homes. 94.7% of Diario reader households own one or more cars. 63.5% own two or more cars. 74.5% have major credit cards.

The average annual food expenditure of Diario reader households is $4,609. With plenty of discretionary income for liquor, cars, travel and other products and services.

The wealthiest part of an 8-billion-dollar market. Of all the Spanish-language media in the Miami Hispanic Market, Diario Las Américas is the one that reaches the heart and soul, the movers, the shakers and opinion makers of its 8-billion-dollar market.

cludes local sports scores, an arts calendar, concert line, running events, and an activity guide for senior citizens.

Mr. Haring says some of Cityline's early advertisers dropped the service because "They didn't know how to use it. And frankly neither did we," He says a few of them ran the same commercials for months, as they would for radio, "but when people call every day, commercials wear out in a hurry." Advertisers now are advised to change their messages frequently.

One current Cityline advertiser, the Tulsa City-County Health Department, is using the system to disseminate information about AIDS. Glenn Burnett, chief of the department's Health Information and Education division, says sponsorship of the AIDS hotline costs $150 a month and generates about 300 calls a week.

"We consider that a very good investment," he says. The department produces a new 90-second message each week, which answers common questions about AIDS and invites callers to contact the department with questions.

Kyle Getz, communications services manager of The Seattle Times, says InfoLine has only a handful of ad sponsors, but he expects activity to pick up now that the company has added a staffer to manage and sell ads for the service.

He says InfoLine should benefit from having its own ad rep because it requires "more aggressive tactics" than newspaper ad sales. "It's a different concept. It can't necessarily be sold on a cost-per-thousand basis," he says, "but it reaches some highly targeted audiences—and the medium does deliver."

Ms. Farley says the phone system can cost from $35,000 to $200,000 to install, and estimates that most newspapers spend $3,000 to $5,000 per month on programming and staffing. She says that ad rates, which vary according to market, probably range from a low of $100 per month on low-usage lines to as high as $3,000 for the most popular ones.

Most observers agree the Gazette represents one of the industry's best success stories. The Gazette's Cityline has about 30 advertisers currently in the sponsorship lineup, including a pro shop for the golf category, theaters for the movie guide, banks and brokers for StockQuote, travel agencies sponsoring travel reports, and an Amoco station advertising on the race track report.

The paper has a separate sales rep to sell the service, and it produces ads without charge to encourage advertisers to keep their copy fresh.

Mr. Larson says user support still outpaces ad support, "but it's a new industry, and part of the challenge is shaking the dollars loose so people can test this. It takes time to win acceptance." He hopes the Gazette's Cityline, which debuted in April 1987, will break even within its first two years.

While most newspaper officials would like their call-in services to generate enough ad revenues to be profitable, they say the system has other benefits.

For example, it serves as an on-going tool for self-promotion, it can be used to conduct call-in surveys, and it helps cut down on the volume of extraneous calls to the news room.

These newspapers are operating call-in information systems similar to those in Cedar Rapids, Seattle and Tulsa: The Baltimore Sun; Daily Camera of Boulder, Colo.; The News Times of Danbury, Conn.; The Joplin (Mo.) Globe; Midland (Texas) Reporter-Telegram; The Providence (R.I.) Journal-Bulletin; and The Oakland Press of Pontiac, Mich. ■

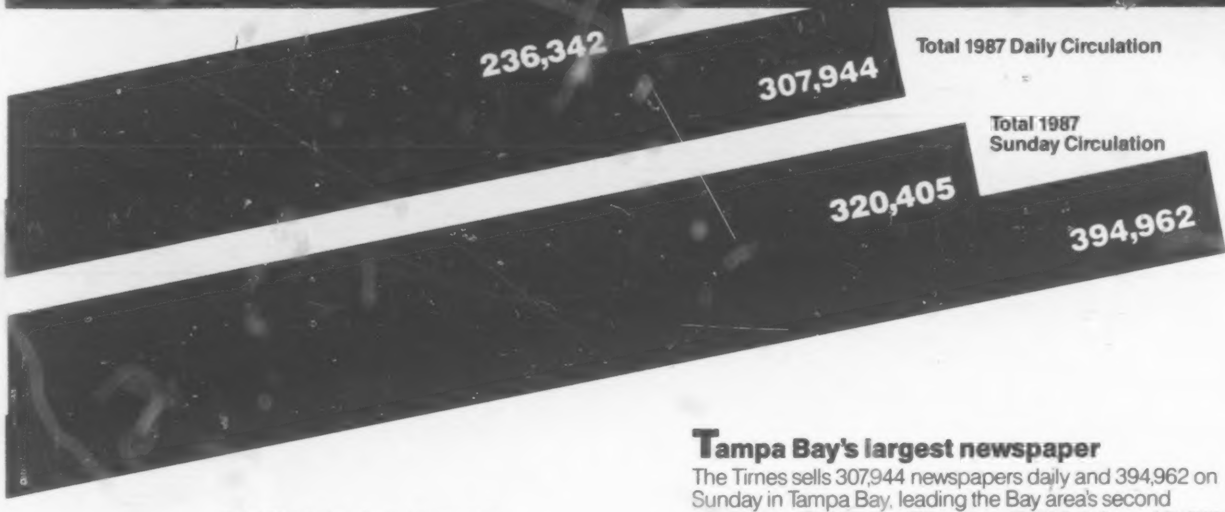
TO REACH TAMPA BAY, YOU NEED TO BUY...



Tampa Bay's largest newspaper
The Times sells 307,944 newspapers daily and 394,962 on Sunday in Tampa Bay, leading the Bay area's second newspaper, The Tampa Tribune, by 71,602 daily and 74,557 on Sunday.

Tampa Bay's fastest-growing newspaper
The Times continues to gain more new readers every year than any other Bay area newspaper. In 1987, the Times gained 22,395 new daily subscribers and 21,932 new Sunday subscribers. More new readers choose Tampa Bay's only Pulitzer Prize-winning newspaper — the St. Petersburg Times.

Tampa Bay's metro newspaper
In the 4-county Tampa Bay metro area (Pinellas, Hillsborough, Pasco and Hernando counties), the Times' daily circulation is 295,627, leading the Tribune's 188,112 by 57 percent. On Sunday, the Times' metro circulation is 375,788, leading the Tribune's 258,056 by 45 percent. And 99 percent of the Times' growth is in the 4-county metro area. Almost half of the Tribune's daily gain (44 percent) is in 26 counties outside the metro area.

Joseph Antonini is shaking up retailing with his drive to bring K mart upmarket.

K mart's Antonini moves far beyond retail 'junk' image

By PATRICIA STRNAD

TROY, MICH.—When K mart Corp. CEO Joseph Antonini makes a marketing move, it's generally a big one.

His latest is gutting a 150-year-old Connecticut farmhouse owned by Martha Stewart, ad spokeswoman and consultant for K mart's home fashions division, and redecorating it with K mart products for a new ad campaign.

That move—big, bold, unusual—is typical of Mr. Antonini, 47, who's shaking up the retail business with his drive to bring K mart upmarket without forsaking the chain's discount image.

In the new K mart commercials, Ms. Stewart will do much of the renovation herself as well as pick out the decorations and furnishings. She also will endorse K mart merchandise in a multimedia how-to campaign that starts early next year.

"Marketing is so much more important to retailers today than five years ago," said Mr. Antonini, who also serves as president and chairman. "After all, if you're not going to have a program that is more or less consumer-driven, then what do you have? You really have just a bunch of items you're hoping somebody will buy."

For retailers, times have rarely been tougher. Customer loyalty is a thing of the past. Discount stores, specialty stores and hypermarkets are taking the edge away from general department stores, which are beginning to look like anachronisms. No. 1 retailer Sears, Roebuck & Co., for example, is having huge problems generating excitement.

But K mart is coming through this environment stronger than ever, and the credit is going to Mr. Antonini. Although he became chairman, president and ceo only last October, he's widely acknowledged to have played a crucial role as the strategist in boosting K mart sales to $25.6 billion in 1987, up 7.6% from 1986. That puts K mart only $2.5 billion behind Sears.

Most important, Mr. Antonini has helped modify K mart's image. The chain

New Mazda marketing team challenges FCB's future role

IRVINE, CALIF.—A new marketing team at Mazda Motor of America has put Foote, Cone & Belding, the agency handling its $157 million account, on notice.

"I sent the message to our own people as well as our vendors and agency people that the status quo is no good anymore," said George McCabe, Mazda's group VP-deputy general manager, marketing and sales. "It's all tied into the new direction at Mazda."

A recent shake-up at the automaker prompted a sudden top-level change at FCB.

Welton Mansfield, 58, exec VP-general manager of FCB's Santa Ana office, has been stripped of his responsibilities for Mazda's U.S. marketing efforts. Thomas F. Randolph, chairman of FCB's western operation, San Francisco, will take over the Santa Ana office until Mr. Mansfield's successor is hired.

When Mazda merged its U.S. operations on July 1 (AA, June 20), it created an all-new marketing staff with few if any ties to FCB. That team is now led by Mr. McCabe, who previously had been VP-operations for Mazda Motors of America (East). Jan Thompson, who recently joined the company as VP-advertising, came from Toyota's Lexus divi-

Miller Lite hunts for new creative

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Miller Brewing Co. President-CEO Leonard Goldstein is re-evaluating one of the nation's largest, longest-running, best-known and best-liked ad campaigns.

Fulfilling his vow to review all aspects of the brewer's operations, Mr. Goldstein has asked to hear fresh creative alternatives to the 15-year-old, $75 million campaign for flagship Miller Lite.

The campaign, handled by Backer Spielvogel Bates, uses former athletes and the tagline "Less filling. Tastes great."

The only agencies asked for their creative suggestions are Miller's current shops: BSB, New York (which also handles Genuine Draft, additional smaller brands and all media buying); J. Walter Thompson USA's New York (High Life) and Chicago (Lowenbrau) offices; and Leo Burnett USA, Chicago (new products, including Lite Genuine Draft now in test).

"This is not an agency review, nor does it mean we are changing our existing award-winning campaign for the Lite brand," said Susan Henderson, a Miller public relations manager. "We simply want to be able to tap into the best thinking at these different firms."

Asked whether Miller would consider switching Lite to JWT or Burnett, Alan Easton, Miller VP-public affairs, would say only "we will cross that bridge when we come to it.

"It ain't broke and it's not tired, but clearly this campaign is 15 years old and nobody in the beer business has ever had a campaign for 15 years," Mr. Easton said. "The challenge of keeping it fresh gets larger and larger

Bud Light ad turns off DDB Needham

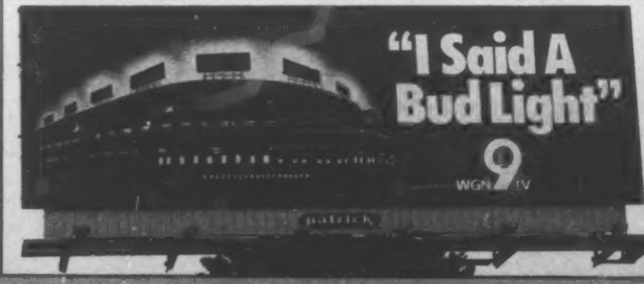
CHICAGO—The lights are up at Wrigley Field, and so's the dander at DDB Needham Worldwide.

Here's why: Two outdoor boards have gone up for the Chicago Cubs' first night game Aug. 8, and they depict a well-lit Wrigley Field and the words "I said a Bud Light."

Another DDB Needham ad, right? Nope. The boards also carry the logo of WGN-TV, the superstation that broadcasts Cubs games and which, like the team, is owned by Tribune Co.

The ads were created by WGN agency Eisaman, Johns & Laws rather than Bud Light agency DDB Needham. The station's joint promotion contract with Cubs sponsor Anheuser-Busch requires it to use the brewer's beers in some ads.

DDB Needham isn't pleased. It created the "I said a Bud Light" theme and campaign but was never consulted before WGN's signs went up. Needham says it "noticed" the outdoor boards but frostily refers all questions about them to A-B or WGN.#



Kellogg pours out more new cereals

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

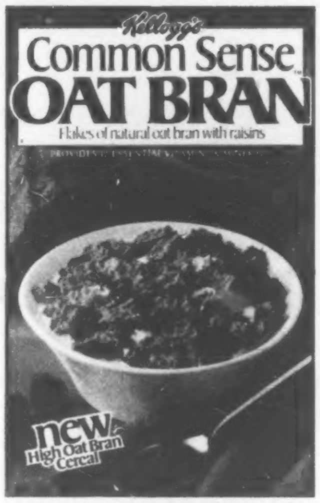
Kellogg Co. will spend $50 million to launch three new cereals this fall, undeterred by drought or retailers' already-bursting shelves.

The introduction of S.W. Graham, Common Sense Oat Bran and Nut & Honey Crunch Biscuits are part of Kellogg's plan to continually exert pressure on its weaker competitors.

That strategy has paid off richly for Kellogg. The cereal company's market share jumped to 41.8% from January through May, up from 41.1% in 1987. Four of its five major competitors—with Quaker Oats Co. the exception—saw market share drop during the same period.

"They think they can hit the 50% share mark—and it's likely they'll do it in the next few years," said Timothy Ramey, industry analyst with County Securities.

"Only General Mills can keep up with Kellogg; they are the only two companies with their livelihood vested in cereals," Mr. Ramey said. "Because of that, General Foods [Corp.], Quaker and Ralston [Purina Co.] never will have the same commitment to spend on new products, nor the determination to make them work."



Kellogg's Common Sense Oat Bran, rolling out this fall, is targeted to health-conscious adults.

With its 1988 new-product total now at six, Kellogg is making good on Chairman William LaMothe's promise to maintain its flow of new entries—despite the national drought affecting grain supplies and prices.

Its three newest cereals are aimed at health-conscious consumers.

- S.W. Graham, made from whole-wheat graham flour, is a biscuit-shaped cereal that comes in regular and honey flavors. It's named after 19th century clergyman and health enthusiast Sylvester W. Graham, inventor of the graham cracker.

Kellogg is telling retail buyers that S.W. Graham will receive heavier marketing support than Mueslix, the European-style premium cereal introduced a year ago with a $33 million campaign.

- Common Sense Oat Bran, available with and without raisins, is positioned to be part of consumers' low-fat, low-cholesterol diets.
- Nut & Honey Crunch Biscuits is an all-family line extension made from whole wheat and nuts.

The introductions are good news for Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, which will handle all three cereals. Separate TV and print campaigns are scheduled for each, with the Nut & Honey Crunch Biscuits effort breaking in September and the other two in October.

Lintas, Hakuhodo ponder problems at joint venture

By JULIE SKUR HILL

Lintas:Worldwide and Hakuhodo are taking a second look at their unusual cross-cultural joint venture—Lintas:Hakuhodo.

The joint venture was created in July 1987 to handle Japanese clients in the U.S. and multinationals in Japan. Hakuhodo is the second-largest agency in Japan and last year had billings of $2.8 billion.

The main problem is Lintas:Hakuhodo's slow-growing New York office. Some sources say the office, with about $12 million in billings, is destined to close, but agency President Gerry Miller denied the rumor.

The New York office is largely dependent on JVC Corp., which provides billings of up to $5 million, sources said. The agency had hoped to attract such Japanese clients as NEC Corp. and Canon, but that hasn't happened.

Executives from both parents who oversee the joint venture are assessing the venture's development and may make recommendations for improvements, a source said. The findings will be discussed in September at one of the regular meetings between top executives from both companies, the source added.

Apparently unaffected is the joint venture's Tokyo office, which has $60 million to $70 million in billings, with Unilever a major client.

Sources in the U.S. and Japan blame potential client conflicts with the parent companies for the New York office's difficulty in gaining new business—an all too familiar problem in Japanese-U.S. ventures.

"Because of Lintas' Unilever business, that wipes out [the joint venture's] chance at getting Kao or any Japanese package-goods company," a competitor said. "They probably can't get car business because of [Lintas parent] Interpublic's arrangement with General Motors."

Sources said Hakuhodo officials were surprised at the huge problem stemming from client conflicts.

One source said Lintas and Hakuhodo have many projects in the works and that both agencies are committed to maintaining a relationship. But each project depends on market conditions, the source said.

The New York office's problem is that it hasn't developed a "critical mass," the source said.

Another problem may be differences in outlook between U.S. and Japanese executives. Hakuhodo sees the joint venture as a long-term project, while more bottom-line-minded executives at Interpublic Group of Cos. may want to see results faster.

The good news is that the agencies still may open Lintas:Hakuhodo offices in Los Angeles and London, Mr. Miller said. Details, such as location, are being hammered out in California, while an announcement about a U.K. office is expected in about threemonths.#

U.S. unit to close?

Control of AGB may shift in U.K.

LONDON—AGB Research halted trading on its stock here last week, and sources speculate that control of the company will shift to an outdoor advertising and financial services company, MAI, which could shut down AGB's troubled U.S. unit.

MAI, which initially helped finance AGB's U.S. venture, reportedly is planning to sell to AGB its Mediamark Research unit in the U.S., and in return boost its stake in AGB from 9% to about 30%. Clive Hollick, managing director of MAI, would assume a top executive post at AGB.

These moves are seen as paving the way for a shutdown of the AGB Television Research unit if it's unable to sell its services to the three major U.S. TV networks.

Only CBS took the service last year, and none of the three have yet signed AGB for the next season.

AGB has been fighting with A.C. Nielsen Co. for a foothold in the U.S. TV ratings business. Its latest setback was the resignation of Barry Kaplan, VP-sales and marketing for the U.S. unit (AA, July 18).

In New York, Dave Poltrack, VP-marketing at CBS, said the network likely would decide on a new contract by the end of the month.

He said a link with MAI's Mediamark service would enhance AGB's potential, since it could evolve into a single-source service combining ratings and purchasing data.

ABC said it's still in discussions with AGB. At NBC, Bill Rubens, VP-research, said the network has never wanted two services but that it has "kept the door open a bit."

Analysts here blame AGB Chairman Sir Bernard Audley for taking on Nielsen in a high-risk U.S. situation. However they don't expect him to get into deep trouble since he's on the boards of both AGB and MAI.

Analysts say MAI wants to raise media activities to 50% from the current 30% of its operations. According to its 1987 annual report, MAI bought a 26% share in AGB's U.S. TV unit, investing $6 million.

MAI reported revenues of $478 million for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1987. For the half-year ended Dec. 31, 1987 (the most recent results), saleswere $241.2 million.

New York-based Mediamark is 80% owned by MAI. It operates a syndicated product research service covering advertising exposure and product purchase data.

In additionto AGB Television Research, AGBs U.S. properties include NFO Research, Greenwich, Conn., which operates a national fixed-mail panel.#

Shift in ad recall

Coke, Sears make waves in top 10

By SCOTT HUME

Results from the June adWatch survey of advertising awareness contain two surprises: Coca-Cola jumped into the lead and Sears, Roebuck & Co. hit the top 10.

Coca-Cola was the best-recalled advertising in the country last month, displacing rival Pepsi-Cola, which had held the No. 1 position for the previous two months.

Top-of-mind awareness of Pepsi-Cola's advertising hardly evaporated, however. It placed a close second in June, the spot Coca-Cola had held in May.

Emblematic of the seesaw battle for supremacy that the two soft-drink brands have waged was Pepsi-Cola's victory when the survey's respondents were asked specifically which soft-drink advertising they recalled first.

In that battle, 40.4% of those polled said Pepsi-Cola's advertising came to mind first, compared with a 26% share of first mentions for Coca-Cola. Those shares were about the same in May.

The June adWatch survey was completed early in the month, before the cola war spotlight shifted to the Mike Tyson/Michael Spinks and Diet Pepsi/Diet Coke fights. Both brands claimed victory after the fight, but if they gained awareness, it wouldn't be evident until the July survey.

Third place among the soft drinks once again went to 7UP, which got 3.9% of first mentions last month.

But more surprising than the continuing tug-of-war for the top between the colas was Sears' appearance as anchor to last month's top 10 in recall.

Sears long has been one of the most visible advertisers, especially in newspapers, yet it had never placed among the best-recalled. What happened?

The answer could be its annual advertising blitz, including heavy TV, before Father's Day (June 19). Of those for whom Sears was the first advertising recalled, more than 70% were men. Those Craftsman tools tumbling over a cliff in Sears' TV commercial made an impact!

Sears' advertising got better recall among men last month than did the California Raisin Advisory Board's figurines. The raisins finished sixth, largely on the strength of heavy recall from women.

The advertising that received the best recall from men was Ford Motor Co.'s "Have you driven a Ford lately?" campaign. It placed No. 3 overall.

AdWatch is a joint project of ADVERTISING AGE and SRI Research Center, Lincoln, Neb. Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the advertising that comes to mind first both overall and in specific product categories. Last month, 1,000 adults were polled by phone.

Among other significant changes in the June survey results:

- IBM continues to close in on Apple's once seemingly insurmountable lead in the computer category. Last month, IBM captured 22% of first mentions when respondents were asked which computer advertising they recalled first. Apple remained No. 1 with a 26.7% share.

But only six months earlier, recall of IBM's advertising was fading away. In December, it received 17.8% of first mentions, compared with Apple's 34%.

Since then, IBM has fought back, and one of the agencies vying for its account, currently up for review, will get the task of keeping the comeback on track.

Compaq and Radio Shack tied for No. 3 last month, with each getting 2.3% of first mentions.

- Another account in review is E&J Gallo Winery's. The company may have lost Hal Riney & Partners as its agency, but its Bartles & Jaymes wine cooler continues to capture consumers' attention.

In June, it garnered 14.2% of first mentions in the wine category (up from 10.9% in May), placing it solidly ahead of No. 2 Riunite's 8% share and the 7.6% share taken by advertising for Gallo wines.#

Bennigan's cooks up a return to TV

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

DALLAS—Bennigan's, the top casual-dining restaurant chain in the U.S., is returning to TV advertising with an estimated $15 million campaign after a 2½-year absence.

Bennigan's also will open 50 new restaurants in the next five years, concentrating on the Northeast.

These moves come in the wake of persistent rumors that Bennigan's parent, Pillsbury Co.'s S&A Restaurant Corp., is on the block.

Pillsbury maintains S&A is not for sale, according to Johnny Thompson, Pillsbury VP-public relations.

In addition to the 214-unit Bennigan's chain, S&A's other major operation is Steak & Ale, with 164 units.

"Bennigan's has been the best-performing concept in Pillsbury's dismal restaurant portfolio," said John McMillin, food industry analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities. "Increased spending for Bennigan's is consistent with what Pillsbury is doing—pushing top-line sales to stimulate growth."

Though small compared with Pillsbury's Burger King Corp., Bennigan's offers a diversified menu that includes chicken, fish and pasta, which are growth areas for restaurants, Mr. McMillin said.

New TV spots emphasize what a fun experience it is to dine at Bennigan's.

But growth won't be easy. Bennigan's and its competitors, second-ranked TGI Friday's and third-ranked Chili's, are trying to replace lost liquor volume (people are drinking less) with increased food sales.

Also, the $3 billion casual-dining segment has become intensely competitive in the past five years as the number of players has risen.

Bennigan's new campaign, via Lintas:New York, goes beyond its earlier food messages. TV spots emphasize improved service and the whole dining experience in a fun, upbeat mood.

The shift was based on research showing that customers' restaurant decisions often are "mood-driven," said Nicholas Castaldo, S&A senior VP-director of marketing.

Bennigan's campaign, themed "Bennigan's—Your escape from the everyday," replaces "Get a taste of it," which was used in print and radio.

The popular oldie "Stay"—a hit song in the movie "Dirty Dancing"—is used in two 30-second TV spots and two radio :60s.

The target audience is 20-to-40-year-olds, with heavy emphasis on those between 20 and 30.

Both TV spots feature a main character who's having a "bad day." In one, a young man is swamped at work but escapes to Bennigan's that night—where he meets his friends. Friendly staff and good food are woven into the scenario as the background music group sings "Bennigan's—Won't you stay just a little bit longer?"

In the other spot, a different young man is struggling with hanging pictures at home. His cat knocks a lamp over, and the phone lands in a fish tank. He escapes to a fun, relaxing experience at Bennigan's.

Though Bennigan's sales for fiscal 1988, ended May 31, increased 1.3% to $455 million, sales per unit were down 3% from the previous fiscal year—mainly due to declines in liquor volume.

Still, Bennigan's remains S&A's largest and most profitable asset. Steak & Ale posted 1988 sales of $221 million, down 15% from 1987.#

City of Big Shoulders slumps

Chicago shops suffer new-business drought

By SCOTT HUME
and JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Chicago, the "second city" of advertising, is suffering from a new-business dry spell, and there doesn't appear to be any rain in sight.

Chicago agencies account for media billings of more than $5 billion, but the odds of increasing that have grown slim this year. One agency head even called it this year's "other drought."

In addition to a shortage of good new accounts, Chicago agencies have lost an estimated $300 million in billings from major national advertisers during the past year, which far eclipses the amount of incoming business or new assignments from existing clients. One agency's internal estimate is that layoffs and resignations have eliminated 10% of the city's 1986 agency work force.

Chicago agencies had at least preliminary shots at Nissan Motor Corp. USA's Infiniti business and General Motors Corp.'s Saturn account, only to watch those land at agencies on the two coasts. Meanwhile, shops scramble for local opportunities; Foote, Cone & Belding, the market's No. 2 shop, is a finalist in the Wisconsin Milk Marketing Board's $5 million review, and even Leo Burnett USA, a $1.5 billion agency, is pitching the $10 million Ameritech corporate account.

One piece of business headed out of town is the $15 million creative assignment for Long John Silver's, previously at FCB.

"We talked to a number of Chicago agencies, several of which we invited to participate in the review," said Dennis Kruse, VP-advertising for Lexington, Ky.-based Long John's. "While I wouldn't say we were disappointed with the creative we saw . . . we were impressed with the creative capabilities we saw from some unexpected places" outside Chicago.

Finalists for the business are Campbell-Mithun-Esty and Scali, McCabe, Sloves, both New York, and the Richards Group, Dallas.

GSD&M, Austin, Texas, picked up the largest single piece of Chicago business lost in the past year, Adolph Coors Co.'s $40 million Coors beer account, from FCB (which kept Coors Light and some smaller Coors brands).

Some advertising executives pooh-pooh the notion that Chicago is in trouble, blaming agency and advertiser megamergers and the resulting conflicts for many of the individual account problems. Branch offices of Ogilvy & Mather and Young & Rubicam have been hampered by conflicts and overshadowed by larger sister offices.

"I think there's plenty of good advertising in Chicago and likewise plenty of good clients," said Alan Webb, exec VP at J. Walter Thompson USA. "What I think you've seen is more of a settling—a response to changes on both the client and agency side. But I think that's been true of the ad business and the general business community as a whole."

Added Wayne Fickinger, vice chairman at Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt: "I believe the good agencies in town are retaining their business, that nothing is really falling apart here. There are forces at work affecting this market, but I believe many are just cyclical."

Others bitterly remember The Best Show, the creative competition organized last year by the Chicago Advertising Club. The big winner was Minneapolis' Fallon McElligott.

There was no Second Annual Best Show this year.

A lack of creative pizazz isn't the whole problem. In studying the market's long-term client potential, Campbell-Mithun-Esty discovered that 84 of Chicago's top 150 companies either don't advertise or have accounts smaller than $3 million. Of the remaining 66 companies, 18 have in-house agencies and two are agencies themselves (Burnett and FCB).

That leaves 46 companies with significant business for outside agencies. Of those, more than half—25—have either an out-of-town or a specialized agency.

For C-M-E Exec VP Marvin Goldsmith, those numbers mean one thing: "Chicago agencies must wake up and realize they need to play in a bigger playground."

"We get a lot of our growth from food and package goods, but computer and service businesses are where the growth is, and the Midwest is not a center of those businesses," said Powell Johns, president of HDM Dawson Johns & Black.

Also, Mr. Goldsmith said, "I'm not sure that Chicago agencies have aggressively pursued business outside the Midwest—that's one problem. We've also gone through a tremendous interest in creative shops. And Chicago is being challenged to work at providing a good creative product."

Is creative output the problem? On the surface, no; for the past two years, Chicago-based agencies—Burnett in 1987 and FCB in 1986—have captured ADVERTISING AGE's Agency of the Year award, acknowledging creative excellence.

But beyond Burnett—which, at three times the size of its nearest competitor seems an odd choice for the city's hottest creative shop—DDB Needham Worldwide and Bayer Bess Vanderwarker, creative executives are hard-pressed to name a "hot" Chicago agency.

"I think we all need to ask ourselves whether we're offering 1970s advertising to answer 1990s marketing problems," Mr. Johns said. "A lot of Chicago advertising seems long on marketing and short on pizazz."

"No one in Chicago except maybe some small agencies are really dedicated to doing outstanding creative. Who has a great creative reputation right now?" said Bob Barocci, chairman of McConnaughy Barocci Brown. "There needs to be a rededication to creative excellence by the major shops in town."

Some executives say the problem is that agencies neglect to promote their creative product.

"It's true; Chicago isn't getting the opportunities it should," said Peter Krivkovich, president of Cramer-Krasselt. "When you look at the roster of the agencies who do get the attention, and compare it with the awards Chicago wins and the high quality of work we do, you realize we should definitely be getting consideration for the best business too.

"But Chicago agencies have traditionally not been promoters of themselves. Chicago isn't thought of as a glitzy ad community; instead it's thought of more as a hard-working, let's-get-the-job-done agency city."

Some advertisers say Chicago agencies sometimes miss other pieces of the puzzle.

In June 1986, Kitchens of Sara Lee in suburban Deerfield was forced to find a new agency after FCB resigned because of a client conflict. It moved the business to Chiat/Day, New York, in part because of C/D's account planning system.

"When we went to search for an agency, we felt it would be an advantage to be with a midsize Chicago shop," said Bob Tarkington, VP-marketing. "If anything, we gave high priority to agencies in Chicago. When we put together our short list, we were looking primarily at out-of-town shops."#

Dealers' choice: more nameplates

By Laura Clark

Not too long ago, the average American auto dealer was not unlike the owner of any small retail business.

He sold one brand of cars and trucks and was loyal to one company. His contact and input from the manufacturer was through a factory sales representative. He promoted his store through local advertising paid out of his own pocket.

Laura Clark covers advertising and marketing for Automotive News, a sister publication of ADVERTISING AGE.

But the profile of the American car dealer and his importance to the factory is changing as quickly as the American auto industry itself.

The average dealership in the U.S. handles two or more nameplates, with many car and truck dealers selling import and domestic lines in one facility.

As of Jan. 1, there were 24,938 dealerships holding 72,191 franchises from 12 domestic and 39 import makes for an average of 2.89 franchises per outlet, according to Automotive News' dealership census.

■ But as rules loosened, control of regional marketing dollars dividing factory, some stores

General Motors Corp. recently dropped a restriction on how many facilities each of its dealers could own. In March 1985, GM said its dealers could own up to five facilities and invest in up to five more. Now each case is being looked at individually.

"[The restrictions] were not appropriate in today's business climate," Claude N. Moore, GM VP-customer sales and service, said in a letter to GM dealers.

Facilities are no longer small "corner store" operations but large, well capitalized facilities.

The move toward multi-franchising and larger facilities are requiring more capital investment. The number of mega-dealers is rapidly increasing each year.

Some dealership groups are taking their companies public to provide the capital needed for expansion. Two publicly traded foreign companies—Lex Service PLC of Britain and Tokyo Nissan of Japan—announced this year they intend to begin purchasing American dealerships.

Both GM and Ford Motor Co. —which previously frowned on public ownership of dealerships holding one of their franchises —have reconsidered. Mitsubishi Motor Sales of America also gave its OK recently on the public ownership issue.

Along with allowing its dealers to branch into new areas, manufacturers also are relying on their dealers to assist them in marketing to a given area.

Automotive marketers have followed the food industry into regional marketing or tailored messages for individual areas.

The full-size pickup truck that is almost non-existent in New York is actively touted as a staple to many Dallas residents. Large, rear-wheel-drive domestic cars sell well in Florida but barely move off the lots in California.

Regional marketing has boosted advertising budgets. The National Automobile Dealers Association says dealers spent $3.6 billion in advertising in 1987, up from $2.9 billion in 1985.

"The challenge is to have an umbrella that works in all areas and to tailor that overall strategy to unique needs of certain markets," says Warren Christell, Oldsmobile general marketing manager.

Ford, Lincoln-Mercury, Dodge, Pontiac and Chevrolet were the first to begin regional efforts. Chevrolet and Pontiac began California marketing programs in the early 1980s to combat rising Japanese competition.

In 1984, Chevrolet took the step of hiring a separate agency, Vic Olesen & Partners, Culver City, Calif., to handle West Coast advertising, previously handled by Campbell-Ewald, Warren, Mich., the division's long-time national agency.

Dodge's program focused on the hot Texas truck market, and later Chrysler Corp. added marketing programs for California and the Northeastern U.S. Patrick Keegan, director of special marketing programs for Chrysler, says the company worked with its dealers to establish regional programs with appropriate products.

Nissan, BMW and Mercedes-Benz of North America also are building regional efforts with the help of their dealer groups.

Mercedes-Benz last year established its Marketing Group Support Program. "We started to think that we had a corporate advertising effort and then we had the individual dealer; in the middle we had nothing," says Gerd Klauss, VP-operations for Mercedes-Benz of North America.

Nissan also is relying on its dealers, recently starting a regional marketing program that allows its dealers to direct the company's marketing efforts in four U.S. regions.

Instead of collecting advertising fees for each vehicle from dealer association members and contributing factory funds to dealer groups, Nissan includes the cost of local advertising in the wholesale price of the car and works with dealers in tailoring programs locally.

Unlike in the past, factory funds will be spent on only ads developed by Nissan's new national advertising agency, Chiat/Day. According to Nissan VP Bob Thomas, the carmaker needs a consistent image using one advertising theme.

These new policies regarding co-op or "market support" advertising have created some friction. Some dealers feel the regional effort has been a method to make the dealers help pay for factory advertising.

"They [the manufacturers] are trying to transfer the cost of advertising their products to the dealer and ultimately to the customer," says Jim Caplinger, former National Automobile Dealer Association president and an Arkansas car dealer.

"Some dealers are unable to advertise their own stores [because they must pay for dealer group ads]," Mr. Caplinger says.

NADA recently opposed mandatory membership in dealer advertising groups.

The action was taken after several Chevrolet dealers had voiced concern over Chevy's new policy of adding advertising charges to the invoice price of every vehicle sold. GMC's truck division is eyeing a similar program.

Beginning in the 1989 model year, 1% of the invoice price of every retail Chevrolet car or truck will be collected for dealer association advertising, regardless of whether a dealer wants to belong to an association or not.

According to Chevrolet Marketing Manager Mike Erdman, the program was designed to equalize the cost of local advertising among all dealers and bring Chevrolet collections up to the level of its competitors.

Chrysler divisions also are going to the 1% (or more in some cases) of invoice to fund dealer association ads. Jeep-Eagle division dealers transfered to the 1% of invoice collection system after Chrysler Corp. purchased American Motors Corp. in 1987.

"We had a lot of difficult meetings with the dealers, a lot of it was, 'Trust me, it will work,' " says Bob Williams, Jeep-Eagle dealer marketing manager.

As manufacturers tighten their marketing "partnership" with dealers, many are asking or encouraging dealer groups to use the factory's advertising agency.

McCann-Erickson, Buick's national agency and the only GM agency currently handling dealer group ad business, would like to add more Buick groups to its roster.

J. Walter Thompson USA, Ford division's agency, also is seeking more Ford retail business and has recently taken out ads in Ford's dealer magazine using testimonials from Ford dealer group presidents using JWT.

But independent agencies say a national agency cannot serve both the manufacturer and the retail-oriented ad group.

"The problem is that for the manufacturer there are some good and some bad agencies handling their groups," says Tim Kelling, VP-director of Kelling-Murley automotive division of W.B. Doner & Co., Southfield, Mich., which handles several Pontiac and Ford dealer groups.

GM divisions, Ford and Toyota all say they will continue to allow their dealers to choose their own advertising agency.

Others, including Chrysler, Mercedes-Benz and Nissan, believe the one agency approach will help to give a consistent image for the brand.

Regardless of the approach, it is certain as competition rises in the auto industry, carmakers will rely more on the dealers' input to win in the trenches.

We impressed Rand McNally who named the Research Triangle cities the third most liveable place in the country.

We continue to impress the highest number of Ph.D.'s per capita of any place in the nation, enough to make them want to live here.

Communities in crisis

Plant shutdowns continue as foreign transplants, overcapacity problems cause cutbacks by U.S. automakers

By Dee Ann Maki

Ford Motor Co., whose Probe and Taurus models have helped make it the darling of Detroit, has been unable to steer clear of the industry's biggest public relations pothole. In the latest of a series of Big Three plant closings last month, Ford confirmed its Forge plant in Canton, Ohio, would be shut down by the end of the year, marking the first plant closing for the No. 2 automaker in five years.

A plant closing can become a major public relations debacle for a company when a large segment of the community relies on it for employment. Chrysler Corp.'s announcement to phase out its Kenosha, Wis., assembly and stamping plant, directly affecting 5% of the city's population, generated a storm of national media attention.

Ford's decision to close the Forge plant has met with harsh criticism. According to Stephen Yokich, a United Auto Workers VP, the closing was "a completely unnecessary action." He blasts Ford for not paying attention to a 1987 A.T. Kearney Co. study that concluded the plant could be made profitable if appropriate actions were taken by both Ford and its union.

"Assessing all the evidence, it appears [Ford management] never had any intention of treating the investigation by the Kearney consultants as anything other than an expensive smokescreen with which to cover their tracks while they proceeded with their predetermined decision to permanently close the plant," says Mr. Yokich.

To stem the animosity, Ford promises to place as many salaried and hourly employees as possible in other company locations," according to Henry Nichol, general manager, Transmission and Chassis division of Ford North America Automotive Operation. Since the September 1986, announcement, about 350 workers have been placed and 140 have retired; 419 employees still work at the plant.

The most publicized plant closings involved Chrysler's Kenosha plant and Volkswagen AG's July 14 shutdown of its Westmoreland, Pa., plant. The latter, representing the first time a foreign-based auto manufacturer has idled a U.S. assembly plant, stands in sharp contrast to Asian manfacturers' rush to build U.S. facilities.

Sales of Volkswagens in Westmoreland County have dropped slightly since the closing, says a Volkswagen of America spokesman. He asserts that the decline primarily is in response to local economic conditions rather than the plant closing.

The company contends that Westmoreland's production levels did not justify its operating costs. Volkswagen's U.S. production output fell 21% in 1987 to 66,696, from 84,397 in 1986. Westmoreland produced the Golf, GTI and Jetta models.

To assist the 2,500 workers affected by the planned shutdown, Volkswagen established a job bank, offering employees job placement and training programs. Several job placement agencies have set up shop within the Westmoreland plant, counseling workers and offering national computerized search programs. Hourly workers will receive a $6,000 severance check and a $1,000 bonus.

In Kenosha, Chrysler's troubles were compounded by Chairman Lee Iacocca's announcement that the plant would be closed earlier than originally stated.

One outdoor board installed by the United Auto Workers-Local 72 near Chrysler's Highland Park, Mich., headquarters read, "Iacocca, keep your word to Kenosha."

In response, Mr. Iacocca said, "Blame us for being dumb managers for spending $200 million to put [out] two old cars in an 86-year-old plant, but please don't call me a liar when I've got to close it sooner than I thought."

Chrysler acquired the Kenosha facility as part of its August 1987 purchase of American Motors Corp. Analysts had predicted Chrysler would close either the Kenosha plant or the Jeep facility in Toledo, Ohio.

The Jeep plant appeared to be destined for mothballs, but the company reconsidered following a tentative contract agreement with the Jeep unit of UAW-Local 12, assuring production until Sept. 14, 1992.

At the end of January, Chrysler announced plans to close the Kenosha plant, which produces the Dodge Omni, Plymouth Horizon models, Chrysler Fifth Avenue, Dodge Diplomat and Plymouth Grand Fury. The Kenosha Jeep engine plant is expected to remain open, employing about 1,000.

Mr. Iacocca attributes the decision to close the facility to an overcapacity problem. Analysts estimate that without such cutbacks, auto industry production would exceed demand by about 5 million vehicles a year by the early 1990s. Car production in the U.S. decreased 9.4% from 1986 to 1987 to 7.1 million vehicles, according to Automotive News.

After the announcement, Wisconsin Attorney General Donald Hathaway claimed that Chrysler had agreed to continue production at Kenosha in return for state and city aid in modernizing the facility. Chrysler promised to repay Kenosha its $1 million investment in the plant and to help relocate or work out retirement programs for the 5,500 workers affected.

Chrysler sales in the Kenosha area initially dropped off drastically. When Chrysler announced in February that it would create a trust fund of up to $20 million for displaced workers, with the money tied to 1988 sales in Wisconsin, local sales of Chryslers rebounded.

Plant closings never fail to generate negative publicity—at least at a local level. When General Motors Corp. closed Cadillac division's Fleetwood Body and Clark Avenue plants in southwest Detroit, members of UAW-Local 22 held candlelight vigils at the plant gates.

A number of the 6,600 displaced workers were recruited to GM's new Detroit-Hamtramck facility, yet an estimated 3,000 workers were left unemployed.

The problem of dealing with displaced workers and the accompanying damaging publicity is perennial. U.S. employment in motor vehicle and related manufacturing industries, which reached more than 1 million in 1978, has fallen to 841,700 last year, according to Automotive News.

General Motors should become the expert at managing these crises. The company has announced plans to phase out an additional six plants by 1990. ■

AGB pulling the plug on U.S. people meters

London—AGB is ending its pioneering people-meter audience measurement service in the U.S. AGB already has invested $67 million in the U.S. venture, called AGB Television Research Service, and estimates the cost of suspending it at another $52 million.

The decision to shut down the U.S. service is part of an agreement by the financially pressed U.K. company to merge its operations with Mediamark Research Inc. Mediamark is owned by U.K. group MAI, which will increase its stake in AGB to 31% from 8.9%. AGB's stock plummeted after the announcement.

Tim Joyce, MRI chairman, said, "It is naturally disappointing that we have had to conclude that the U.S. TV project must be suspended, but it was clearly not realistic to suppose that costs could be covered by revenues in the foreseeable future."

A.C. Nielsen Co. is now the only major U.S. TV audience measurement service. "Nielsen will continue to reinforce its commitment—with product, with investment and with experience—to provide high quality, high value information services to customers," said John Holt, Nielsen's chairman and ceo.

"AGB was around for a relatively short period of time, but it made a significant impact on the industry," said Peter Chrisanthopoulos, president, RJR Nabisco Broadcast, the only advertiser subscriber. "We're grateful that it sped up Nielsen's people-meter progress. We do prefer that there is more than one ratings service."

CBS was the only major network to sign up with AGB, and Dave

Clorox ups ante in war with P&G

Bleach battle reaches new plateau

By JENNIFER PENDLETON

Oakland, Calif.—Clorox Co. President Jack Collins is upping the ante in his battle with Procter & Gamble Co.

Defending its lead in the $600 million liquid chlorine bleach market, the company has begun testing Clorox Lemon Scent liquid chlorine bleach in Houston with TV ad support, via Foote, Cone & Belding, San Francisco.

The move is significant because the product is going head-to-head with a similar new P&G product in an anticipated battle between two major household product companies.

In an interview with Advertising Age, Mr. Collins, who is also the marketer's chief operating officer, said, "Liquid bleach is our largest brand from the standpoint of volume and overall contribution to the company's earnings. Anytime a competitor, and especially an established, well-respected company like P&G, comes in . . . I don't like to use the word concern, but it's of keen interest to us."

Market analysts contend Clorox's Lemon Scent test is a signal to P&G that it will not take any challenge to its core business lying down. Bleach accounts for about 45% of Clorox's profit.

The analysts maintain P&G was sending a similar message when it countered Clorox's first detergent entry by testing P&G's Tide with Bleach.

Clorox in June began the Western regional introduction of Clorox Super Detergent, a renamed version of the superconcentrated powder detergent it tested for 18 months under the Wave name, via DDB Needham Worldwide's Chicago office.

This dramatic new-product test represents the largest single com-

Mary Wells: On the record

By JON LAFAYETTE

Mary Wells Lawrence, the Greta Garbo of Madison Avenue, is alive and well and, for the moment anyway, living in France.

Although she is keeping close tabs on her agency from across the ocean, the first lady of American advertising said in a rare interview that she has no plans to take an active part in WRG's pitch for IBM Corp.'s $133 million account because she has confidence that the agency's new-business team can push all the right buttons for the computer maker.

Mrs. Lawrence, 60, spoke by telephone from her vacation home in the south of France. She isn't seen very often in public, but she made it clear that she is still the agency's ceo and, as such, is involved in agency business on a day-to-day basis.

And while acknowledging that the rumor mills of advertising have been amply productive in the attention they have paid to her career, she insisted that her health is fine and that she doesn't plan to give up control of the agency any time soon. "It's my baby and I love it," she said of the shop she helped found in 1966 and quickly turned into one of advertising's Midas-like legends.

Within five years after she and Dick Rich and Stu Greene left Jack Tinker & Partners to open their own agency in a Gotham Hotel suite, they were billing $100 million with a client roster brimming with such blue-chip names as Philip Morris Cos., Procter & Gamble Co. and American Motors Corp.

Not only was the agency hot, it grew with style. From its "end of the plain plane" campaign that swathed Braniff jets in bright colors, to its funny, award-winning ads highlighting the disadvantages of smoking Benson & Hedges, its reputation for conspicuous creativity was firmly set.

And as one of the most highly visible, and highly paid, women executives in the country, she couldn't help but make headlines. She found herself in the media spotlight for marrying client Harding Lawrence, at the time president of Braniff International (and then resigning the account to take on Trans World Airlines); for making millions of dollars by taking the agency public, then taking it private again; and for her $225,000-a-year salary.

She became an American symbol of glamour, success, wealth, brains and beauty.

But all that publicity has died down during the past few years.

"I'm learning to be serene and supportive," she said from her French villa near St. Jean-Cap-Ferrat between Nice and Monte Carlo. "I felt very strongly that if other people were going to come up [and manage the agency] I would have to get my ego down in size and swallow it and pull back and let other people shine. I have to work at that very hard. It's hard to do because people don't want to let you do it. People want to keep the person who founded a company sort of like a bright light. They have a star complex and they want to keep that up."

By remaining the star, she believed she was eclipsing the work others were performing.

"It isn't fair when so much of what's being done at the company is really in the hands of others and they don't get the full credit for what they do.

"When you are the person who started a company, people tend to associate everything with you. I saw that happen with Bill Bernbach when I was working with him. No matter what anybody did, Bill Bernbach got the credit or he got the blame, but mostly he got

7-11 shopping

Doner has edge over rivals

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

DALLAS—W.B. Doner & Co. may have an inside track at Southland Corp. as the chain seeks a new agency for its 7-Eleven convenience store.

Doner, Southfield, Mich., is already 7-Eleven's "tactical" ad agency, working on market-specific campaigns.

Differences with incumbent Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, New York, over strategic direction, and disappointment in last year's "Where the good things come easy" campaign, caused the advertiser to look elsewhere.

That campaign, which promoted 7-Eleven as a destination rather than just a convenient place to shop, was abandoned earlier this year.

Officially, Southland cited "philosophical differences" with Hill Holliday, which won the account from Young & Rubicam two years ago.

"They put the account up for review and we decided not to participate," an HHCC spokesman said.

Ad budgets were not revealed, but HHCC's portion of the 7-Eleven account was said to be worth an equivalent of $12 million in billings. Southland's measured media expenditures last year totaled $52.1 million.

HHCC's last major TV effort breaks today in spot markets for the introduction of the "Big Bite," a sandwich featuring Oscar Mayer Food Corp. all-beef franks. The hot dog campaign follows the successful introduction of Coca-Cola Slurpees in May, also handled by HHCC.

"The candidate that will win the account will be closely involved in the development of 7-Eleven's strategic direction," said Fred Bradshaw, 7-Eleven advertising and communication manager.

O'Brien joins Hill Holliday—P. 46

Doner's humorous, award-winning Dabney Coleman campaign last year, which ran primarily in Texas and Arizona, and its current market-specific efforts may give the agency an edge over competitors.

"We are not prepared to say now that Doner has the business," Mr. Bradshaw said. "Doner is very much a part of our consideration in the search and we have a close relationship with them." Southland has contacted other agencies but declined to name them.

Mr. Bradshaw said he and consultant Sergio Zyman, a former Coca-Cola Co. marketing executive, will select "no more than nine agencies" before the end of August. The list will be pared by early September with a final decision a month later.

The new agency will be responsible for strategic advertising support, creative, production and media input. Media placement now is handled in-house.

Next year's ad budget will exceed this year's level, which reflects cutbacks after the $4.9 billion leveraged buyout by the Thompson family late last year.

The costly LBO is putting pressure on the 7,000-unit chain. The company has sold close to 1,000 stores and various divisions to finance the debt. Store expansion is on hold so increases must come from existing units.

The company is the largest convenience store chain, ahead of No. 2 Circle K Corp. and No. 3 National Convenience Store's Stop N Go.

"Our goals are to generate sales out of existing stores by providing the best services and products to consumers," Mr. Bradshaw said.#

Lord Geller getting hit on all sides

An Advertising Age Roundup

The news keeps getting worse for Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein.

Last week's abrupt loss of the $10 million Dean Witter Financial Services Group account follows management changes at IBM Corp. that virtually eliminate whatever advantages the incumbent had in fighting to keep all or part of IBM's $138 million account.

Dean Witter's move to Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, was so swift it caught the receiving agency by surprise.

"We had no advance notice," a Burnett spokesman said. "I'm sure Dean Witter is familiar with our work for Allstate, and that's probably why they called, but it was definitely . . . a pleasant surprise."

Burnett has handled the $30 million Allstate Insurance Cos. account since 1957. Allstate and Dean Witter are units of Sears, Roebuck & Co.

Dean Witter's official explanation for the switch was that it needed an agency closer to its new offices in Lincolnshire, Ill., where it recently relocated its advertising and marketing operations from New York.

"What's happening with Lord Geller was not a factor in our moving the account," said Beth Steinfeld, manager of public relations for Dean Witter in New York.

However, others traced the split in part to animosities between Dean Witter Chairman-CEO Philip Purcell and WPP Chief Executive Martin Sorrell.

In an interview after the breakaway of top Lord Geller executives, Mr. Sorrell said he had been particularly irritated by inquiries made to him by Dean Witter's mergers and acquisition unit about the possible sale of the agency (AA, April 4).

Lord Geller's statement, released last week after it was notified of Dean Witter's decision, said: "Our regret is, we suppose, obvious, since Dean Witter has been a first-class client for whom we have done outstanding work. Our frustration is caused by a loss for reasons beyond anyone's control."

Also beyond Lord Geller's control was IBM's marketing department shake-up.

Among the changes, IBM Senior VP George H. Conrades has moved to general manager of U.S. marketing and services from general manager of IBM's personal computer business. IBM VP William O. Grabe takes the new post of assistant general manager-marketing for U.S. marketing and services from assistant general manager-marketing for IBM's mid-range computers (AA, July 25).

Neither Mr. Conrades nor Mr. Grabe has had any major involvement with IBM corporate advertising, which seems to eliminate the advantages of incumbency Lord Geller and Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners might have had.

Other finalists are D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, Grey Advertising, Lintas:Worldwide and Wells, Rich, Greene, all New York.

Those agencies may be encouraged by reports that Mr. Conrades has been dissatisfied with IBM's past advertising, especially when compared to BBDO Worldwide's advertising for Apple Computer.

Mr. Conrades, however, "is not expected to dramatically alter the direction the review has taken. In his new capacity, [he] will be involved in the final selection, but [the change of personnel] will have no impact on the selection schedule or the selection date," said an IBM spokeswoman.

The agency review, being handled by a lower level management team, is still on schedule and is expected to be wrapped up in late August.#

Agencies boost profit margins

By JON LAFAYETTE

NEW YORK—Profit margins at publicly held advertising agencies are on the rise.

Agencies' second-quarter results are likely to show that the vigorous cost-cutting, including job cutbacks, is having an impact.

In announcements last week, Interpublic Group of Cos. reported record income for the period, while London-based WCRS Group said that acquisitions boosted its earnings to a record for the ninth straight fiscal year.

Significantly, Interpublic's profit margin—profits as a percentage of revenues—grew to 16.6% from 16.2% a year ago, said analyst Greg Ostroff of Goldman Sachs.

Alan Gottesman, an analyst at PaineWebber, noted that domestic revenues at Interpublic seem particularly strong, rising 15% to 16% after experiencing a slim 1% increase last year.

In its second-quarter report, Interpublic said net income for the quarter rose 19.3% to $24.2 million as gross income increased 13.2% to $282.6 million. The company said its agencies, including McCann-Erickson Worldwide and Lintas:Worldwide, gained net new business of

Election year frenzy bane of catalogers

As if rising costs weren't enough, catalog companies brace for downturn during political season

By Ed Fitch

They might represent the toughest voting bloc George Bush or Michael Dukakis will face this November. Their negative outlook toward the Nov. 8 event is not an indictment of either candidate, however. Catalogers simply dislike the election process.

Don't call them radicals, either. Call them businesspeople who face a quadrennial slump whenever election year rolls around, diverting consumer attention from placing catalog orders.

On top of dealing with an election that falls in the midst of their prime selling season, catalog companies are facing rising merchandise, postal and paper costs plus a softening in consumer retail spending.

Accounting for an estimated 20% to 30% of catalog costs, third-class postage rates soared 25% in April. Paper costs also will jump about 10% this year, hewing profits to a pulp.

The ever-present threat of Congress removing mail-order sales tax exemptions and a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision supporting a sales-and-use tax levied on catalogs sent free to Louisiana residents but printed out of state (AA, May 23 et seq.) also keep catalogers constantly looking over their shoulders.

A February Direct Marketing Association survey of leading catalog companies showed pessimism at its highest level in five years. When asked their expectations of next season's performance, 43% sensed a downturn—a marked change from last September's 12%.

> "It's better to watch who you send your book to. If you have control of your mailing list, you can get books into the right hands."
> Rodney Birkins
> J.C. Penney Co.'s catalog division

Last September only 7% announced a decline in profits; in February 22% experienced a drop. Those suffering a downturn in response rates skyrocketed from 12% to 48% in the six-month period.

But just when they seem to be teetering, catalogers find ways to fight back.

"[Rising postal and production costs and election year downturns] are a way of life and unfortunately they came together this year. But catalogers figure a way around it," says Steve Millard, president of Millard Group, a catalog consultancy and list broker.

Recent opinions cast doubt on the February survey's accuracy as a barometer. "They sure didn't talk to us," says Terry Wilson, VP-public and investor relations, Lands' End, which is bullish on cataloging for both the short and long term. Rodney Birkins, president of J.C. Penney Co.'s catalog division, expects a very strong year.

Maxwell Sroge, president of Marke/Sroge, a catalog development consultancy, predicts consumer catalog revenues will hit $38.6 billion, up 14.9% over last year and well above the 3% growth estimate for retailers. First-quarter results for the publicly owned companies he follows were up 27%.

Catalogers are exploring many options to defray the increased costs' impact, however. Lands' End raised shipping and handling charges 16.7% in April to cover increases. Bright's Creek, J. Crew, Johnny Appleseed's and Tweeds also boosted service charges. J. Crew also hiked merchandise prices, as did Boston Proper and Lands' End.

The weak value of the dollar overseas is putting the squeeze on any cataloger relying on imported product. A letter to customers in Lands' End's July catalog went to great lengths to explain the exchange rate's impact on price increases. "We have to price our products to reflect the costs we pay," Mr. Wilson says.

Product price hikes will not be outrageous because catalogers are determined to compete with retail store prices, says Mr. Sroge. "It will hit a point where customers will not pay a premium for convenience."

Other options involve trying new paper weights and cutting the size of catalogs—in terms of trim sizes, pages featured and number mailed. Arnold Fishman, president of Marketing Logistics, a mail-order consultancy, says companies experiment with these options at great risk.

"The savings are marginal in doing things like trimming the sizes and can't be done without jeopardy," he says.

Mr. Birkins agrees, saying, "Rather than cut the corners, it's better to watch who you send your book to. If you have control of your mailing list, you can get your books into the right hands."

In addition to carrying as many products as possible, Mr. Fishman says that with annual customer attrition of 5% to 10%, catalogers should maintain as high a circulation as feasible to sustain sales.

The list broker business is predicting its first no-growth year, says Mr. Millard, adding that his orders have declined 15% as catalogers dig more deeply into their house files.

Catalogers confirm they are cutting back on prospecting for new clients. "We're being careful to mail to our best customers, but then we always have," Mr. Wilson says.

Another cost-cutting option is to deliver catalogs by means other than the U.S. Postal Service. While catalogers and magazine publishers actively are investigating other opportunities, an early attempt by Lillian Vernon to insert a 16-page children's catalog in The New York Times fell flat (AA, May 2).

"The average cataloger won't fiddle around with alternate delivery because they require an undue amount of management time," says Mr. Millard. Mr. Birkins insists, however, that Penney will bypass the USPS if it finds a more efficient distribution method.

Catalogers' willingness to adapt to constraints leads Mr. Millard to revise what he describes as a gloom-and-doom prognosis this spring. With cost increases a way of business, catalogers realize it will never be cheaper to mail than now.

At Lands' End, Mr. Wilson even sneers at the election's effect. "The decision to buy a new shirt or skirt probably won't be influenced by whether a Democrat or Republican is sitting in the White House."

Showrooms fend off the dinosaur look

Caught in web of the catalog's locked-in pricing, the segment's lament is summed up: 'It is a pain in the neck to do, but it's too vital to give up'

By Joanne Y. Cleaver

Catalog showrooms are exercising a right of American business: When you start losing at your own game, change the rules.

The alterations are so extreme that the category name may need changing. Although they still feature catalogs, many showrooms are deemphasizing the book as they struggle to find their position between low-price mass merchandisers' broad product selections and price cutting by specialty discounters and membership clubs.

"They used to be catalog showrooms, now they have become more of straight discount operations," says Steve Ashley, retail analyst, Blunt, Ellis & Loewi. "The catalog is much less a facet of the operation."

According to Upscale Discounting, the showrooms' aggregate sales hit $8.6 billion in 1987, 8.9% up from 1986's $7.9 billion but still 14% below 1985's $10 billion.

Indicating the pressure on the segment, McDade & Co. filed for bankruptcy last November; Allied Wholesale Distributors and Wilkor Jewelry & Showroom closed their doors early last month.

The situation has caused the chains to view their catalogs, once their trademark, as more of an albatross. The traditional 400-to-500-page catalog locks in product selections and prices at annual intervals, leaving less room for flexibility and making them more vulnerable to competitors.

About 50% of the customer base uses the catalog primarily to compare prices, says Leonard Luria, chairman and president, L. Luria & Sons, a Florida-based chain of 43 catalog showrooms.

"That's the weakest part of it. You're laid out before the competitors," he says.

Completely canning something that 50% of the customers rely on would be impossible, he says. "It is a pain in the neck to do and is very time consuming and costly. But it's too vital to give up."

Best Products, the No. 2 chain with sales of $2.1 billion in its fiscal year ending Jan. 30, is addressing the problem by reducing its catalog's role. It downsized the catalog this year from more than 400 pages to about 300 pages that feature only half the items carried in Best showrooms.

"The catalog is intended to give an idea of the categories and assortment customers can find in the store," says Mark Murphy, VP-corporate communications at Best Products. "With only half the items in the catalog, we can respond much more quickly to customer demands."

Like many other showrooms, Best is seeking marketplace flexibility by increasing the number of supplements that push seasonal and promotional items. It currently is dropping supplements every other week.

When Best Products reduced its catalog size, however, the space devoted to jewelry was kept constant, boosting jewelry-oriented pages to about 33% of the catalog rather than 25%.

The reason is obvious. "They have category dominance in jewelry and they're fighting like hell to hold onto everything else," says Mr. Ashley.

Jewelry, watches, clocks, silver and gifts account for 47% of showroom sales, according to Upscale Discounting. Arnold Fishman, president of Marketing Logistics, a mail-order consultancy, speculates that jewelry eventually will account for up to 40% of sales.

Made to order

PM hopes to clear the air via catalog

With its advertising options increasingly clouded by negative public opinion and regulatory uncertainty, Philip Morris is using a catalog to order up some positive images.

"Quality Choices," which is tied to its Benson & Hedges brand, features products such as espresso makers, VCRs and champagne flutes that portray the cigarette company as a purveyor of upscale goods.

"The philosophy is to extend the brand's image," says Ellen Merlo, Philip Morris VP-marketing services. "We have high-quality goods offered to our customers at deep discounts, products that enhance our target audience's lifestyle."

Strengthening ties to existing customers has become essential, and direct marketing programs are being considered as a way to meet that need.

"The cigarette companies are having to create a relationship with a dwindling market," says Katie Muldoon, president of Muldoon Direct, an agency specializing in catalogs. "They have to identify their audience."

Colgate-Palmolive Co. uses a catalog to build image and brand loyalty among customers. Launched last fall, its "Hand in Hand" catalog targets mothers with educational games and toys and parents' aids, mail-order categories showing growth potential.

The company's presence is extremely understated. Colgate products appear as props in only two photos; Colgate toothpaste is not even featured with a toothbrush set.

"We see this as a way to build a relationship with mothers by promoting products that become integral in the relationship between mothers and their kids," says Renee Kristol, Colgate's catalog director.

Still officially in test, the catalog has given Colgate "a taste for the value of targeting a specific audience and learning to communicate with them about their needs and wants. That's what direct marketing is all about," she says.

retaining electronics, small appliances, home furnishings and housewares but concentrating on jewelry and gifts. "We don't carry toys, soft goods or sporting equipment," he says.

Jewelry now accounts for about 40% of Luria & Sons' revenues—twice the industry average. As a result sales increased 19% in 1987 to more than $205 million.

Best Products is also reevaluating its merchandising strategies, changing them to look more like "any contemporary discount merchandiser," says Mr. Murphy. Small appliances like irons and microwave ovens are now stacked on self-serve shelves rather than behind counters.

Segment leader Service Merchandise, with 1987 sales of $2.8 billion, is holding out against making wholesale format changes, says Raymond Zimmerman, chairman and president. "We're changing nothing. We're just running the business better than we have in the past."

Part of this new efficiency involved halving the number of catalogs mailed, however.

Although the 6 million catalogs sent this year still represent a significant mailing, the move further indicates the decreasing importance of the first word in catalog showrooms' label. ▪

Jim Heekin has come a long way from his heyday in New York—but small-town life suits him just fine.

Kicking back

Heekin finds happiness in small-town shop after years at the top in NYC

By ALAN RADDING

Williamstown, Mass., is only 170 miles from New York City, but for James R. Heekin Jr., it's as different as a Chevy pickup from a Mercedes limousine.

In his heyday at Doyle Dane Bernbach, Mr. Heekin traveled to work in a chauffeured limo. Now he drives a pickup through the quiet streets of the small college town.

Mr. Heekin, 60, opened James Heekin Associates five years ago in Williamstown after a career that included more than a decade at Ogilvy & Mather, five months as president of DDB and six years as a principal of what became Canter, Achenbaum, Associates.

After a long, colorful and controversial stay on Madison Avenue, Mr. Heekin decided to become a small-town adman.

"This is the last place you'd decide to start an ad agency," he says. But he was determined to succeed. "If nothing else, I didn't want to look like an ass back in New York."

And in his own way, he's succeeded.

Heekin Associates, which has $5 million in billings, recently won the $500,000 account of Mount Mansfield, a Vermont ski resort, beating out a dozen other New England agencies. The win brought the small shop its first regional attention.

Most of Heekin's other clients are more typical of a small-town agency, including a local bank, a hospital and a hotel.

"The client/agency relationship is less competitive here," Mr. Heekin says. "There isn't another ad agency on every corner, so the threat of losing business is not as worrisome as in New York."

A fervent disciple of David Ogilvy, Mr. Heekin works straight from Mr. Ogilvy's books, right down to a print orientation, long

IBM mulling brand setup

Move could affect ad agencies

and ALAN RADDING

IBM Corp. is moving toward reshaping its marketing and advertising along brand-management lines, which would affect ad agency alignments with the giant computer marketer.

Faced with increasing competitive pressures on all sides, IBM is considering a decentralized marketing system, sources said. If a company task force decides to go ahead, Big Blue will join the ranks of other major companies that have pushed advertising and promotion responsibilities down into their business units.

Currently, all product advertising is coordinated by IBM's U.S. Marketing & Services Group, which includes about 175 staffers.

Decentralization of planning and decision-making along product lines already is a key element of the major corporate restructuring that's been under way since January.

That reorganization, conducted with the help of McKinsey & Co., a consultancy, could help IBM reduce its top-heavy corporate management ranks and enable it to be more responsive to changes in the marketplace.

An IBM spokeswoman tersely said the company "is not dispersing advertising support throughout the lines of business," disputing reports from several sources. She wouldn't comment on whether a physically centralized marketing team could be split by product lines.

An IBM marketing executive confirmed that a restructuring of marketing and advertising along brand-management lines is under consideration. "But it is just one of, probably, two dozen options," the executive said, adding that no timetable has been set for a decision.

Another source, however, said any action would likely be taken before IBM's traditional fall sales meeting in late August.

"These are hard times for IBM," said an agency executive with close ties to the computer marketer. "I would not be surprised to see them do some innovating. They're one of the last remaining monoliths.

"I think to try to find a structure where they can be market-focused instead of product-focused is a smart thing."

A former IBM executive said he believes the move could make essential staff reductions easier by

Chilko widow files $20M suit against DDB

By LAURIE FREEMAN

The widow of Robert V. Goldstein, one of five advertising executives who died last year in a rafting accident, has sued DDB Needham Worldwide and its parent, Omnicom Group, for $20 million.

Nancy B. Goldstein, whose husband was VP-advertising at Procter & Gamble Co., and Ronald J. Goodman, co-executor of Mr. Goldstein's $1.5 million estate, filed the wrongful death and damages suit in U.S. District Court in Cincinnati.

The suit alleges that Al Wolfe, then the Chicago-based president of DDB Needham's U.S. division, arranged the Chilko River whitewater rafting trip without warning Mr. Goldstein and the other participants that it could be "exceedingly dangerous."

Attorney Stanley Chesley, who represents Mrs. Goldstein and Mr. Goodman, said he contacted lawyers for three other women widowed by the August 1987 trip (AA, Aug. 10, et seq.) and said two are likely to file suit within the next month.

"This clearly was a DDB Needham-sponsored trip," Mr. Chesley said. "All of the plans were booked and arranged on their stationery."

He declined to identify other Chilko River widows considering legal action against DDB Needham and Omnicom.

Mr. Chesley is widely known for representing surviving families of several disasters, including the MGM Grand hotel fire in Las Vegas, Nev., and the

AGB may resurface; Percy stops service

By VERNE GAY

Another highly touted TV ratings service, R.D. Percy & Co., bit the dust last week, just as word surfaced that AGB's people meters could rise from the ashes.

In an about-face, AGB's U.K. investor, MAI, said its Mediamark Research Inc. unit would revive the service on a three-month trial basis if it can raise $5 million from agency and TV clients.

It was earlier announced that the financially strapped people-meter service would be suspended (AA, Aug. 1).

AGB won't be back in the daily ratings business, however. The plan, to be unveiled this week by MRI Chairman Timothy Joyce, calls for a "single-source" monthly report that would combine AGB's TV ratings with MRI's product research information.

Until it suspended operations, AGB had been sending clients overnight network, cable and syndication TV ratings. The British company had invested $67 million in the service, but failed to make a profit.

"We're cautiously optimistic, very cautiously optimistic" that the plan will be accepted by clients, Mr. Joyce said. "[But] we're not prepared to risk any money" in continuation of the service.

"We've had many, many conversations—with all three networks, the cable networks and ad agencies—and it's clear there is very considerable sentiment that it was a good service," he said. "[They told us] that if it was positioned differently, there might be something there."

The trial service would be up and running by September. It would charge agencies a percentage of their billings, while the major networks would be charged $3.5 million each, the same rate they were charged for the defunct service.

CBS was the only major network client of AGB's original people-meter service.

AGB TV viewing data, which would continue to be collected on a daily basis, would be "married" with MRI's product usage data. A show's average monthly rating would then be compared with the show's specific product usage profile. For example, the book would have an average rating for NBC's "ALF," along with viewers' buying habits.

MRI collects data on a wide variety of products, including car purchases, via 20,000 questionnaires and "diaries." About 70% of MRI's revenues come from magazines.

The news of the possible AGB restart came just as Percy, a 2-year-old ratings service, announced that it had suspended operations.

The Seattle company's shutdown wasn't a complete surprise; Percy has had severe cash flow problems for several weeks.

The shutdown followed a board meeting at which investors said they would no longer support the service. Clients were notified Aug. 4, sources said.

In a statement released Aug. 5, CEO Roger Percy said the company had suspended operations while it

Strike fallout

Advertisers may rethink buys for new TV season

By VERNE GAY
and WAYNE WALLEY

The Big 3 TV networks will start scrambling to produce original fall programs this week, but it may be too late to avert some big problems for advertisers.

Following the resolution of the Writers Guild of America strike, advertisers may begin renegotiating some network buys for October and November—or even pull some money back.

During the recent upfront sales period, TV time was purchased on the originally announced schedules, not the ersatz strike schedules. And even though the strike is over, it's unlikely those original schedules will be completely intact before the start of next year.

"Clients may start pulling back their budgets because they're not getting what they want and there are no alternatives this late in the year," said Rose O'Connell, senior VP-director of network research at J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago.

"I have to buy time in the fourth quarter," said Chuck Bachrach, VP-director of network programming, Western International Media, Los Angeles. "Advertisers can't change their plans. You have to be there and have to get weight during the flight. I have guarantees from the networks, and if I can't find the make-good I want, I can take the credit or take the money and spend it elsewhere."

Many advertisers are believed to have heavied up during the fourth quarter because of expected ratings declines. To meet their brands' ratings goals, they had to overbuy in the upfront market.

"You don't have flexibility" for some clients, said Mel Conner, senior VP-director of network operations, Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton, New York. "Clients have plans that have to be executed in specific weeks. That's why the upfront market was $3.2 billion. A number of advertisers would not have bought upfront if it was a regular season. It's the fright factor."

Bart McHugh, senior VP-director of national radio/TV programming at DDB Needham Worldwide, said that if a client specifically requested a show in an upfront plan that will

Dealers happy with Chrysler

Jeep/Eagle groups plan network blitz

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

HIGHLAND PARK, MICH.—Chrysler Corp. and its new Jeep/Eagle dealer network are putting together the first-ever network TV buys sponsored by dealers.

The estimated $20 million media blitz, created by Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Southfield, will break Sept. 6 as part of a big fall drive to help build the Jeep/Eagle division's passenger car sales.

The campaign is aimed at duplicating the showroom traffic generated by the original $25 million effort that last December and January launched the newly merged Jeep/Eagle division, the new Eagle brand name and the first Eagle car, the Premier.

The unique dealer media buy shows how far C-M-E has come in solidifying its once-precarious hold on the division, which was created when Chrysler bought American Motors Corp., maker of Jeep, a year ago this month.

C-M-E not only held onto the account through the merger (and its own internal changes and merger), but has also begun building an international organization to service Jeep business and has taken on the business of all 28 U.S. Jeep/Eagle dealer ad groups formed by Chrysler.

That consolidation of all dealer associations with a single agency opened up the possibility of dealer groups pooling funds to buy network TV, said Robert Williams, dealer marketing manager for Jeep/Eagle.

Mr. Williams said the division couldn't take full advantage of the first campaign, because many dealers lacked both signage and the right mix of inventory.

Mr. Williams pegged the cost-saving of buying network instead of Ad Age right in the middle of this taste test

By LENORE SKENAZY

After watching Diet Coke and Diet Pepsi slug it out for taste-test supremacy, ADVERTISING AGE decided the time had come to conduct a taste test to end all taste tests.

Pitting the white part of Oreos against the white part of contender Hydrox creme-filled chocolate sandwich cookies, we would determine which sugar-cream center consumers prefer.

To do this, we erected a booth on New York's bustling 42nd Street. All right—we used a card table. But we draped it with a (plastic) tablecloth.

To attract participants, we asked each passer-by to take the Oreo-Hydrox Cookie-Middle Taste Test Challenge, and few could refuse. All right—most refused. But we still got 45 takers, including two TV producers, three homeless men and a couple of kids.

In taking the test, these participants turned their backs while the Godfather's chain splits with Fallon

By SCOTT HUME

After less than eight months together, Godfather's Pizza and Fallon McElligott are parting company.

Indications are the chain is following the hard-pressed restaurant industry's latest trend—a shift to "retail" advertising, emphasizing price and product over image.

"This was a friendly, mutual decision," said a spokesman for Godfather's. "We both agreed that what the company needs right now is a smaller, more retail-oriented agency."

He also said Fallon McElligott wants to "keep its options open in the restaurant category," a position confirmed by agency President Patrick Fallon.

The Minneapolis agency had succeeded J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago, on the $6 million-to-$8 million account.

The move comes as top management of the No. 5 pizza chain, led by President Herman Cain, negotiates final details of a leveraged buyout of Omaha, Neb.-based Godfather's from Pillsbury Co.

Dems target regional ads

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—The Democrats responded to the GOP's national TV campaign late last week, and the placement of their spot indicates regional marketing will be key to media advertising strategies for the 1988 presidential race.

The 30-second spot, which broke Aug. 5, is running only in Texas, and that underscores not only the importance of Texas but the role of targeted marketing in the drives for the White House.

The Republicans' two-week TV blitz, which began July 26, aired on the Big 3 TV networks and five cable channels (AA, Aug. 1).

The Democrats' spot, produced by Ken Swope, a prominent member of presidential nominee Michael Dukakis' ad team, tries to counter the basic themes of the three GOP commercials—that the Republicans are responsible for seven years of growth and prosperity, and wouldn't it be silly to risk a return to economic recession, gas lines and inflation by voting Democratic?

In the Democrats' spot, a group of children play in front of an American flag backdrop as a somber voice notes the doubling of the national debt during the Republican administration. "We need to invest in our children, not borrow from them," the voice-over says.

A spokeswoman at the Democratic National Committee said politics and "niche marketing" determined the placement of the party's first spot of the '88 race.

"It's a matter of deciding where our resources should be spent and when," said Julie Anbender, deputy press secretary of the DNC. "Texas is an important market and what better place to launch our response to Republican demagoguery?

"I think our media this year will be very targeted and aimed at spots where we think it will match the area viewership with our own political strategy."

The committee claims to have about $8 million in contributions so far to organize and help finance generic "Vote Democratic" adver-

Affluent titles soar

By PATRICK REILLY

NEW YORK—Upscale magazines are leading a surprisingly strong performance by consumer books, despite continued concern about softening in national ad spending.

During the first half of 1988, consumer books avoided any dire aftereffects of last year's stock market plunge. According to rankings from Publishers Information Bureau, the top performers of the first half include Conde Nast Publications' Vanity Fair and Meredith Corp.'s Metropolitan Home, magazines in a class whose ad volume was supposed to have been hurt.

"All indications are that luxury and high-end items are selling stronger than ever," said Doug Johnston, publisher of Vanity Fair.

"The predictions scared us going into the year, but problems didn't materialize," said George Green, a group publisher at Hearst Corp., who oversees such upscale books as Town & Country and Connoisseur. "There was a slowdown in some areas, but advertisers concentrated on magazines that identified with the people with money."

Vanity Fair, among the leaders in percentage growth in ad pages, continued a climb that began about three years ago. In the first half of 1988, it had 493 ad pages, a 56.4% increase over the same period in 1987.

Among the top 100 ad revenue-producing magazines, other strong performers were Cable Guide, to 188

MAXWELL'S MARKET SHARES

Pet-food sales sag at food stores

By JOHN C. MAXWELL JR.

Dog days have hit food-store sales in the pet-food industry.

Sales grew just 1% in 1987. A contributing factor is the growing proportion of pet foods sold through other outlets, such as veterinarians and breeders, and the trend in these areas appears to be up.

Slow growth also is related to the decreasing rate of increase in the cat population and the slight decline in the dog population.

Cat food continues to lead dollar tonnage gains, up 1.9% vs. a 0.5% gain for dog food.

Cats continue to be the convenience pet of choice. Households owning cats and the total number of cats increased in 1987, outnumbering the dog population for the third consecutive year.

This, of course, has had positive ramifications for companies with predominantly cat-food entries, such as Ralston Purina Co., Carnation Co. and H.J. Heinz Co., while those that are most involved in dog foods, such as Quaker Oats Co. and Alpo Pet Foods, lost market share.

For example, Carnation (which is owned by Nestle) passed Quaker for the No. 2 position in 1987 pet-food market share.

Part of Heinz's growth was due to the acquisitions of CHB Foods (Vets and Skippy brands) and Champion Valley Farms (Recipe brand). Quaker, despite its acquisition of Gaines Foods, lost share as it took longer than expected to relaunch the Cycle and Gravy Train brands.

Several companies disappeared in 1986 and 1987, and others are likely to fold in the coming years. The top seven companies now account for about 78% of the total volume.

Dog treats were up 10% in dollars compared with a 4% increase in cat treats.

In terms of unit trends, canned dog-food sales in food stores fell 4%, with maintenance products down even more at 9%.

The premium canned-food area was relatively flat. Carnation's Grand Gourmet and Quaker's King Kuts, both introduced in 1987, completed national expansion by yearend.

In one twist reminiscent of the marketing of human foods, Alpo is launching Alpo Lite canned dog food with 25% fewer calories than its regular brand, citing studies showing that 40% of dogs are overweight.

Dry dog food was down about 2%, with premium being up 1% and maintenance products down 2.5%. At least 25% of dry dog food by volume is sold through channels other than grocery stores, while roughly 10% of canned dog food is sold outside grocery stores.

New dry products included Kibbles & Chunks by Purina, Purina O.N.E. and Carnation's Hearty Chunks.

By units, dog treats were up about 1.5%, with biscuits remaining flat.

Moist dog food was down 8% in unit volume; the only product showing a gain was Moist & Meaty from Purina.

Soft-dry dog food was off 20%. The introduction of Tender Chops by Quaker provided some buoyancy to this sagging segment in 1987.

In canned cat foods, the gourmet section—which makes up about 85% of the total—was up 6%; total canned was up 5%. Kal Kan cat food demonstrated superior unit growth in 1987, though Fancy Feast by Carnation showed a higher percentage growth.

Dry cat food was up 3%, with cat treats up 2%. The moist cat-food segment was down 7%.#

L.A. Gear takes off

Spending up to race Reebok, Nike

By MARCY MAGIERA

LOS ANGELES—L.A. Gear is picking up its marketing pace to compete with athletic shoe market leaders Reebok International and Nike.

The 5-year-old marketer of fashion-oriented athletic shoes will boost its ad spending to $20 million to $25 million in 1989, from $12 million this year.

It also signed pop singer Belinda Carlisle to appear in a Christmas season ad campaign and this month will start its most aggressive back-to-school effort—a $4 million campaign showcasing its men's shoes.

The back-to-school campaign, which breaks Aug. 15, is L.A. Gear's first major effort for its men's line.

The TV, print, radio and outdoor campaign continues the marketer's "It wasn't a fantasy" ad theme, introduced two months ago in a spot for women's shoes.

A 60-second commercial intercuts a young man's fantasy basketball game—a one-on-one match on a beachside court, his opponent a beautiful young woman—with his real on-court challenge, a high school championship game.

The campaign, which will air nationally on cable and in 38 spot markets, was created and produced in-house under the direction of L.A. Gear Exec VP-Marketing Sandy Saemann.

The new campaign and future efforts will focus more on function than past ads, which mainly have emphasized L.A. Gear shoes' fashion aspects, Mr. Saemann said.

"We don't want to go down as only a fashion shoe that doesn't perform on the aerobic floor," he said.

L.A. Gear's $72 million in sales in 1987 represents a 2.3% share of the $3.1 billion branded athletic shoe market and makes it the ninth-largest player in the industry, according to Sports Management News, an industry newsletter.

In 1987, Reebok had a 32.2% share with $990 million in sales; Nike had an 18.6% share with sales of $571 million.

L.A. Gear has steadily increased its sales and ad spending since 1985. Its sales grew by more than 200% in 1986 to $36 million and doubled in 1987.

Ad spending grew from an estimated $2 million in 1986 to $7 million last year.

L.A. Gear's first TV spot for its men's line intercuts scenes of a young man's championship basketball game with his fantasy game, played against a beautiful young woman.

Reebok will spend $35 million to $40 million this year, through Chiat/Day, New York. Nike's budget is $34 million, handled by Wieden & Kennedy, Portland, Ore.#

Dailies' discounts fail to stem slide

TORONTO—Although discount rates for national advertisers are growing among U.S. newspapers, they're doing little to offset the downward spiral of national ad dollars for the medium.

Executives meeting at the International Newspaper Advertising & Marketing Executives conclave here said small to midsize newspapers are the most enthusiastic backers of discounts, but most large metropolitan dailies still appear cool to the idea.

Discounts have been promoted for the past two years as an important component of an industrywide effort to lure back national advertisers to newspapers.

National ad rates are often double the local—or retail—rates, and that's been cited as a reason for national advertisers' reluctance to use newspapers. The percentage of national ad spending in newspapers dwindled to less than 6% in 1986, from more than 15% in the 1950s.

A recent survey by the Newspaper Advertising Bureau showed that 63% of 656 newspapers—representing 60% of total U.S. circulation—now offer discounts to national advertisers for repeat ads, in addition to the newspapers' customary volume discounts.

The discounts are a key recommendation of the NAB's Future of Advertising project, a blue-ribbon committee of newspaper chief executives formed in 1985 to address the industry's long-term future.

At last week's conference, several attendees seemed unimpressed by the growing number of papers offering discounts.

"It's a myth to believe that by lowering the price, the national ads will come back," said one executive of a major newspaper who asked not to be identified.

While the NAB's survey suggests a major accommodation by newspapers, executives here contended that many of the papers that have adopted the discounts are small to medium-circulation newspapers whose national business is marginal at best, usually representing no more than 10% of their annual ad revenue.

"We haven't changed our [national] rates, and I don't know of any major paper that has," said Leonard Pomerantz, manager of retail advertising for the Los Angeles Times.

One executive from a major metropolitan daily newspaper said, "It costs no more to run a national ad than a local one. What the price differential represents to many papers is profit, and they aren't about to do away with that profit."

James Doughton, advertising director of the Sarasota (Fla.) Herald-Tribune, said the acceptance of lower national rates is "a lot like skinny-dipping. Everybody wants to do it, but no one wants to be the first to do it."

Mr. Doughton said his paper's national rate is only about 7% above its retail rate.

"It wouldn't be a dramatic change for us," he said. "But I don't see things really changing until the big papers do it. When they do, you will know we have made some progress."

Some large papers have simply made volume discounts more attractive.

"We have a frequency discount for national advertisers that's so low it falls below our retail rate," said Jerome Tilis, president of the Detroit Free Press.

Still, some executives said price isn't the key factor.

"It's not really about the price," said Roger Clapp, president of INAME and ad director of The Richmond (Va.) News Leader and Richmond Times-Dispatch. "It's about whether you have the market the advertiser wants and how easy you make it for the advertiser to buy newspapers."

Of late, national spending levels in newspapers, like spending for retail, haven't been encouraging.

According to NAB's figures for the first quarter of 1988, total newspaper spending was $6.7 billion, an increase of 2.5% over the same period in 1987. National ads rose a sluggish 2.2% to $848 million. But retail ad spending increased only 1% to $3.3 billion, while classified rose 4.6% to $2.6 billion.

NAB also lowered its projections for total newspaper spending in 1988. NAB President Craig Standen told the attendees that the bureau's earlier estimate of $31.7 billion in total U.S. newspaper advertising for 1988, or an 8% increase from 1987, has been revised to $31.3 billion, or 6% growth.#

ad pages, up 41.5%; American Way, American Airlines' in-flight magazine, to 839, up 33%; Metropolitan Home, to 526, up 32%; and Hot Rod, to 584, up 26.5%.

Of the 156 consumer magazines that PIB tracks, 95, or 61%, showed ad page gains. The magazines averaged a growth of 4.4%. That's a better pace than in 1987, when their total ad pages grew little more than 3% for the year.

Ad revenue in the first six months totaled $2.8 billion, an increase of 9.4% from 1987. Ad pages, not revenues, are considered a more precise gauge of the industry's performance, since revenue totals don't reflect discounts off the magazine's official rate card.

Despite the overall good ad performance, some publishers will spend the second half recovering from the first half. For example, Washington Post Co.'s Newsweek has slumped this year after pulling ahead of rival Time in 1987. In the first half of 1988, Newsweek's pages totaled 1,182, down 6% from the same period in 1987. Time was up 1.7% to 1,207 pages.

Newsweek Publisher Gerard Smith said the magazine was "looking to strengthen in the second half," in part because of a special election issue whose ad space is selling well. The issue will appear 36 hours after the polls close on election night and will stay on the newsstand for 10 days.

Each advertiser in the Newsweek issue is being promised space opposite editorial pages.

Publishers and industry observers expect advertising demand to remain relatively stable for the rest of the year.

"Publishers say they are cautiously optimistic," said James Guthrie, exec VP-marketing development at Magazine Publishers of America. "Their second halves will be about the same as their first."

Mr. Guthrie said he's confident that "bellwether" categories such as automotive and apparel, which were strong in the first half, will maintain their volume for the year.

Automotive ads in consumer magazines totaled $428 million, a 19.3% increase from the first six months of 1987, while apparel rose 14% to $154 million.

"I don't hear of any categories that are tightening their belts, and all the critical categories are strong," Mr. Guthrie said.

He said magazine revenues will increase at a higher rate than pages due to recent sharp increases in page rates to cover "uncontrollable" costs of postage and paper.#

AA workshop tackles sports sponsorships

NEW YORK—How do advertisers make big bucks by signing up big-name sports stars? How are the dynamics of sports sponsorship changing? Is there a future for these partnerships?

A five-member panel will be batting out the answers here during the 31st annual ADVERTISING AGE Creative Workshop. Participants in the sports sponsorship session are CBS-TV sportscaster Tim Ryan; agent-attorney Bob Woolf, president of Bob Woolf Associates, a pioneer sports law firm whose clients include basketball's Larry Bird and Otis Birdsong and former NFL star Jim Plunkett; H. Kent "Bud" Stanner, senior corporate VP, International Management Group, Cleveland, a leading full-service sports management company; Barbara Paddock, VP, Manufacturers Hanover Corp.; and Liz McMahon, manager-marketing and communications, 3M.

Panelists also will discuss the future of sports marketing, endorsements, remuneration and impact on creative work.

The workshop will be at the New York Hilton Aug. 21 to 24. For more information, contact AD AGE Communications, 220 E. 42nd St., New York 10017. In New York state, call (212) 210-0[illegible]; outside New York, call 1-800-233-3435. Telex: 64-0207. Fax: (21[illegible]) 867-9716.#

RD keeps eying new titles

By PATRICK REILLY

Reader's Digest Association is expected to make more domestic acquisitions following the shuffling last week of a number of its top publishing executives.

As part of the new assignments, Marcia Lefkowitz, 44, VP and director of U.S. circulation for the 16.5 million-circulation Reader's Digest, will become VP-director of corporate planning and development. She succeeds Rene Isaac, 64, who's retiring.

Ms. Lefkowitz will oversee acquisition activity for the magazine and book publisher and will report to George Grune, chairman-ceo.

"Isaac's put in place our acquisition-minded plans," said a Reader's Digest spokesman. "And Marcia is expected to build on that.

K. Gordon

R. Cole

There is still great interest in other acquisitions."

Under Mr. Grune's leadership, the association has bought three magazines in the past two years: Travel-Holiday, Family Handyman and 50 Plus.

The other changes were made partly in preparation for another senior executive's retirement, Mr. Grune said.

Kenneth Gordon, 51, VP-publisher at Reader's Digest, will become VP-director, international operations, succeeding Richard Hewett, 64, who's retiring. Ronald Cole, 43, will succeed Mr. Gordon as publisher, returning from Montreal, where he was president-ceo, Reader's Digest-Canada.

M. John Bohane, 52, was named to the new post of VP-director of U.S. marketing, from VP-books and music division. Peter Davenport, 48, VP-director of international marketing, gets additional responsibilities as deputy director of international relations.

JWT out of media talks with Ogilvy, Omnicom

NEW YORK—Talks about a three-way media-buying venture involving J. Walter Thompson Co., Ogilvy & Mather and Omnicom Group have broken off, and it appears O&M and Omnicom will forge their own deal by next month.

Burt Manning, JWT chairman-ceo, confirmed the talks are no longer active. He declined to disclose why an agreement couldn't be reached, saying only that more limited and preliminary talks with other agencies are continuing. But sources familiar with the negotiations said JWT "couldn't deliver" several of its overseas offices—including its largest in London. These were unwilling to cooperate with the venture because of separate partnerships or their own strength.

Sources said JWT was the most recent potential partner for O&M and Omnicom, which two weeks ago formally disclosed their talks (AA, Aug. 8).

"We're talking to nobody on a broad worldwide basis," Mr. Manning said. "We're primarily interested in a market-by-market examination of the needs of our clients."

However, some sources believe JWT and parent WPP

Cereal makers feel their oats

Quaker, Gen'l Mills plan $100M in spending

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Quaker Oats Co. and General Mills are committing nearly $100 million for marketing in the second year of their oatmeal war.

The rival hot-cereal marketers will fire off a barrage of new products and ad campaigns later this month.

At stake is a market that grew close to 24% last year, to $606 million, as well as the opportunity to piggyback on consumers' feverish interest in oat bran cereals.

General Mills, which threw down the gauntlet last year by introducing Total Oatmeal as a challenge to longtime market leader Quaker Oats, is adding three new products to the line.

Total Oatmeal Swirlers, rolling national in September, are packs of instant oatmeal accompanied by a separate packet of jam to be squeezed onto the hot cereal.

The Fruit Swirlers pouches contain 50% real fruit and come in three flavors—apple cinnamon, raspberry and strawberry.

General Mills believes Swirlers will enhance oatmeal's appeal for children. "We think there's a lot of play value involved with these," a spokeswoman said.

Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton, New York, handles Total Oatmeal and Swirlers, and the entire campaign is estimated at $35 million.

Ads for the basic oatmeal line break in September; Swirlers will get a separate TV and print campaign later.

In addition to Swirlers, General Mills is adding a sixth flavor—maple brown sugar—and a multiflavor variety pack to its instant oatmeal line.

In the latest example of one-upmanship in this bitter market battle, General Mills now is fortifying Total Oatmeal with 100% of the U.S. recommended daily allowance of 12 vitamins and minerals, up from nine initially.

That's two more than Quaker Extra, an instant oatmeal now rolling national as Quaker's response to Total's nutritional claims (AA, Jan. 4, et seq.).

Extra, tested in Arizona last winter, will be available nationally this month in apples and spice, raisins and cinnamon and regular flavors.

Quaker's print and TV ad support for its oatmeal line begins at the end of this month.

The company is boosting its oatmeal marketing budget by about a third, to nearly $60 million, compared with a

Murdoch buy stacks the racks

By PATRICK REILLY

Rupert Murdoch's acquisition of Triangle Publications will earn him a commanding position on U.S. newsstands, setting up what could be a major battle between his News Corp. and the U.S.' largest magazine publishers.

With the planned $3 billion purchase of Triangle, including the flagship TV Guide founded by owner Walter Annenberg, Mr. Murdoch becomes a formidable competitor in single-copy sales.

TV Guide sells an average of more than 8 million copies on newsstands, or about 47% of its total weekly paid circulation of 17 million. News Corp.'s weekly supermarket tabloid, Star, sells an average of 3.3 million copies on newsstands, about 87% of its total paid circulation of 3.8 million.

"He has made himself a powerful force," said Charles Walker, exec VP-operations, Select Magazines, a major magazine distributor. "Between TV Guide and the Murdoch titles, Murdoch can quarterback a lot of racks," he said, referring to the practice of negotiating favorable positions at supermarket checkouts and newsstands.

The acquisition also will make News Corp. a greater global media force. That, industry observers say, will accelerate Mr. Murdoch's drive to become a single-source resource for international advertisers.

The purchase places Mr. Murdoch in the position of offering attractive ad packages, as wide-reaching as any offered today. In addition to magazines and newspapers on three continents, he owns Fox Broadcasting Co. in the U.S. (see related story on Page 62) and the Sky Channel cable TV service in Europe, soon to be absorbed by a new, larger Sky Television satellite TV company.

More immediately, however, Mr. Murdoch will become the U.S.' largest consumer-magazine publisher in terms of circulation and, as a magazine distributor, will greatly boost his share of the multimillion-dollar industry.

Triangle's national distribution arm handles not only TV Guide, Seventeen and Good Food, but also clients such as Reader's Digest, Newsweek, Soap Opera Digest and Woman's World.

Triangle ranks about sixth among magazine distributors; its titles alone represent about $266 million in total annual retail sales at newsstands and supermarket checkouts.

Duke stages ad am-Bush

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—The first TV spot from Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis' campaign team hit the airwaves in Texas and Florida last weekend, just as the Republican convention was about to steal the national spotlight.

The 60-second commercial is a mixture of color footage from the Democratic convention and b&w stills of the Massachusetts governor at work. The tagline is "For a new era of economic greatness."

Campaign officials denied the two-state launch was intended to blunt the impact of the Republican convention, starting today in New Orleans, or to counter recent polls showing Gov. Dukakis' lead shrinking against Vice President George Bush, who will claim his party's nomination this week.

Dukakis campaign officials previously had said they would withhold their opening ad salvo until Labor Day (AA, July 25), but now it looks like that's when they'll launch their first network spots.

Earlier, the Democratic National Committee broke its first "Vote Democrat" commercial in Texas in response to the Republican National Committee's initial buy (AA, Aug. 8).

The Dukakis spot started airing last Friday evening, campaign officials said, and was scheduled to run through tonight.

The flight might be extended, however, for another day or two.

A campaign official said the spot, which he called a "collaborative effort" of the entire ad team, will air in many markets before Nov. 8.

Conservative ads await Bush's VP pick at convention—P. 60

If there's considerable similarity between Gov. Dukakis' ads and those cranked out by the DNC, that's because many of the same ad and political talents are working for both.

The DNC formed a new management structure for the fall, named Campaign '88, that includes representatives from major organizations such as the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, Democratic Governors Association and Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

Paul Bograd, a New York communications adviser who will oversee Campaign '88's media team, declined to identify who'll be creating the party's spots.

But a source rattled off a list of names that includes practically the entire Dukakis ad team: political advertising consultants Ken Swope (who produced the first spot), Scott Miller, Dan Payne and Michael Kaye; and key Madison Avenue imports Ed McCabe, former partner in Scali, McCabe, Sloves, and Malcolm McDougall, vice chairman at Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor.

Other creative input is expected from people who've offered their services to the Dukakis team—Tom Amico and Jim Proimos, a copywriting team from Smith Burke & Azzam, Baltimore; Mike Hughes, vice chairman-creative director at the Martin Agency, Richmond, Va.; and Bill Tragos, chairman of TBWA, New York.

Another similarity to the Dukakis ad team, Mr. Bograd said, is the division of the party's ad team into a unit made up of political consultants—to produce quick-response ads in answer to the Republican Party's generic commercials—and a strategic team using ad personnel to develop thematic messages.

The DNC's ad budget is expected to be several million dollars.#

High-flying videos get lift from tie-ins

By WAYNE WALLEY

LAS VEGAS, NEV.—Some major national advertisers are tying yearend holiday promotions to the $6 billion home video industry.

Coca-Cola USA, Pepsi-Cola USA, McDonald's Corp., Procter & Gamble Co. and Ralston Purina Co. have struck sweepstakes or rebate deals co-promoting their products with what's become one of the nation's hottest gift categories.

Those attending the Video Software Dealers Association convention here last week expect record fourth-quarter video sales, fueled by the release of top titles such as "Cinderella" and "E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial."

But while video companies have doubled and tripled ad budgets again this year, many believe the unprecedented influx of tie-ins with major product advertisers will push sales further.

Various programs in the works could yield tens of millions of dollars in additional national media exposure in the coming months.

Walt Disney Home Video, which topped all video companies by selling 7.5 million cassettes during its Christmas promotion last year, has been the most aggressive in seeking promotional partners this year. It has signed deals with P&G, Coca-

Levine poised to capture lead in Gallo review

By MARCY MAGIERA

E&J Gallo Winery will start airing new spots this fall for its table wines, and if the campaign is successful, Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver could become agency of record for a significant piece of Gallo's $75 million account.

Gallo has assigned creative projects for its brands to various agencies but hasn't signed a contract with any shop since Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco, resigned the entire account last December.

Levine, the New York shop that created the new campaign for table wines, has been working on Gallo business since December, along with John Crawford Creative, San Francisco; Dailey & Associates, Los Angeles; and Della Femina, McNamee WCRS, Los Angeles.

Sources close to the agency review say it's likely Levine will be the first shop to achieve agency-of-record status.

In addition to the table wine effort, Gallo will introduce later this month a tropical version of its Bartles & Jaymes wine cooler.

B&J Tropical, Gallo's fifth wine cooler flavor and its third introduced this year, is a direct response to category leader Jos. E. Seagram & Sons' Seagram's Island Tropics, introduced in February, and Miller Brewing Co.'s Matilda Bay cooler, another tropical entry.

Spots for the new cooler flavor were produced by John Crawford Creative, which has done about 15 B&J commercials since March.

Gallo is also trying to exploit a trend started by its competitors in the sparkling wine segment, where it has seen sales of its low-price Andre champagne, still the No. 1 brand, eroded by midprice brands.

This fall, Gallo will introduce Tott's champagne, priced at about $6 to compete with Guild Wineries & Distilleries' Cook's champagne and Freixenet USA's Cordon Negro Brut.

It's believed Gallo will support the Tott's introduction with an ad campaign created by Riney as the agency's last assignment, and one produced by Della Femina.

Gallo is also developing a third brand, priced between Tott's and Andre. John Noble Advertising, Tiburon, Calif., which recently dropped out of the Gallo review, was working on creative for the as-yet-unnamed brand.#

tion, is helping to build interest in private stock beer among other restaurateurs, Mr. Smith says. In some cases, the brewpubs may become clients if they cannot keep up with demand or want to expand to off-premises distribution.

Huber also makes Berghoff beer, the namesake lager sold by the landmark Chicago restaurant. The restaurant markets it to selected liquor and grocery store chains in Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana.

"The Berghoff began as a brewery in Fort Wayne, Ind., in 1887," says Bill Marquardt, VP of the restaurant and related enterprises. "But because of ordinances designed to protect local breweries, it couldn't sell its product in Chicago. So, the family decided to open a saloon in town to sell its own beer. We sold the beer for a nickel and gave away sandwiches."

The food eventually became more important than the beer; when Berghoff pot roast and wiener schnitzel began outselling suds in 1954, the brewery was sold.

However, the restaurant wanted to keep up the tradition of making its own beer and selected Huber as the contract brewer in the late 1950s, Mr. Marquardt says.

Huber makes about 7,000 barrels of the Bavarian-style beer to be sold both in bottles and on draft. The Berghoff maintains its own sales force to market the beer to retail chains; about 3,600 barrels are sold in Chicago.

The restaurant promotes the product with a $100,000 radio and print advertising campaign managed in-house. The restaurant also contracts with Chicago-based Clover Club for a draft root beer, a product that may also make it to retailers' shelves in the near future, Mr. Marquardt says.

Not all contract brews are originally meant for on-premises sale. Specialty breweries, sometimes called microbreweries, are on the rise, but few small companies can afford to invest in the fixed assets necessary to make beer (see related story on Page S-1).

"So, they devise the recipe and handle the marketing and we make the beer," Huber's Mr. Smith says.

Huber makes beer for several microbreweries including Ambier Brewing Co., Milwaukee, Telluride Brewing Co., Telluride, Colo., and Boca Brewing Co., Boca Raton. Fla.

At last year's Great American Beer Festival in Denver, two of the brews, Telluride and Boca, won tasting awards, an honor Huber shares.

"Their recipes won the awards, but our care and quality control was a factor," Mr. Smith says. "The great advantage of contract brewing is that you don't have to own a brewery to be a master brewer."

We impressed Rand McNally who named the Research Triangle cities the third most liveable place in the country.

We continue to impress the highest number of Ph.D.'s per capita of any place in the nation, enough to make them want to live here.

We impressed the U.S. Census Bureau as one of the fastest growing areas in the U.S. with one of the lowest unemployment rates anywhere.

We've also impressed a lot of local, regional and national advertisers with great circulation and a lower CPM than broadcast media in North Carolina's Triangle.

break down consumer stereotypes—thinking that only white wines can be served with fish—and customers learn to drink what they like," says Rhea Ike, winery manager.

Only a few other wineries have restaurants: Wiederkehr has its Swiss-cuisine Weinkeller Restaurant at its Arkansas winery, Chateau Souverain and Topolos at Russian River operate restaurants in Sonoma County, Culbertson has just opened Cafe Champagne at its new Temecula winery north of Los Angeles, Napa Valley's V. Sattui has its deli and picnic tables, and several small wineries in the Midwest offer some food selection.

"Nearly 500 new wineries have opened in this country over the last 20 years, but only a handful have added a restaurant to their facilities," says Lou Gomberg of the Gomberg, Fredrikson Report, an industry newsletter. "Running a restaurant is a highly specialized field, and it's markedly different than running a winery.

"I don't see too many wineries opening restaurants, but they can achieve the same result by encouraging people to bring their own food, and picnic on winery grounds," Mr. Gomberg says.

Despite the difficulties of operating and managing restaurants, offering food on premise is an effective way for wineries to promote wine as a food beverage, and as an American staple, eventually.

"It's an idea that is catching on," says Ms. Rodeno.

The trade and retail community are heavily lobbied by Dole and Rogers. Many of them meet Rogers at concerts or promotions—private concerts are sometimes given for primary customers.

Before each concert, up to 20 fans are invited backstage to view commercials, including outtakes.

In September, Dole plans include a luau with consumer prizes of a trip for two to Hawaii, a luau at home or a cookbook.

In addition, cents-off coupons and recipes are geared to draw in potential consumers in national Sunday magazine ads and point-of-sale displays. ■

GOP's Quayle quandary

What image now?

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

New Orleans—The controversy surrounding Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle may force the party's image-makers to stress a regional strategy for George Bush's running mate rather than a strong national role.

This potential problem comes as both Republican and Democratic strategists gear up for possibly the nastiest political advertising in recent presidential campaign history.

Even without the extra ingredient of controversy surrounding Sen. Quayle, the contest between Vice President Bush and Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis already had all the earmarks of a bruising battle.

"I think the campaign is going to be tough and feature a lot of comparisons," said Ed Ney, former chairman at Young & Rubicam and now serving as an advertising adviser to the Bush campaign.

Vice President George Bush celebrates with running mate Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana before the controversy broke.

But political analysts agree that presidential candidate George Bush's advisers have lost a key option in their campaign arsenal because of questions about whether Sen. Quayle (R., Ind.) tried to avoid the Vietnam War by joining the National Guard.

Any thought of using the pro-military Quayle in a campaign emphasizing his belief in a "hawkish" U.S. military has been seriously wounded, these analysts say.

Hedrick Smith, former Moscow bureau chief for The New York Times and now a political analyst, believes the Bush campaign's ability to use Sen. Quayle as its military point man melted with the news that family influence secured a National Guard deferment for Sen. Quayle in 1969.

"The strategy of using him as a 'hawk' for George Bush just went right out the window," said a Republican media adviser who agreed to talk on condition of anonymity. But "he's still good from the standpoint of being young and

Raisins on his mind

A Claymation rendition of Ray Charles, belting out a bluesy version of "I Heard It Through the Grapevine," finally hits TV late next month.

The newest Will Vinton Productions commercial, called "Raisin Ray," was originally intended to make its debut in March (AA, March 7) but was saved for use during the important fall selling season for raisins.

The California Raisin Advisory Board is boosting its 1988-89 advertising and promotional spending by 25% to an estimated $10 million; $8.5 million of that is earmarked for media ads.

In addition to TV, the board will run its first magazine ad, set for September women's service titles. "The California Raisins are cool, they're hip," said Bob Phinney, the board's director of advertising and promotion. "Print lets us show ways to use raisins without bastardizing the characters." Foote, Cone & Belding, San Francisco, is the agency.

The raisin characters currently are on a six-week national promotional tour that will end Sept. 22 in Los Angeles at a Ray Charles concert (see related photo on Page 58).

Media ties under fire from P&G

By MICHAEL VAN OS
and KEVIN COTE

Procter & Gamble Co. is questioning the centralized media-buying operations due to start this fall in Europe.

In the first sign that the giant marketer is concerned about consolidated media buying among competing agencies, P&G executives have asked its agencies planning to participate in a new media-buying consortium in the Netherlands to justify those moves.

P&G is asking the Dutch branches of D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, Leo Burnett Co. and Saatchi & Saatchi to guarantee that confidential P&G information will stay confidential and to explain what advantages P&G will gain from the new setup.

So far, however, P&G isn't questioning Saatchi & Saatchi's plans to consolidate the media-buying operations of its three wholly owned agencies in the U.K.

At the same time, some European publishers are considering dealing with advertisers directly, bypassing the media-buying groups altogether.

Much of the attention is focusing on the Netherlands, where the

New Sears theme touts value

Will specialization effort suffer?

By KATE FITZGERALD and DAVID SNYDER

Sears, Roebuck & Co., ending a pivotal summer of diversification, is about to introduce a new umbrella ad theme.

"Sears: Your money's worth and a whole lot more" soon will replace nationally the 5-year-old theme, "There's more for your life at Sears."

The No. 1 retailer has been testing the new line in newspaper ads in New York and Los Angeles (AA, May 16) and has used it in Canada since 1980.

Some industry observers said the implementation of this new mass-merchandiser positioning statement could undercut Sears' efforts to create specialized retailing departments with their own identities (see related story on Page 50).

"Sears is having a hard time doing two major things at once," said Sid Doolittle, a partner at McMillan/Doolittle, a Chicago retail consultancy. "It needs to develop special and unique advertising for all of its new specialty areas—especially Brand Central and McKids—but instead it's going back to concentrate on its umbrella ad slogan.

"This is an Ogilvy & Mather [Sears' agency] problem as much as it is a Sears problem."

Still, Mr. Doolittle conceded the new theme is an improvement.

"Neither slogan says a whole lot; neither one makes a commitment," he said. "Sears is acknowledging that lower prices are more important with this slogan, but people are getting fed up with such advertising. They know it's a cliche, more than a guarantee of anything."

"The new slogan is more specific," said Paul Koenigsberg, VP-management strategy at Management Horizons, a consulting group in Columbus, Ohio. "It's evocative of general merchandise that's attractive on an everyday basis. Neither slogan says much, but the old slogan was really missing a why or a how. Even though this one is watered down, it's a much more powerful message."

Sources said the new theme will make its debut this fall, but neither Sears nor O&M would say when or how the new theme will appear.

Sears has been steadily cutting back its ad spending for the past few years, putting more of its budget into local newspaper advertising.

Although its TV spots are usually tagged with "There's more for your life at Sears," most of its print ads don't use the umbrella slogan.

The new slogan being integrated into ads by O&M is not a new one. "Your money's worth and a whole lot more" reportedly was developed eight years ago by the Toronto office of Foote, Cone & Belding for Sears' Canadian division.

Michael Bozic, chairman of Sears Merchandise Group, apparently liked that theme better. Mr. Bozic was head of Sears' Canada operations in 1984 and 1985 before he returned to Sears' headquarters in Chicago.

By adopting the new theme, Sears apparently hopes to show it can keep up with specialty merchandisers that emphasize price and value.

But the slogan also demonstrates Sears' dilemma in trying to be all things to all people through its department stores, while launching dozens of new specialty retailing departments.#

Kodak tries to pare its Olympic ad buy

By PATRICK McGEEHAN

Eastman Kodak Co. and other advertisers want to unload part of their Summer Olympic ad buys on NBC, but the network won't comply.

Kodak last week said it asked NBC to let it out of some Olympic time so it could shift ad spending to later in the year.

Sources said Coca-Cola Co. is among the other companies that have made similar requests of NBC.

Coca-Cola officials declined to comment.

Because NBC won't release Kodak, the marketer is looking to sell the time to another advertiser or swap it for time later in the fourth quarter.

NBC-TV breaks new promos; Seagram's tie-in scores—P. 74

NBC is citing its revenue-sharing agreement with the Seoul Olympic Organizing Committee as the reason it won't let the companies out of their commitments, some of which were made as far back as 1986.

The network said its TV rights deal with the committee calls for NBC to share its ad revenues when sales reach certain levels.

Although NBC—which projects a large profit from the Games—doesn't expect to reach the first revenue-sharing trigger, the arrangement requires the network to try, said Bert Zeldin, VP-Olympic sales.

The first trigger is well over $600 million in ad sales. Last week, NBC had sold a little more than 95% of its Olympic inventory and was still about $100 million below that level.

"If we let somebody out, we have to report it to the Koreans," Mr. Zeldin said. "If somebody committed to something, especially on an exclusivity basis, and you let them out of it, you can't go to their competitors [as replacement advertisers] because [their] money's already spent."

Kodak, which bought category exclusivity on NBC for its film, batteries and Colorwatch film processing for an estimated $20 million, wanted out of several million dollars worth of Olympic time. The company is "rearranging our budgets," said Roger Morrison, Kodak's VP-media and communications policy.

Mr. Morrison said NBC's refusal was consistent with "what they have told us all along."

Kodak simply doesn't need as much network time in September and October as it has bought, he said.

J. Walter Thompson USA, New York, is the primary agency for Kodak products.#

National rollout seen

Michelob goes Dry

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Anheuser-Busch will spend heavily to establish Michelob Dry, a new beer it sees as an import fighter and a means of reviving its only flagging brand line.

The world's largest brewer hopes the excitement and publicity generated by the U.S. arrival of the tarter-tasting beer will give Michelob some of the same boost the Spuds MacKenzie character gave its Bud Light among young drinkers.

Four Japanese brewers have plans to bring dry beer brands to the U.S. (AA, Aug. 15). Since being introduced in Japan in March 1987, dry beers have grown to represent 39% of all Japanese beers sold.

A-B, the first major U.S. brewer to market a dry beer, will introduce Michelob Dry in five markets Sept. 1. National distribution will follow rather quickly, the brewer said.

The beer, packaged in long-neck bottles, will be distributed initially in Fresno and Santa Barbara, Calif.; Dayton, Ohio; Houston; and Tallahassee, Fla.

DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, which handles other Michelob brands, also has the Dry version.

Earlier this year, A-B halted most of its separate advertising for Michelob Light and said it would use the $32 million-plus in savings to

Cal Cooler puts the heat on

New moves in weak market

By PATRICIA WINTERS
and MARCY MAGIERA

Brown-Forman Co.'s California Cooler hopes to light a match to the cooler market this fall with a line extension that's served hot.

The cooler market, and Cal Cooler, could use some warming up.

"The market definitely is down," said Gale Zelitsky, sales promotion president for the 305-unit Foremost liquor store chain. "The only thing I know is that Bartles & Jaymes, Seagram and Matilda Bay are selling. . . . and the rest are doing nothing."

The market was down about 2 million gallons from January through May, according to industry consultants Gomberg, Fredrikson & Associates. In 1987, the wine market was at 122 million gallons. For the four weeks ended June 18, the market was down 0.5% compared with year-ago sales, according to A.C. Nielsen Co.'s ScanTrak data.

The dogfight in the battle between Jos. E. Seagram & Sons and E&J Gallo Winery is reaching a new level, as analysts disagree on just who's leading the category: Gallo's Bartles & Jaymes or Seagram's Coolers.

In 1987, Seagram, with a 25% share, inched past Gallo's 24% to claim category leadership.

The July and August figures aren't in yet, and observers give mixed reports on the state of the brands.

The success of Miller Brewing Co.'s Matilda Bay has been a big surprise. Introduced a year ago when the market was going flat, the brand is now jockeying for position as the No. 4 cooler and is likely to edge out Canandaigua Wine Co.'s Sun Country wine cooler.

Gomberg Fredrikson said Matilda Bay had a 7% share at the end of May, and Market Watch, a trade magazine, estimated that sales of Matilda Bay will increase 233% this year, to 4 million 9-liter cases.

Beverly Jurkowski, public relations manager for Matilda Bay, attributed the brand's growth to its Australian ad theme, created by J. Walter Thompson USA, New York.

"Australian things are still a very hot fad and there is a desire to do things Australian," she said.

Matilda Bay will now have to battle California Cooler, the brand that originated the category but fell from leadership two years ago and has seen declining market share ever since.

Gomberg Fredrikson ranked California Cooler No. 3, with 12% of the market, though it has slipped from 18% in 1987 despite new packaging, a reformulation and a new flavor, Wild Cherry Splash.

"We're holding our own; we're not gaining, but we're not losing anymore than they [competitors] are," said Mimi Zinniel, California Cooler brand manager.

B-F will start shipping Spiced Apple at the end of September to capture fall and winter sales. Although the bulk of cooler sales are in summer, Ms. Zinniel said California Cooler sold as many coolers in November-December as it did in March-April.

The new flavor—California Cooler's sixth—can be consumed hot or cold and tastes like apple cider, she said. It will get radio and trade advertising and promotional support from Chiat/Day, San Francisco.

California Cooler's segmentation indicates where the market is heading.

Canandaigua, whose sales are said to be down dramatically again this year from its 1987 level of 5.7 million cases, is planning to introduce a low-calorie wine cooler sweetened with NutraSweet, for example.

Although the cooler market's key summer selling period is nearly over, industry observers are still disagreeing about category sales, which some say may be up slightly at best. Others, however, predict a decline of as much as 10% to 25%. Market Watch predicted a growth of 2% to 5%.

Eileen Fredrikson, Gomberg Fredrikson partner, said market shares for Bartles & Jaymes and Seagram's Coolers both were in the mid-30% range, "virtually neck-and-neck, with Gallo on top."

But Frank Walters, research director for M. Shanken Communications, which publishes Market Watch, disagreed. He said that while the leaders were virtually even, it was "too early to tell" how things will shake out by late summer.#

Avia ads say shoo to non-athletes

By MARCY MAGIERA

Avia Athletic Footwear doesn't want you to buy its shoes—unless you're a hard-core jock or want to be one.

Content to let parent Reebok International court the masses, Avia, a fast-growing No. 5 in the $3.1 billion branded athletic-shoe market, will try a little reverse psychology to boost its 4.9% market share.

"For Athletic Use Only" is the bold stamp that will appear on everything from ads to shoe boxes, apparel and the Avia corporate letterhead, starting in February.

Even the new Avia catalog is sealed with a bright red sticker warning: "If you're after frilly, faddish shoes, open someone else's catalog."

This may seem a foolish approach, considering that about 80% of the athletic shoes bought in the U.S. each year are used mainly for streetwear. But that's where the not-so-subtle psychology comes in.

Avia's banking on the fact that, human nature being what it is, people will yearn to buy the shoes just because you tell them not to.

The idea is that jocks will buy Avias because they're serious about sports and the shoes are serious sport shoes, and "wannabes" will buy Avias because jocks buy them.

That's "want-to-be." Someone who wants to be a jock, someone who dresses in workout gear and high-ticket athletic shoes, but doesn't sweat.

"It's the perfect strategy for our core customer [serious athletes], and, if executed correctly, it will be very effective with the non-core as well," said Avia VP-Marketing Jim Solomon.

The company next year will hike its marketing budget 42% to $34 million. About $20 million will go for the campaign.

Mr. Solomon declined to share specifics about creative for the effort, but he did say the company nixed a campaign showing fat, slovenly people as examples of who shouldn't buy Avias.

That campaign was created by Borders, Perrin & Norrander, Portland, Ore., as part of its winning pitch for the Avia business in April. The agency succeeded Ketchum Advertising, San Francisco.#

New shop gets Godfather's

By SCOTT HUME

Godfather's Pizza quite literally selected a new agency last week as it assigned creative responsibility to Buckley/DeCerchio, a shop formed to take on the account.

Bryan Buckley and Tom DeCerchio leave the creative department of Chiat/Day, New York, to open their agency with a $6 million-to-$8 million account (though it'll work on a fee basis).

Evans/Kraft, Seattle, was assigned media buying. Both parts of the account previously were at Fallon McElligott, Minneapolis.

Mr. DeCerchio, 28, is no stranger to Godfather's, having served as copywriter on the account when it was handled by J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago. Soon after he and Joe Sciarotta, his art director partner, jumped to W.B. Doner & Co., Southfield, Mich., Godfather's put the account up for review (AA, Dec. 7).

Earlier this year, Mr. DeCerchio joined Chiat/Day, where fellow copywriter Mr. Buckley, 24, had worked since 1986. Mr. Buckley began at Doyle Dane Bernbach, New York, in 1985, leaving there with Roy Grace to help create Grace & Rothschild.

"We talked with about three agencies, but Tommy did some work for us [at JWT] that was just outstanding," said Godfather's VP-Marketing Charles Henderson. "We've followed him and been interested in him since he left there."

Mr. Henderson said that though Godfather's approached Mr. DeCerchio about forming an agency to take on the account, the Omaha, Neb.-based pizza chain has no financial stake in Buckley/DeCerchio.

"We knew he was interested in maybe going out on his own, so we pursued it, and I think we'll both benefit," Mr. Henderson said. "We need advertising tightly focused on our main selling points of quality of taste. But since we're the No. 5 pizza chain, we also need something that's a little bit different, that's got an edge. Those are Tommy's strong points. And since we're their only client, we'll get all the attention."#

'Modern Maturity' wins top spot in circulation

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Modern Maturity has zoomed past TV Guide and Reader's Digest to become the largest paid-circulation magazine in the U.S.

It took the title with a circulation gain of more than 1 million subscribers this year, according to the latest Audit Bureau of Circulations FAS-FAX report.

The publication of the American Association of Retired Persons, whose subscription cost is included in AARP's $5 membership fee, saw circulation average 17,924,783 for the six months ended June 30, a 12.1% increase from a year earlier.

At the end of December, Modern Maturity's 16,734,801 circulation put it second, behind TV Guide's 16,939,260 circulation and just ahead of Reader's Digest's 16,566,650, and its growth was spawning imitators (AA, June 13).

Modern Maturity's rate base is 17.4 million now. Gail Schwandner, special assistant to the director of AARP's publications division, said the magazine will delay any increase in rate base till the start of 1989.

Reader's Digest's 0.7% circulation rise to 16,964,226, due to a 25% boost in single-copy sales, was enough to help the publication eclipse TV Guide for the first time in a year, the Audit Bureau reported.

TV Guide, being sold to Rupert Murdoch's News Corp. (AA, Aug. 15), saw circulation slide 2.1% to 16,917,545 as a 3% subscription increase was more than outweighed by a 7.6% drop in single-copy sales.

In January, TV Guide raised its cover price to 75¢ from 60¢. The magazine has a rate base of 16.4 million and will raise rates 5% effective with the Sept. 3 issue.

The Audit Bureau also reported spotty results for the Seven Sisters women's service magazines.

While Meredith Corp.'s Better Homes & Gardens and Hearst Corp.'s Redbook showed circulation gains, other magazines reported decreases. Better Homes rose 0.7% to 8,152,478, mostly due to a 6.6% increase in single-copy sales. Redbook, down 1.9% in subscriptions, was up 1.7% overall to 4,007,564 because of a 17.7% increase in single-copy sales.

But the New York Times Group's Family Circle saw circulation drop 1.6% overall to 5,900,794 as a hefty 131.4% increase in subscriptions was balanced by a 20.1% drop in single-copy sales. Family Circle is slated to raise its cover price from 99¢ to $1.09 on Oct. 11.

Charles Townsend, senior VP-publisher, said the single-copy decline was part of a conscious effort to provide a more consistent circulation and reduce sharp swings. Family Circle cut its rate base last fall to 6 million, then to 5.7 million in January. The magazine will cut its rate base to 5.5 million effective in January but keep its current rates, effectively increasing its cost per thousand.

McCall's, which saw the biggest circulation decline among the Seven Sisters—a drop of 3.8% to 5,146,554—lost both single-copy sales and subscriptions. The changes resulted from an increase in subscription rates and McCall's desire to move closer to its 5 million rate base, said Nancy Joseph, circulation general manager.

Woman's Day showed a 2.4% drop in circulation overall to 5,138,280, despite a 40.8% increase in subscriptions.

Hearst's Good Housekeeping dropped 2.9% to 5,027,865. Single-copy sales dropped 10%, more than offsetting a 0.5% subscription increase. Similarly, Meredith's Ladies' Home Journal dropped 0.6% to 5,013,761 as a 0.4% increase in subscriptions was offset by a 4.6% decline in single-copy sales.

Other women's magazines also reported spotty results. Cosmopolitan's circulation rose 5.2% to 3,013,759 as both subscriptions and single-copy sales went up. But Glamour saw circulation decline 5.2% to 2,130,148.

On the men's side, Playboy saw circulation fall 7.3% to 3,405,786 as a 32.2% drop in single-copy sales more than balanced a circulation increase. Magazine officials, however, said record sales of a Vanna White pictorial in the May 1987 issue may have accounted for the differences. Penthouse saw circulation drop 8.8% to 2,053,080, led by a 9.3% decline in single-copy sales.

The latest report had good news for the news magazines, with Time, Newsweek and U.S. News & World Report all reporting circulation increases. Time was up 0.8% to 4,737,912 despite a 7% decline in newsstand sales. Newsweek grew 4.2% to 3,315,369 as both newsstand sales and subscriptions increased. U.S. News reported a 0.6% increase to 2,365,930 as subscriptions and single-copy sales also rose.

Time Inc.'s other publications also did well. Life reported what may be its strongest subscription circulation since the 1950s, with subscriptions increasing 18.1% to nearly 1.2 million and circulation advancing 10.8% to 1,866,042. People increased 13.3% to 3,277,839. Supermarket tabloids National Enquirer and Star both showed circulation dropping, with the Enquirer down 3.5% and the Star down 3.2%.

The report traditionally ignores Sunday magazines such as Parade, distributed free with newspapers. Parade's weekly circulation is put at 32,648,000.#

Murdoch faces 'TV Guide' ad battle

By IRA TEINOWITZ

If some of the nation's largest newspapers have their way, Rupert Murdoch will be buying a TV Guide that faces increased competition for the ad dollars of the broadcast networks and program suppliers.

Tribune Media Services last week announced it will join Western States Associates to create TV Week Network and sell space in 33 newspaper TV magazines.

In so doing, Tribune Media made little secret that cutting into TV Guide's ad revenues from program suppliers is the venture's main goal.

"We want to provide an alternative to TV Guide," said Robert Reed, president of Tribune Media Services, a unit of Tribune Co. "Our mission from the newspapers is that they want us to go after broadcast category advertising, the networks, cable networks and syndicators.

"We estimate that there is $65 million to $70 million [in broadcast advertising] in TV Guide and none of that money is spent in newspapers at the national level."

The 33 newspapers in 28 markets include Tribune Co.'s Chicago Tribune, New York Daily News, Orlando (Fla.) Sentinel and Fort Lauderdale (Fla.) Sun-Sentinel. Among the other papers are the Los Angeles Times, Philadelphia Inquirer, Boston Globe, Minneapolis Star-Tribune and Detroit News, as well as papers in Houston; Dallas; San Francisco; San Jose, Calif.; St. Louis; Kansas City, Mo.; and Cincinnati.

Mr. Reed said TV Week Network will provide a central buying and billing source for advertisers.

He estimated 50% of the TV households are in the top 28 markets and that newspapers reach about 40% of the households, against much less for TV Guide.

TV Week Network will charge $70,000 for a page ad in the papers and plans to sell only b&w advertising. The network won't pitch package-goods marketers. That "is out of our purview and range of responsibilities," he said.

Mr. Reed said the network has been under consideration for more than a year and suggested the announcement's timing, less than a week after Mr. Murdoch's News Corp. announced plans to spend $3 billion to buy Triangle Publications, publisher of TV Guide, was coincidental.

The original announcement had been delayed by the Writers Guild of America strike.

Martin Singerman, president of News America Publishing, said through a spokesman that the newspaper TV magazines don't match up to the editorial or circulation quality of TV Guide.

He said TV Guide offers longer descriptions of programs, better quality paper, color advertising and a readership that's paying money specifically to see the magazine.

There's no guarantee that newspaper buyers actually read the paper's TV magazine, he said.

The announcement of the competition was the second piece of bad news for Mr. Murdoch last week.

New Audit Bureau of Circulations figures show TV Guide, which raised its cover price in January from 60¢ to 75¢, declined 2.1% in U.S. circulation during the first half of the year, dropping to third place (see related story above).

TV Guide's ad pages were down 2.6% during the first six months of 1988, compared with a year earlier, though revenues rose 1.9%, according to the Publishers Information Bureau.

TV Week Network, which will start selling advertising immediately, will use five standardized formats, depending on a magazine's size. It will also offer advertisers the opportunity of buying just the Nielsen Market Research overnight markets or other combinations.#

Greyhound takes lead in ad productivity

By R. CRAIG ENDICOTT

Greyhound Corp. outsprinted Capital Cities/ABC to claim the top spot in advertising productivity growth among leading national advertisers for the first quarter of 1988.

The consumer products marketer pushed its ad productivity to $102.74, up 33.2% from the first quarter of 1987. That percentage growth outdistanced Cap Cities/-ABC, which recorded a 31.8% growth in ad productivity.

Ad productivity, a critical measurement in determining the effectiveness of a marketing strategy, is derived from U.S. revenues generated by $1 of advertising.

This quarterly tabulation involves the monitoring of leading advertisers' sales and media advertising figures by ADVERTISING AGE. The first report in this new series appeared in the May 23 issue.

This time, Greyhound and Cap Cities/ABC emerged from a field narrowed to 15 contenders, each of which produced year-to-year gains in three criteria—measured media advertising, U.S. sales and U.S. revenues per $1 of advertising or ad productivity.

Only those with growth in all three criteria qualify for the top spot. The company with the biggest percentage gain in advertising productivity is crowned the winner.

Greyhound's ad productivity growth was largely sales-driven as the company posted U.S. revenues of $755.6 million, a 37.6% increase over first quarter 1987.

The company experienced growth in virtually all divisions, but first-quarter sales also benefited from the November acquisitions of Dobbs International Services, an in-flight catering company, and Dobbs House airport concessions, as well as the midyear 1987 buyout of North American Transit, the bus division of General Motors Corp.

Advertising from the 10 monitored media in this report increased 3.3% at Greyhound, which spent more than 80% of its measured media on its Dial Corp. lineup of toiletries and household products. That lineup includes Dial and Tone soaps, Purex and Brillo soap pads.

Also, Dial has acquired the household products business of U.S. Borax & Chemical Corp., marketer of Borateem dry bleach, Boraxo powdered hand soap and 20 Mule Team Borax.

Six of the 18 segments categorizing the 100 companies surveyed—chemicals & petroleum; retail; soaps & cleaners; wine, beer & liquor; tobacco; and miscellaneous—recorded gains in media advertising, U.S. sales and ad productivity over the year-earlier period when totals of their components were averaged.

Soaps & cleaners, a category highly influenced by Greyhound, netted an average $39.14 in ad productivity for the first quarter, a 13.4% gain over the year-earlier quarter that gave it the largest increase among categories.

Two other participants in that category, Clorox Co. and Colgate-Palmolive Co., each met with declines in ad productivity between the two quarters, while a third, Procter & Gamble Co., showed an ad productivity gain of 1.5%.

Airlines had the greatest positive percentage swing of 29.5% in ad productivity in the comparable quarters, a gain influenced by a 17% dip in advertising over the prior-year period.

Trans World Airlines was the only participant in the category to register a gain in advertising, while all but UAL Corp. showed growth in U.S. sales.

Greyhound also was one of 57

Counting on ethnic agencies

Census bureau aims to fill gaps

By JANET MEYERS

WASHINGTON—The U.S. Bureau of the Census is the latest government advertiser to use targeted, regionalized advertising and promotion to get its message across.

For the 1990 census, the bureau for the first time has hired black and Hispanic ad agencies (AA, Aug. 8), stepped up its local corporate sponsorship programs and adopted the non-traditional communications practices the U.S. Immigration & Naturalization Service used in its recent amnesty program.

The census bureau plans to spend $73 million on advertising and promotion for the 1990 census, more than triple its 1980 spending of $21 million.

That spending includes salaries of full and part-time regional promotion staff, who will solicit corporate sponsorships for poster contests and parades to encourage people to return census forms.

The Advertising Council again will be used for a public service campaign, with national creative work by Ogilvy & Mather, New York.

The national campaign will use the theme "Put yourself in the picture."

Mingo Group and Castor Spanish International will create ads targeting black and Hispanic audiences.

The census bureau is looking for an Asian agency to reach Oriental residents, primarily in the West.

The problem is that ethnic groups are less likely to send in their census forms, said Peter Bounpane, a census assistant director. More than 5% of blacks and Hispanics were overlooked in 1980, compared with 1% of the general population.

Advertising by O&M and Mingo was recently tested in St. Louis.

The campaign targeted at blacks is a mini-music video, featuring a cameo appearance by singer Al Green. The theme is "Stand right up for who you are."

The Hispanic ads are still being developed. The bulk of the ads are expected to be released in January 1990.

The bureau will devote more funds this time to local promotion, said Mr. Bounpane, spending about $52 million on grass-roots activities, almost four times the 1980 census' $14 million.

Local promotion was critical for the INS, which found that its national ad campaign failed to reach illegal aliens who might qualify for citizenship.

The INS switched its tactics after several months and showed more success by staging local parades, stuffing tortilla packages and taking other non-traditional approaches.

Mr. Bounpane hopes similar methods will work for the census. He believes ethnics who might be wary of filling out government papers can be convinced they won't be harmed by supplying information.#

companies to increase advertising from fourth quarter 1987 to first quarter 1988, though that number might have been less had national newspaper spending been available for these companies in the fourth quarter. It's included only in first-quarter figures.

Greyhound also was one of only 41 companies that recorded sales growth in the consecutive periods. Typically, first-quarter sales don't match the holiday-infused totals of the fourth quarter.

Wal-Mart Stores hit the highest growth in ad productivity and Polaroid Corp. hit the lowest.

Wal-Mart grew 55.2% in the year-to-year period, to $1,213.87 per $1 in advertising, reflecting a 33% increase in U.S. sales, but a 14.1% decrease in advertising kept it from reaching the final round of contenders.

Polaroid, fending off a takeover attempt, dropped 97.2% in ad productivity as sales increased 7.6% and advertising grew to $2.1 million from a mere $50,000.

Polaroid traditionally spends little in the first quarter, but its first quarter 1987 totals were affected further by the court-ordered departure of Eastman Kodak Co. from the instant camera business, making Polaroid the lone player in the market.

AD AGE's measurement is designed to be a window to a marketer's ad spending efficiency tracked over time.

Also, an advertiser's ability to sustain this movement in ratio-building over time helps demonstrate efficiency in media spending methods.

AD AGE's measurement is the flip side of advertising as a percentage of sales—the industry's standard measuring tool reflecting annual budget allocations.

The sales-per-$1-advertising index is able to pick up sudden swings in sales, media advertising, special promotions, seasonality of spending, year-to-year fluctuations and quarterly cumulatives—all of which lead to the annualized A/S ratio that depicts the company's advertising-to-sales journey for the year.

Companies charted in this quarterly report are among AA's 200 leading national advertisers and are both public and U.S.-based. Quarterly periods approximate a January-March time frame.#

Research by Alan Brody

Agencies try to use the products they tout for clients. But often it's not possible to get results without sitting down at a computer made by—gasp—the competition.

At Lord Geller Federico Einstein, IBM's agency of record that is embroiled in a dispute over the account with breakaway shop Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners, a peculiar legacy remains of their past together.

LGFE has more than 180 IBM PCs. And it houses a Macintosh.

According to sources at the agency, LGFE maintains an electronic publishing center that was established in the days when Art Einstein, a former agency principal, took a keen interest in the emerging desktop publishing phenomenon. Because IBM in those days had no graphical interface and offered no desktop publishing solution, he helped choose a Macintosh and LaserWriter, the basic tools required to participate in the "revolution."

When Aldus PageMaker became available for the PC, LGFE began using IBMs. But even with Art Einstein having left the agency, they haven't been able to get rid of the Macintosh.

It remains in the agency with a photocopied IBM logo covering the rainbow Apple. Because IBM's laser printer, the Personal Pageprinter, doesn't work with the IBM AT the agency uses for desktop publishing, staffers have found a machine that does: the Apple LaserWriter that Mr. Einstein brought into the agency.

But LGFE is not alone. No agency interviewed has been able to maintain brand purity when it comes to its clients' computers.

When BBDO began purchasing microcomputers it almost seemed as if it anticipated its next client, Apple Computer, which was then at Chiat/Day. "Before we pitched Apple we had over 120 Macintoshes," says Damian Pezzano, director of the computer systems department. The act of faith paid off when BBDO won the account; the agency now has more than quadrupled the number of Macs in the agency.

BBDO has not only networked its Macs within each agency, but by using a mainframe and an outside satellite-based system, Macs are also networked internationally.

"You can send anything," says Mr. Pezzano, referring to electronic mail messages, copy

Clever names and clear graphics may help sell a system, but nothing succeeds like success in convincing doubters.

At Perpetual Savings Bank in Alexandria, Va., even the crustiest low-tech branch managers are taking notice of the value of computerized market data, according to Research Manager Daniel Dudley.

The network of 73 branch savings & loans in the Washington, Maryland and Virginia areas has been using Claritas' PRIZM for more than two years—with outstanding results, Mr. Dudley says.

One direct-mail campaign for a single branch drew $15.5 million in new deposits in six weeks, he says, with a response rate many times the company average. The 14,000-piece mailing generated a 7% overall response rate and from affluent, older investors, a target group chosen from PRIZM data files, the response rate topped 14%.

"Our usual overall response rate for a campaign like this is 1% or 2%," Mr. Dudley says. "With results like that, even managers who have doubted the value of computerized market research . . . take notice."

As a result, Mr. Dudley says his office has been swamped with calls for data for new branch campaigns; even senior bank managers have started to use PRIZM in strategic planning.

Perpetual also uses PRIZM to help target media. Mr. Dudley wouldn't reveal the bank's advertising budget, but he claims the overall spending is much less than similar-sized competitors because of the way PRIZM data is used to target prime markets, particularly through direct-mail campaigns.

"We keep track of our aided and unaided awareness with regular surveys, and since we've been using PRIZM as part of our advertising and media buying, our unaided awareness levels have been growing dramatically—without much of an increase in spending," he says.

In the last two years, overall unaided awareness has grown from 3% to 10%, he says.

At Claritas, marketer of the popular PRIZM lifestyle cluster data base, understandable personal computer software has become a major priority.

"We want to be click-friendly," explains President Bruce Carroll, referring to the click made by a computer "mouse," which allows users to point directly to functions outlined on a computer screen. Claritas' Compass software—introduced in June—allows users to access geographic market data by pointing at any area on a computer-generated map. By defining small areas, users can access data that is more focused and segmented, Mr. Carroll says.

The PRIZM data base has also been designed for easier understanding, Mr. Carroll notes. Instead of labeling lifestyle clusters with age, sex or income demographics, Claritas uses catchy nicknames such as "Blue Blood Estates," "Furs and Station Wagons," "Bohemian Mix," "Norma Rae-ville" and other labels.

The nicknames, Mr. Carroll says, help express what the data reveals, rather than burdening the user with numbers that that may confuse executives. "Our goal is to take market information out of the classroom and get it into the streets where it can be used," he says.

or digitized graphics images. Staffers have even used the Macs as interfaces to the agency management software that runs on IBM mainframes. The agency has more than 700 Macs nationally plus 500 overseas, as well as 14 IBMs and PC compatibles, a testament perhaps to its client's commitment to connectivity.

Initially, says Mr. Pezzano, the Macs "got into the account department much more quickly than in the creative. There has been some resistance in the creative. But the younger people have been more willing, and color has made a big difference." Now there are many people in the agency doing layouts and desktop presentations. BBDO creative staffers have moved extensively into animatics using VideoWorks by MacroMind Inc. and Dimensions by Visual Information.

Ogilvy & Mather uses its clients' machines but has two different computer clients at two different locations.

The New York office has the AT&T account and uses 250 AT&T 6300s, 100 Macs, 13 IBM PCs and 5 Compaq computers.

In the Houston office, where O&M handles the Compaq computer account, the proportions are reversed and Compaq is the machine of choice.

When Chiat/Day lost the Apple account it hung onto its Macintoshes. The agency even has a Macintosh manager, Cliff Hughes, who says Chiat/Day has more than 400 Macintoshes and about seven IBM PCs worldwide. Most of the machines were bought during the heyday of the Apple account.

Locking into a particular manufacturer's equipment is described as a being part of the "installed base." Once a company is outfitted with a significant amount of one system it becomes too expensive to switch and the only real choice is to add machines from the original manufacturer.

On the other hand, it is never easy to describe Macs in traditional computer terms and it may be that Chiat/Day really did like the client's product.

"We think the Macs are wonderful," says one Chiat/Day insider. "We wouldn't be able to get along without them."

pany selling to agencies like DDB and Ogilvy & Mather," says Bruce Jacquemard, product marketing manager. Largely in government and accounting, only 5% of their business is with agencies and they reach them through general ads for Legend software.

Like other hardware vendors, IBM does not have exclusive ads for agencies. But IBM will use ads and direct mail in a fall seminar for an estimated 300 senior ad agency executives. Titled "An Executive Advertising Conference" and held at IBM's Madison Avenue office, the session will include McCann-Erickson's CEO Bob James speaking on, "Technology: Key to the Advertising Agency of the 1990s."

Agency management and a simulation of creatives at work will be showcased.

So far, manufacturers of IBM compatible computers including Compaq and Hewlett-Packard have not targeted the ad agency market directly.

A new area complementing page layout is desktop presentations, which Apple's Mr. Mowery says "may ultimately be bigger." Sales of presentation software have risen from 125,000 units on the IBM and 50,000 on Apple in 1985 to 250,000 and 120,000 respectively in 1988. In 1989 sales are expected to grow 20% for IBM and 50% for Apple.

Steve Jobs, the former driving force behind Apple, is readying NeXT, a workstation for academia, but ad people, among them Jordan McGrath Case & Taylor's VP-Creative Director Peter Farrago, believe, "I fully expect he is going to bring out a new creative tool."

GF gets sweetener patent

RYE BROOK, N.Y.—General Foods has been awarded a patent on two new low-calorie sweeteners that can be used in powdered desserts, dairy products, canned goods or for tabletop. The sweeteners, which are at least 2,000 times sweeter than sugar, will be tested further internally before being submitted for Food & Drug Administration approval. Separately, GF is testing Kool Shots, a liquid concentrate form of Kool-Aid, in undisclosed markets. The product is a presweetened liquid packaged in plastic squeezable pouches shaped like Kool-Aid's Pitcherman character. Grey Advertising, New York, is agency of record for Kool-Aid.

Price hikes loom for TV's hot :15s

Mini-ads becoming 'monster issue'

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—The Big 3 TV networks, hurt by a crushing demand for 15-second ad units, want to charge advertisers more for the short spots.

The simmering controversy over 15-second commercials involves more than pricing, notably clutter and product protection. "I think this will be the monster issue of the year," said Jerry Dominus, VP-sales at CBS.

ABC will test the waters for a price hike this fall by seeking "premiums" for :15s bought in the baseball championship playoffs, "NFL Monday Night Football" and, possibly, the Academy Awards telecast.

Sources said ABC would use these events as "litmus tests" to see whether price hikes could be sought elsewhere.

The popular 15-second format is now priced at half the cost of a :30.

In explaining the nets' position, one TV executive said, "Basically, people talk about :15s like they should be 60% the cost of a :30, or even have a 20% premium. But maybe the marketplace won't be able to handle that. So maybe [the cost increase] will be set at 53% or 54% [of the cost of a :30].

"You can't do things too quickly," he added.

NBC executives couldn't be reached for comment on their position on this issue.

CBS is debating whether to ease its restrictions on use of the short format. Each network currently allows only two 15-second spots per commercial cluster, or pod, to prevent clutter and ensure product protection.

But the huge demand for :15s in all dayparts has forced a re-evaluation of this policy.

CBS has warned advertisers it will reach saturation levels for :15s in prime time during this fall season, telling advertisers in a letter last month that it may have to "modify our policies."

CBS specifically noted it was having trouble maintaining product protection in the pods. The network limits two :15s or one split 30 to both a 90-second and a 120-second pod, so there are never more than five commercial messages in a pod.

But CBS said many advertisers that had bought :30s were asking for their unit to be split into :15s and not giving them enough advance warning to insure product protection.

That's a key reason for the network's policy review, and sources said the result could be either more :15s

Mercury ads take new shape for '89

By PATRICIA STRNAD

BOSTON—Ford Motor Co.'s Lincoln-Mercury division is dropping its 3-year-old ad theme for Mercury, "The shape you want to be in," and replacing it next month with an all-new campaign.

"Where comfort and control are one" is the new theme and it reflects the upscale division's new strategy of emphasizing comfort, control and handling.

Executives said those were the attributes cited most often by focus groups when asked what they liked most about Mercury cars.

The previous advertising campaign was part of L-M's strategy to be known as the leader in auto design. But "so many other car companies are starting to [talk about] shape," said DeWayne Lancaster, L-M's general marketing manager, "we didn't have the cornerstone on shape anymore."

His comments were made last week at a national preview of Ford Motor Co.'s entire 1989 model lineup, where company executives said they have set ambitious sales goals for next year.

To meet its goal, the Ford Division is relying on past strategies and its long-running ad theme.

The flagship car's new advertising breaks little ground strategically and creatively while continuing the well-known themes, "Have you driven a Ford . . . lately?" and "The best-built American cars, eight years running."

The former is "the most recognized theme line in the industry," said Philip Novell, general marketing manager at Ford Division. "If we changed it, our dealers would lynch us."

J. Walter Thompson USA, Detroit, handles the Ford Division; Young & Rubicam, New York, handles Lincoln-Mercury.

Lincoln's "What a luxury car should be" theme is continuing. Pro golfer Jack Nicklaus, Lincoln's new spokesman (AA, Aug. 1), appears in spots for the Town Car and Continental.

Mr. Lancaster said the new focus for Mercury is a "natural evolution" and not due to dealer dissatisfaction.

Last year's effort featured New Age music and cars in motion against a roadless, unpopulated background.

The 1989 Mercury commercials are dominated by instrumental, symphonic music that's sometimes majestic and other times fast-paced and peppy.

TV spots feature drivers or passengers of Mercury models looking wide-eyed at the sun and a full moon, which appear in the sky side by side. The sun and moon start to move toward one another until eventually they eclipse, forming the Mercury logo.

"We were looking for visuals that would imply comfort and control," Mr. Lancaster said. Y&R "came up with the sun and moon, the sun being hot and controlled, the moon being soft, warm and comfortable."

L-M's Merkur Scorpio is getting most of the ad support for Merkur-branded cars in 1989, Mr. Lancaster said. The theme for Merkur is "German performance you can be comfortable with."

Ross Roberts, VP-general manager of L-M, projected that Scorpio sales will reach 12,000 units in 1989, up 19% from this year.

L-M projected total 1989 sales of 717,000 units, which would give it about 7% of the U.S. auto market. L-M's market share in Dems' dilemma: Should they take shots at Quayle?

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—A top media adviser to Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis says there may be hay to be made from ads targeting Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle.

"Quayle's problems certainly have opened up other possibilities for advertising by the Mike Dukakis campaign," said Dan Payne, president of Payne & Co., Boston, whose ads helped the Massachusetts governor win the presidential nomination. "And I've got some of those ideas," he said, chuckling aloud at the prospects.

There's also the possibility that some liberal groups not directly linked to the Dukakis campaign or the Democratic Party might go after Sen. Quayle and his record, just as conservative groups have spent millions for barbed, frequently effective TV spots aimed at liberals.

Mr. Payne thinks Sen. Quayle's problems will hamper the Republicans' campaign advertising.

"They now have to be sensitive to how they use Quayle," he said. "If he continues to be in the forefront with the press for another three or four weeks . . . then they have to decide whether to go with a Bush-Quayle logo or just 'Bush for president.' "

Mr. Payne even conjectured on the possibility of some image-mending ads by the Republicans.

"The vice president is not usually a major part of [advertising] budgeting for a campaign," he said.

"But if they try anything with Quayle, the ad ends up being bigger news than a spot for George Bush. Everyone will pick it over to determine the meaning, to figure out the damage control."

Sig Rogich, advertising director for the Bush campaign, declined to comment on the possible impact of anti-Quayle ads by the Democrats or on the likelihood of using advertising to try to bolster Sen. Quayle.

But another Bush campaign insider, speaking anonymously, said the Indiana senator's problems—his National Guard service during the Vietnam War and his 1980 stay in Florida with a group of people that included Washington lobbyist Paula

Saatchi stock woes may pare pay hikes

By JON LAFAYETTE

NEW YORK—Managers of Saatchi & Saatchi's agencies are under intensified pressure to increase profits—and may be holding 1989 salary increases down to a minumum to do so.

This comes just as the Saatchi holding company prepares for its fiscal 1989 budget meetings next month.

Senior agency executives denied they had been ordered to squeeze raises to as low as 3%, but they acknowledged the holding company is taking a much closer look at salaries than in the past.

Saatchi's deflated stock price is the main reason for possible tight salary guidelines and other cost-cutting moves.

The price of Saatchi's common stock has fallen from more than $30 a share just before the Oct. 19, 1987, stock market plunge to $18⅜ last Friday.

The falling stock price impedes Saatchi's acquisition strategy because the company prefers to raise money by selling stock rather than borrowing (AA, Aug. 1).

The low stock price also makes managers' stock options fall in value and raises the possibility of a takeover.

One way to boost the stock price is to improve operating margins by controlling costs, and an agency's biggest cost is salaries.

Pepsi sends Coke to mat on recall

By SCOTT HUME

"Ladies and gentlemen, we have a decision," as the ring announcers say. And the winners are . . . Diet Pepsi and its commercial presenters, heavyweight champion Mike Tyson and his wife, Robin Givens.

PepsiCo and Coca-Cola USA went into the advertising ring in June and July, each claiming that its diet cola was preferred in national taste tests.

The challenges coincided with the June 27 heavyweight boxing title fight between undefeated champion Mike Tyson and Michael Spinks.

For several days before the fight, Pepsi-Cola, via BBDO Worldwide, New York, aired a series of teaser spots for Diet Pepsi suggesting something monumental was coming.

The night before the fight—billed as a bout that would decide who was the top fighter "Once and for all"—Pepsi ran a spot featuring Mr. Tyson, in which it claimed Diet Pepsi was the people's choice. PepsiCo sponsored the closed-circuit telecast of the fight.

Coca-Cola, meanwhile, was running its own TV and print campaign, from Lintas:New York, claiming that its tests gave the taste crown to Diet Coke.

The fight lasted 91 seconds—three times longer than both soft-drink marketers' TV commercials—with Mr. Tyson the winner by a knockout.

And the July AdWatch figures on consumer top-of-mind advertising recall give Diet Pepsi the victory by a knockout, too.

Diet Pepsi advertising ranked among the 10 best recalled last month, taking the No. 7 slot. It was the first time Pepsi's diet brand has made the top 10 list.

Diet Coke's advertising didn't garner a single vote from the 1,000 adults who were asked to name the first advertising that came to mind from all they had seen, heard or read in the previous 30 days.

Regular Pepsi rode the coattails of its diet brand back into the No. 1 spot among the top 10, though Coca-Cola/Coke (which had held the top spot in the June survey) missed tying for the top spot by only a single vote.

When respondents were asked which soft-drink advertising came to mind first, the order of finish was the same.

Pepsi's advertising won that fight, coming to mind first for 36.7% of the sample. Advertising for Coca-Cola/Coke was No. 2 with a 27.6% share of first mentions.

Diet Pepsi, which hadn't even placed among the top 5 in the soft-drink category the previous month, was third in the July survey, with 6.7% of first responses, followed by Diet Coke's 4.3% share. 7UP was fifth with 3.3%.

Although Diet Coke was the top-selling low-calorie cola as of the end of 1987 (with a 7.7% share of the total soft-drink market vs. Diet Pepsi's 4.8%), Diet Pepsi advertising last month won the recall round, and that can have significant impact on the outcome of the fight.

AdWatch is a joint project of ADVERTISING AGE and SRI Research Center. Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the advertising that comes to mind first both overall and in specific product categories. Last month, 1,000 people were polled by phone.

Another close and closely watched fight has been going on for months between computer giants IBM Corp. and Apple Computer.

Apple has had a hold on the top spot in the computer category since the June 1987 survey, at times leading by as many as 16 percentage points. It didn't relinquish the top spot last month, but the gap between the leaders was very slim.

Apple's advertising was recalled first by 24.1% of the sample and IBM's by 22.3%. Compaq Computer Corp. was third with 1.9%.

The gap was closed not by IBM gaining in recall (its share of first mentions was 22% in June) but through a 2.6-point drop in recall of Apple's advertising from its 26.7% share in June.

Also worth noting is the 15.8% share of first mentions in the wine and wine cooler category garnered by E&J Gallo Winery's Bartles & Jaymes cooler. That's its highest share in the past 12 months.

Gallo wines ranked second with a 9.3% share; Banfi Vintners' Riunite was third with 7.1%.#

Gillette returns to fray with push for Silkience

By PAT SLOAN

Gillette Co. is going back on the marketing offensive, planning a $20 million relaunch of Silkience shampoos and conditioners and considering a national rollout of Myoko skincare products.

The company's burst of marketing activity follows months of fending off a takeover, a battle that last week culminated in a share repurchase agreement with Coniston Partners, a New York investment house.

Silkience, unadvertised for the past two years, will get $12 million in advertising starting in January, said Kathy Donald, product manager.

She said 80% of that will go for TV and 20% to print. Another $8 million will go into consumer promotions.

N W Ayer has the task of rebuilding the brand; the last ad effort for Silkience was from Young & Rubicam.

Silkience had more than a 4% share in 1981 but, with the launch of such brands as Finesse from Helene Curtis Industries, it had fallen to 1.6% for shampoos and 2.8% for conditioners by the end of 1987.

No theme has been set for the campaign, said Jim Haag, management supervisor at Ayer.

The plans for Myoko, a joint venture with Japan's Shiseido Cosmetics, are less clear.

Gillette hasn't revealed its intentions for the brand, which has been testing in Boston since last winter (AA, Feb. 22). But sources say Myoko is slated for an expanded test market later this year and, if all goes well, a national launch in 1989.

Last week, Gillette moved Myoko to Ingalls, Quinn & Johnson, Boston. Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos had resigned the business due to a conflict with Revlon Group.

Myoko is a 10-item line of moisturizing, cleansing and purifying products priced between $7 and $12. It's sold with the help of in-store computers.

That Gillette would soon return to business as usual was hinted at earlier this year when the company boosted ad spending for its antiperspirant/deodorant brands by 50%, to $30 million. It added line extensions Dry Idea for Men and Right Guard Sport at that time.

Dry Idea's share has since risen from 6.5% to 7.2%, according to Salomon Bros. figures, while Right Guard's share remains stable at 5.9%.

Gillette has been under significant competitive pressure in the antiperspirant/deodorant category, particularly from Mennen Co.

Mennen now is going after Gillette with this fall's $30 million launch of Mennen Speed Spray, the company's first aerosol, a market segment that Gillette has traditionally dominated.#

Paws for a treat

Just how far will a dog—or 75 dogs—go to get a Jerky Treat? In the first of two 15-second TV spots breaking today, one dog scales a building, a la Batman, when his mistress entices him with a Jerky Treat. In the second commercial, 75 canines arrive on the doorstep after a man waves a Jerky Treat in front of a fan. Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, created the spots for Star-Kist Foods.

J&J introduces Tylenol 'gelcap'

By PATRICIA WINTERS

Johnson & Johnson, faced with increased competition and slow growth for its key Tylenol brand, is introducing a "gelcap" version that follows years of research for a suitable replacement for once-popular capsules.

Most over-the-counter drug companies took capsule products off the market after a series of tampering incidents, starting with the Tylenol poisoning deaths in 1982.

Tylenol gelcaps are oval-shape pills with a gelatin coating. The key product benefit, said a spokeswoman for J&J's McNeil Consumer Products Co. subsidiary, is that the new product is easier to swallow since a "gelcap" is 33% smaller than a capsule.

That claim is featured in a 30-second TV spot for the gelcaps featuring soap opera star Susan Sullivan.

But a product attribute not advertised is that the gelcaps are one piece, making tampering difficult. Capsules came in two pieces.

"McNeil is by far and away the trend-setter—they are the Procter & Gamble of analgesics," said Gary Frauenhofer, a health & beauty aids retail executive in upstate New York. "If these gelcaps take off, everyone will follow."

McNeil has been researching easier-to-swallow pills since the elimination of capsules.

"This came out of ongoing research into what consumers want," the spokeswoman said. "There are people who like gelatin coating."

Besides TV, Tylenol gelcaps are backed by print ads, coupons and sampling.

The campaign is separate from regular Tylenol advertising.

Last year, McNeil spent about $55 million in media advertising. Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton, New York, handles Tylenol consumer advertising; Kallir, Philips, Ross handles advertising to medical professionals.

Thai ad growth is soaring along with economy

By JOYCE RAINAT

BANGKOK—Thailand's advertising industry is expected to set new records this year, with ad spending rising as much as 20% to $300 million.

"The Thai economy is booming, and the advertising industry is the first to notice the upswing," said Rudiger Reinecke, managing director of DDB Needham Worldwide's office here. He predicts his agency's billings will rise as much as 50% to $15 million this year.

Thailand is quickly joining the ranks of other fast-growing Asian ad markets such as Taiwan, where ad spending is expected to increase 20% to 30% this year.

Thai consumers are benefiting from the country's emergence as an export base for hard-pressed Japanese, Taiwanese, South Korean and Hong Kong manufacturers facing rising costs at home.

The boom follows serious cutbacks in 1986 and the first part of 1987, when lower commodity prices and reduced consumer buying power prompted key advertisers to cut back or delay product introductions, said Kamthorn Kamolvarinthip, chairman of Lintas:Thailand.

Among brands whose ad spending has rebounded are several from Colgate-Palmolive Co., including Fab detergent, with spending for the first six months of this year at $900,000, up 102% from the same period in 1987. Fab is the No. 2 brand in ad spending in Thailand for the first half of '88, according to Data Bank Media Focus Co.

Other brands boosting ad spending this year are Premier Marketing's energy drinks, Krating Dang, up 122%, and the M-100 line, up 158%. Energy drinks, which contain large amounts of caffeine and sugar, are popular here.

About 60% of the increased spending at agencies is coming from existing clients, with the rest attributed to new business.

Unlike other quickly growing Asian countries opening to foreign investment, major Thai agencies have had affiliations with multinationals going as far back as 1965, when McCann-Erickson entered through a joint venture. Most other U.S. agencies came in during the 1970s, when U.S. businesses were exempted from the 49% foreign ownership restrictions.

However, U.S. agencies are still linking up with Thai shops. Earlier this year, Foote, Cone & Belding opened FCB Impact Thailand, which offers sales promotion, direct marketing and other below-the-line services. FCB also owns 30% of Prakit & FCB, the No. 7 agency.

Earlier this year, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising ended its affiliation with Spa Advertising and opened a new shop with Loxley Group, in which Saatchi holds 49%. The agency is called Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising. Loxley's previous partner was Backer Spielvogel Bates.

Saatchi removed Backer and became Loxley's partner because the Bangkok agency was handling more Saatchi clients—including Procter & Gamble Co., Tambrands, Jos. E. Seagram & Sons and Mars Inc.—than BSB clients.

The new Saatchi agency bought direct-marketing company PMS and renamed it Saatchi & Saatchi Direct in May.

Spa Advertising, the largest independent Thai agency, reportedly may link with N W Ayer. James Foley, Ayer's New York-based senior VP-managing director/Asia-Pacific and Latin America, said he recently met with two Thai agencies to become "familiar" with them but wouldn't disclose names.#

Net sports keeping advertiser interest

Despite ratings decline, TV spot time still rising

By Richard Tedesco

Network audiences for some sports are dropping, but ad revenues are showing dramatic increases.

In a recent A.C. Nielsen Co. study, the average audience percentage for mainstream sports—including professional football, college football and college basketball—slipped in the past five years.

During the same period, the cost of 30-second spots for nearly all the major sports rose significantly, with baseball and pro basketball showing the biggest gains.

For baseball, network audiences rose to an average 10.3 rating in 1987 from 9.7 in 1983. At the same time, the average cost of TV baseball advertising jumped 44.7% to $80,000 per spot.

Average audience ratings for National Basketball Association games grew to 8.5 from 7.6, while the cost of a 30-second spots for those games rose 66.1% to $54,300.

The TV spot in greatest demand is still the National Football League, where commercial costs rose 5.2% to $128,600.

However, pro football might have fumbled away some of its audience in those five years, from a 15.8 average rating in 1983 to a 14.5 in 1987's strike-plagued campaign. ■ AA groups showed that these consumers wanted to save time cooking, but also serve authentic, nourishing cuisine," Mr. Basmeson said.

He hopes the mix, which costs slightly more than the average 60¢ seasoning packet, will garner a 10% to 15% market share 12 months from now in the rollout markets. "We're really looking to expand the category by bringing Mexican-Americans into it for the first time," Mr. Basmeson said.

Outlets in other markets already have made product requests, and distribution will expand to meet demand, although efforts will focus on the initial roll-out markets. "All locations are possibilities as long as they get Hispanic retail traffic," he said.

The share goals are not unrealistic, Mr. Basmeson said. "So few brands advertise to Hispanics it makes the brand pool surprisingly small. Where there is a niche, we will look to get some equity."

INSERT PROGRAM FOCUSES ON DATA

Hispanic Interactive Advertising and NovaCom have created a Spanish-language version of NovaCom's TalkBack America, a magazine-insert program that offers consumers a sweepstakes entry in exchange for their opinions of products and advertising.

"It's a focus group through the media," said Anuca Valverde, HIA's senior VP-general manager. Reader involvement in the survey also heightens awareness of ads and products, she said.

The Spanish-language component, called Opine y Gane (talk back and win), will run quarterly in newspaper inserts. Vista, the Hispanic-oriented, English-language newspaper supplement and 17 Spanish-language dailies and weeklies will be used. "Vista is a bit more upscale, and the others allow us strong penetration into the middle of Hispanic communities," said Ms. Valverde.

HIA explored mailing out its own piece or taking part in Donnelley Marketing's Carol Wright Hispanic co-op mailings. The former was too expensive; the latter posed conflict problems because both it and Opine y Gane promise category exclusivity, she said.

TV spots announcing the program and participating newspapers and advertisers will air on Telemundo Group affiliates the week before each drop.

HIA is targeting a 2 million circulation. The program will cost a minimum of $70,000 per advertiser.

- LatinFinance, itself financed by Euromoney Publications PLC, will debut in October. It claims to be the only English-language financial magazine exclusively covering Latin American capital markets and targets international bankers and senior executives.

Initial paid and controlled circulation is 5,500. A b&w page ad costs $3,450; $4,500 for color.

The first issue will carry 100 pages, 30 of which are ads. Merrill Lynch and Chase Manhattan already have signed yearly advertising contracts. Ten issues will be produced annually.

The publication fills a hole, said Lee Rafkin, marketing director. "This is just another thing that confirms that Miami is the offshore financial capital of South America."

STATION BREAKS

NEWS SERVICES WIRED FOR DEBUT

The caliber of Spanish-language news coverage inexorably changes in three days. On Sept. 1, Univisa's Galavision will begin accepting advertising and switch to a news/talk format (AA, June 27).

But Galavision will be sole occupant of its niche only for two months. Spanish Television News Network is targeting Nov. 1 as the date it will launch its ad-supported Spanish-language news service in U.S. and Latin American markets.

News programming attracts very high ratings, said Nancy Tellet, media director at Conill Advertising. "People simply have taken the cue that maybe all-news is what to put out there."

STNN currently is blitzing cable systems in counties with Hispanic populations. Efforts will focus on the top 35 U.S. Hispanic markets, and STNN hopes for penetration of 1 million U.S. households, said Sherman Wildman, STNN investor and marketing consultant.

Starrett Berry, Galavision's VP-general manager, said the market may not support two news-based services. Cable systems' channel capacity is extremely limited, he said.

"We're seeing some problems already in major markets with two over-the-air Spanish-language TV stations. There has been enough resistance to carrying even a third that I think it would be almost impossible," Mr. Berry said.

STNN originally assumed systems in major Hispanic markets had Hispanic programming, "and that is not true," Mr. Wildman said.

Ms. Tellet said it is uncertain whether the market will support both news services, however. "It's a question of supply and demand." Demand for Spanish-language programming has gone up sharply, but the supply has risen accordingly.

To differentiate itself from Galavision, STNN will focus more on news and less on talk/information. Galavision will feature 20 minutes of news with 40 minutes of talk/information. STNN will feature all news with talk/information programming inserted on a strip basis.

STNN also will pay systems 7.5¢ per subscriber, while Galavision currently charges systems an average 15¢ per subscriber to carry its programming. Galavision currently has 800,000 households subscribing and 300 affiliates; it expects 1 million subscribers by October.

The major battle will be for ad revenue, however, where STNN will compete not only with Galavision but also with Univision and Telemundo Group. Like Galavision, STNN will pursue Hispanic market TV advertisers first, but Mr. Wildman added the news format has more "upscale appeal, business appeal than the entertainment networks."

STNN currently is negotiating with two major ad reps that would act as its U.S. sales and marketing arm.

PRODUCT AND ACCOUNT ACTIVITY

- Colgate-Palmolive Co., New York, today breaks "Colgate realiza sus suenos," its first national sweepstakes via TV spots on Univision stations and radio. A 3 million-home coupon effort via Carol Wright Hispanic breaks Sept. 12. Also supporting are in-store activities at small independents and major retailers, such as K mart Corp., Southland Corp., F.W. Woolworth Co. and Zayre Corp. outlets with heavy concentrations of Hispanic customers. Publicidad Siboney, New York, handles.

SUS SUEÑ

The promotion was tested in five markets last year, attracting 125,000 entries and a 91% proof of purchase redemption. The company hopes the national effort will net 400,000 responses.

Siboney also is coordinating a repeat installment of Somers, N.Y.-based Pepsi-Cola USA's "Casa de sus suenos" sweepstakes promotion, which offers $150,000 toward a home purchase (AA, Dec. 28).

- Univision Network, New York, has assigned Alan Steff & Associates, New York, to handle trade advertising on a project basis.
- California C.J., Los Angeles, to Hispanic Group, Culver City, Calif., as first agency of record. Efforts will concentrate on rollout markets in California and New York.
- Jordan Marsh is breaking first-time Spanish-language radio spots in the Miami market next month; IAC Advertising, Miami, handles. According to Strategy Research Corp., 4.9% of south Florida Hispanics patronize Jordan Marsh, while 16.4% shop at competitor Burdines most frequently.
- Carnation Co.'s Friskies PetCare division broke TV and print ads for its Fancy Feast brand in Miami, marking the first cat food to advertise to the U.S. Hispanic market. The effort includes "The 'Fancy' Cat of Miami," a contest and sweepstakes promotion. Lintas:Latina, Miami, handles.
- GTE California, Thousand Oaks, Calif., to Sosa & Associates, San Antonio, as first Hispanic agency of record. Although a budget has not been set, Tom Leweck, GTE's director-public affairs, said a multi-media campaign is a certainty.
- Telecommunications Inc. to Solis Group, both Denver, for Hispanic marketing assignments in Colorado and Texas markets. The Solis Group also picked up additional general-market assignments for U.S. West, Denver.
- Brown-Forman Beverage Co., Louisville, Ky., next month in San Antonio breaks its first Hispanic market TV and radio spots for California Cooler via La Agencia de Orci y Asociados, Los Angeles. La Agencia also handled San Francisco-based Hills Bros.' first Hispanic market radio spots, placed this month.
- Levi Strauss & Co., San Francisco, broke first time Hispanic spots via Mendoza, Dillon & Asociados, Newport Beach, Calif., in Chicago and California and Texas markets.
- Whataburger Inc., Corpus Christi, Texas, has hired Martinez & Associates, Dallas, to create radio and TV spots using its general-market theme of "Looks like a Whataburger day." Martinez also was named agency of record for Americana Mexicana Construtora Internacional, a Mazatlan, Mexico-based construction company. The $800,000 account includes English, Spanish and Chinese spots and collateral material. The agency also handled Dallas Univision affiliate KUVN-TV's debut, running local English and Spanish ads.
- Fisher-Price, East Aurora, N.Y., to Conill Advertising, New York, as first Hispanic agency of record.

Eveready rollouts come to light

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Eveready Battery Co. is restaging its lighting products nationally and moving into 10 states with a new line of home security products called Eversafe.

This is Eveready's first foray into the home security market. Its line includes a smoke detector; a portable intrusion alarm that can be attached to any door or window; and a small transmitter used to turn on lights by remote control.

First off the boards nationally, however, is the estimated $10 million campaign supporting the revamped flashlight/lantern line. Each product is designed to meet specific uses, such as for autos, road emergencies and home workshops.

Chiat/Day, Venice, Calif., is handling the campaign, having been given the assignment earlier this year. William Esty Co., New York, previously was agency of record.

Media advertising, including TV and print, starts in November. A 10-page insert is planned for national magazines.

The Eversafe products will be supported in the initial marketing area—representing about 25% of the U.S., mostly in the Midwest—with a TV and print campaign from Eveready's primary agency, DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago.

Eveready, a Ralston Purina Co. unit, hopes to roll out the products nationally next year, with $15 million to $20 million in media support. "When Eveready does anything these days, it starts out at that level," said one Ralston agency source.

"These moves reflect Ralston's reasons for buying Eveready in the first place," the executive said. "They saw a strong brand name that could be leveraged across a lot of different product categories."

Eveready apparently expects that consumers buying flashlights and security devices will cross over and buy its batteries.

The company has struggled in the battery market, experiencing share drops during the past year in a bitter battle with Duracell and Rayovac Corp. (AA, July 11).

Lighting products, a $400 million category, represent the largest group of battery-operated devices.

Another purpose behind the aggressive new-product plans: providing extra opportunities for profits and merchandising at the retail level.

The six lighting-product lines offer a total of nine new items: two Trusty Light flashlights for general household use; two Foreman flashlights for home workshops; Road Beam flashlights for car use; Handy Lights penlights to carry in purses or briefcases; Explorer flashlights and lanterns, weatherproofed for outdoor use; and DLX premium flashlights.

"I think you have to be careful with new products in this area," said one industry executive. "You'd better have a reason for each new product."

DLX flashlights are described by Eveready as offering "the ultimate in flashlight form and function," made of "rich" black plastic and shining "three times brighter than an ordinary flashlight."#

per pod or higher prices to lessen demand.

Many advertisers have substantially cut their daytime TV spending by using :15s and put the savings into other network dayparts or even syndication TV.

In the recently concluded upfront—or advance—sales market for 1988-89 daytime slots, advertisers spent $200 million less than last year, a drop of about 20%. As a result, daytime prices plummeted 15%.

Daytime also suffers from a lack of general advertiser interest. "Dayparts go in and out of fashion," said Dennis Liebowitz, an analyst with Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette. "Currently, daytime viewers are considered declasse."

The nets originally resisted standalone :15s, fearing they'd add to clutter and create an inventory glut. But then they saw a silver lining: The unit could draw in smaller advertisers. CBS was the first to accept standalone :15s (AA, Aug. 19, 1985).

Many people now believe the networks bungled the new unit when they priced it at half of the cost of a :30.

The shorter, cheaper format proved a boon not only for smaller advertisers but for the huge package-good marketers, which found they could receive the same network rating levels with :15s that they got with :30s and at half the cost.

Advertisers such as Block Drug Co. now use :15s almost exclusively; Lever Bros. uses :15s for one-third of all its TV commercials.

"They're a bargain in anybody's book," said one agency executive.

"It's important for us to use :15s in order to compete. It would be inappropriate for restrictive efforts to be taken [by the networks] that would be unfair to smaller advertisers," said Avrum Gelier, director of marketing services at Block Drug. "They [:15s] have allowed us to do things we couldn't do in recent years, like putting money in prime time for certain brands."

Large TV advertisers are expected to battle the "premiums" as well.

"It will never happen," said Bill Hadlock, exec VP-director of media services at Leo Burnett USA, Chicago. He said the networks will change their "arbitrary rules," meaning he thinks they'll add more :15s to the pods.

But one TV executive said some major advertisers want limits, so commercial clutter doesn't worsen. "We're stuck in the middle," he said.

"If the networks continue to restrict usage," said Robert Bolte, director of media services at Clorox Co., "then you'll see premiums. . . . If they relax those limits, you won't see that happen.

"What the networks eventually do is anybody's guess. But my feeling is there is a general concern that the commercial environment has been deteriorating and that the networks need to do something to cut back on clutter. If I'm correct, they will not break down barriers and will pass along premiums."#

ABC, CBS ready for prime time

By VERNE GAY

New York—ABC and CBS are putting the finishing touches on their new fall prime-time schedules (AA, Aug. 22).

The schedules, disrupted by the 22-week-long Writers Guild of America strike, will be on the air by the end of November. NBC previously announced all of its shows will make their debuts by Nov. 29.

ABC last week disclosed premiere dates for new episodes of seven new and returning series, including "Wonder Years" and "Hooperman," which will both kick off their new seasons Nov. 30. But the network still is without starting dates for five serials, including "Moonlighting" and "thirtysomething."

New episodes of "Dynasty" will premiere Nov. 3, while a new series called "Knightwatch" comes out Nov. 10. New episodes of "MacGyver" will premiere Nov. 14, and "China Beach," a returning series, kicks off Nov. 30. "Murphy's Law," a new series, starts Dec. 3.

ABC's other series awaiting starting dates: "A Fine Romance," "The Saturday Mystery Movie" and "Heartbeat."

CBS earlier said 17 of its 24 scheduled series, most of them an hour long, will start by Oct. 31.

A few key half-hour shows, including the new "Dick Van Dyke" and "Mary Tyler Moore" shows, will start Oct. 26. "Dirty Dancing," a brand-new Saturday evening series, premieres Oct. 29.

CBS also said "Newhart" and "Coming of Age," both Monday night shows, will start Oct. 31. "Murphy Brown" and "Designing Women" both have Nov. 14 start dates, while "Close to Home," a new Saturday show, premieres Nov. 5. In addition, "TV 101" will start Nov. 29; "Beauty & the Beast," Nov. 18; and "Falcon Crest," Oct. 28.

The only show without a start date is "Tour of Duty." But starting Oct. 8, CBS will run new episodes of "Simon & Simon" in "Tour's" Saturday berth.

CBS also said "Frank's Place," a half-hour returning comedy series, is in production and will appear after the first of the year.#

1987 was 6.3% and is expected to tally in at 6.7% this year. It expects to reach unit sales of 629,000 in 1988.

For 1989, Ford Division advertising continues to emphasize quality, design leadership and product benefits.

As in 1988, new spots laud the automaker's successes in recent years under the "Winning the world over" theme.

A brand spot positions the Ford Escort, Taurus Wagon and F-Series truck as the best-selling car, wagon and truck in the world.

Voice-over says Ford is "America's most successful car company."

Teaser spots for the redesigned 1989 Ford Thunderbird and Mercury Cougar will break in November during ABC-TV's miniseries "War and Remembrance," of which Ford Motor Co. will be the exclusive automotive sponsor.

A new Cougar spot includes an adaptation of the song "Take My Breath Away," from the movie "Top Gun."

The commercial shows a sequence of frames moving across the TV screen like a film running through a projector, but there is live action in each individual frame.

Shots of a Cougar on the road are interspersed with slice-of-life vignettes and the sun and moon image.

Ford Division likely will outsell General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet division in 1988 in both cars and trucks for the first time in about 30 years, said Thomas Wagner, VP-general manager of Ford Division. Ford outsold Chevrolet in combined car and truck sales last year by 177,000 units.

Ford Division is aiming for 1989 sales of 1.6 million cars and 1.6 million trucks, up from an expected 1.5 million cars and 1.5 million trucks this year, Mr. Novell said.

That would give it about 16% of the car market in 1989, up from its current 15.2%, and 31% of the truck market, up from 29.2% now.

Ford Division will maintain its ad spending levels, estimated at $310 million for 1988.

L-M, which spent an estimated $135 million this model year, hasn't set 1989 budgets yet, Mr. Lancaster said.#

two British executives who were named the holding company's joint directors of operations earlier this year, "are advertising people" and expected to take tough, independent looks at the salary line, said other Saatchi agency executives.

That contrasts, sources say, with Saatchi & Saatchi Communications division Chairman-CEO Victor Millar, who previously had been a consultant—not an adman—and was not as skillful at spotting salary fat.

Even if Messrs. Warman and Bannister don't order agencies to limit salary increases, they'd be sure to question especially large raises.

"They'll advise you and give you guidelines, especially if they think one part of a budget is out of line," a Saatchi executive said.

Another Saatchi executive said, "I think this is an important year [for the holding company] because there's no acquisition growth."

"They think their stock price is low, and they are very frustrated by it," said Andrew Wallach, stock analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert.

Though Saatchi will try to wring more profits out of its agencies, analysts doubted those efforts would have much impact on share price.

"The operating results are fine. You can always squeeze out a little more, but their margins already are significantly higher than the rest of the advertising industry," said James Dougherty, an analyst at County Securities USA.

"They are so big they can't grow faster than the industry they're in," Mr. Wallach added.

One reason for Saatchi's sagging stock price is the unpredictability of management on strategy issues, Mr. Dougherty said.

Saatchi's attempt to acquire a British bank a year ago "is still a real concern," he said. He added that Wall Street also wants to be sure the company doesn't plan to issue more paper that will dilute earnings.

Mr. Dougherty said Saatchi's advertising earnings will also get a boost from the lower costs realized because of Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton's move to its new headquarters in New York.#

American Air books new regionalized ad strategy

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

FORT WORTH, TEXAS—American Airlines is taking the wraps off a new regional marketing strategy, making it the first national carrier to develop distinctly separate campaigns in various areas of the country.

While a number of major package-goods marketers have turned to regionalized marketing, until now the big national airlines have relied on national ad campaigns and themes, sometimes tailored to local markets.

Those secondary drives typically are used to push price and destination.

But American is the first to address specific regional goals with full-fledged campaigns using separate creative executions.

Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt has created two new campaigns not linked creatively to the carrier's umbrella "on-time" image effort.

The first, which began Sept. 8 in Los Angeles and San Francisco and will expand to other West Coast markets, includes three 10-second TV spots showing laid-back California scenes of

Backer takes top ad agency spot in Europe

An Advertising Age roundup

An ADVERTISING AGE survey of 17 countries indicates Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide has moved into the No. 1 position in Europe.

That's critical for the agency business, because Europe is becoming the world's fastest-growing region for advertising.

The AD AGE survey also shows that the top 10 multinational agency networks in Europe each increased gross income by an average 40% in 1987, bolstered by strong local currencies and buoyant ad spending.

With $248.2 million in 1987 gross income, largely due to the addition of Dorland U.K. to the network, Backer has taken the lead from its sister agency, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide.

Backer's jump moves Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising down to the No. 2 position in Europe but, importantly, gives parent Saatchi & Saatchi Co. the top two networks in the region.

Without Dorland, Backer would have held the No. 5

Bush media buyer sees a bumper crop of ads

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

New York—On Election Day, Farrell Media President Cathy Farrell loses all her clients.

Perhaps she can take some solace from the fact that, later that same day, she finds out whether all her efforts between now and then were successful.

Ms. Farrell is the media buyer for Republican presidential nominee George Bush, and she foresees for this fall the most heavily advertised race for the White House in recent memory.

What's driving the potential explosion in advertising is the confluence of three factors: two relatively undefined candidates; increased importance of regional strategies; and more political ad time being bought at the lowest unit rate.

Ms. Farrell isn't fazed. Her 1½-year-old buying outfit may bill an estimated $60 million or more this year—all from political candidates and issues.

Politics is the one and only business of this woman who says she began her career "in the mailroom at Ted Bates more years ago than you'd believe."

Let Olympi-ads begin!

NBC's $550M in sales shatters TV ad records

An Advertising Age roundup

The biggest event in the history of TV advertising begins this Friday.

As an ad generator, the XXIV Olympiad is unparalleled: NBC-TV has sold $550 million in commercial time on the 17 days of broadcasting from Seoul.

That's at least $100 million more than ABC's ad revenue total for the 1984 Summer Games in Los Angeles. The biggest football Super Bowl ever, last year's Super Bowl XXII, pulled in about $50 million for ABC.

There will be roughly 30 hours of advertising during the 179½-hour Olympics telecast starting Sept. 16, or up to 3,500 30-second spots.

Prime-time :30s are going for as much as $330,000. More than 100 advertisers have purchased time—some spending up to $50 million, some as little as $500,000.

The on-screen advertising battles could be as interesting as those on the field.

Visa International and American Express Co. will spar over whose credit card can actually be used at the Olympics (Visa at the Olympic Village, but AmEx throughout Seoul). AT&T Co. and US Sprint will go head-to-head in long-distance campaigns, and Anheuser-Busch and Miller Brewing Co. will unwrap special ad executions.

General Motors Corp.'s Oldsmobile Division and the Beef Industry Council are kicking off important new campaigns on the telecast (see stories on Page 3). GTE Corp., Eastman Kodak Co., Xerox Corp. and Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. will use the games to spotlight new creative, too.

Although there will be several head-on marketing battles, NBC sold many of its largest Olympic advertisers on an exclusive or partly exclusive basis.

Some advertisers bought chunks of time to block out key competitors or to at least limit the number of competitors that could advertise on the Games.

NBC sold 15 such "exclusive" positions, where the size of the deal depended on the size of the category. GM spent about $40 million to achieve exclusivity, but Reebok International spent only $6 million for athletic-shoe exclusivity.

Other marketers that preferred exclusive buys: Hyundai Motor America and American Isuzu Motors, for imported cars; Jos. E. Seagram & Sons for wine coolers; Quaker Oats Co.'s Gatorade for isotonic drinks; Coca-Cola Co. for soft drinks; Johnson & Johnson for analgesics; Kodak for film;

Agency cuts staff by one-third

Ax falls at Lord Geller

By GARY LEVIN
and JON LAFAYETTE

New York—The other shoe dropped at Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein Sept. 9 when the agency laid off about a third of its staff.

The dismissal of 90 people came one week after losing IBM Corp.'s $138 million account to Lintas:Worldwide and Wells, Rich, Greene.

Employees were contacted by top executives and individual department heads about the massive cutbacks, which take effect immediately.

"The quicker we do it, the better it is for the people that we do it to," said Tim Elliott, chief operating officer at Lord Geller. "But we've done it so we can continue to serve our existing clients, including IBM, and to pitch new business. We haven't cut it to the bone."

IBM may turn media buying over to Lintas—Page 2

Lord Geller will continue handling IBM work for "a short transition period," an IBM spokeswoman said.

The account represents about 60% of Lord Geller's total billings; after IBM work is completed, billings will tumble to an estimated $40 million from a high last year of $220 million.

Mr. Elliott refused to disclose names of the laid-off executives. "We didn't say to ourselves, 'Who worked on IBM, and we should let those people go.' " Rather, a broad base of senior and junior-level staffers in all departments were dismissed.

But sources indicated the ax fell

Lintas may win IBM media buys

By JON LAFAYETTE

New York—Lintas:Worldwide has the inside track on picking up broadcast buying for IBM Corp.'s $138 million advertising account, sources report.

IBM recently split its account between Lintas and Wells, Rich, Greene after dumping its beleaguered incumbents, Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein and Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners (AA, Sept. 5).

IBM didn't indicate buying responsibilities but is expected to consolidate broadcast buying at one of the two.

Lintas handles $500 million in network time for its clients, including all sports buys for General Motors Corp.

WRG handles $200 million in network TV buying, including corporate campaign assignments for Ford Motor Co. and ITT Corp.

IBM is an important sports advertiser, and the clout an agency like Lintas would bring to the party could save money for the computer giant.

If WRG doesn't get any broadcast buying, it could get a print buying assignment, sources said.

Although an IBM spokeswoman indicated the company has no timetable for making a decision on media buying, agency executives indicated the topic would be discussed at a series of meetings this week.

Media buying wasn't a factor in the agencies' three-hour presentations to IBM last month, agency executives said.

"IBM has a lot of spending and needs a lot of coordination," said one source familiar with Big Blue's media-buying operations. "Planning could be split up, and the agencies could have some say in which programs or magazines they are in. But buying will probably be centralized."

Centralized buying is generally more efficient and easier to monitor.

According to Leading National Advertisers, IBM spent $53.7 million on network TV, more than half of its $97.5 million in measured media. LNA doesn't measure newspaper advertising or ads in computer magazines.

Agency clout hasn't been a major issue in the past for IBM, which has done very well for itself by cherry-picking programming events, especially expensive, high-gloss, made-for-TV shows.

In that arena, "IBM, in and of itself, is clout," said one media executive. In addition to a willingness to pay the freight for premium programming, the IBM name means "quality and prestige.

"The networks let them know when they have a property IBM might be interested in. It's not a matter of knowing the marketplace; the marketplace comes to them."

Most of Big Blue's buying has been handled by John Curran, senior VP-director network radio/TV programming at Lord Geller—which was never a giant agency.

"Curran has an incredible reputation in the marketplace as one of the best negotiators," a former colleague said.

Mr. Curran moved to Lord Geller from Doyle Dane Bernbach in 1986 when the IBM account left DDB, and he'd planned to move to Lord Einstein, the breakaway agency formed by senior Lord Geller executives in March.

He stayed at Lord Geller because Lord Einstein was enjoined by a court order from hiring Lord Geller employees.

Last week, Mr. Curran said he expected to discuss his relationship with IBM with company executives. "We're going to talk," he said. "Things are still very up in the air."

To keep Mr. Curran's services, IBM would either have to hire him as a consultant or persuade one of its agencies to hire him. Sources at both Lintas and WRG indicated that they wouldn't oppose hiring him if that was what

Proposals to tax ads in 2 Southern states reignite controversy

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

The ad tax is trying a comeback.

Alabama has become the latest state to show an interest in taxing advertising, although Arkansas poses the more immediate threat.

An Arkansas tax commission is expected to hear testimony Sept. 16 on a recommendation to repeal the sales tax exemption that now applies to advertising (AA, Sept. 5).

Bill Lawson, chairman of the Arkansas Advertising Federation, believes the commission won't tax advertising directly but eventually will recommend removing the exemptions from virtually all businesses.

States periodically have looked at ad taxes despite the national embarrassment that befell Florida last year when it unsuccessfully tried to impose a sales and use tax on ads.

The American Advertising Federation, American Association of Advertising Agencies and Association of National Advertisers plan to present anti-tax testimony at the hearing in Little Rock, Ark.

Although the commission isn't expected to vote on exemption proposals within the month, Mr. Lawson predicts there will be a real fight on this issue down the road when Gov. Bill Clinton, a past proponent of taxing ads, incorporates commission recommendations into his own 1989 tax-raising proposals.

"I wouldn't be surprised if there eventually is a bill to tax advertising, but its serious consideration will depend on whether it can get the support of the governor and key legislators," Mr. Lawson said.

"I don't think the Legislature would ever impose a tax on advertising," he added. "I think they understand its implications and impact on the ad industry . . . and know that it doesn't make political sense."

Mr. Lawson is public relations manager for Arkansas Blue Cross & Blue Shield.

In Alabama, the call for an ad tax is being championed by Rep. Dwight Faulk, a Democrat.

The Alabama Legislature currently is winding up a special session, and a House committee was scheduled to consider this week a proposal from Rep. Faulk to extend the state's 5% sales and use tax to ad sales.

"I know there may be some problems implementing something like this, but this bill will let us see what the gist of the idea is," said Rep. Faulk, who's scheduled to leave office in January to become a probate judge. "But the politicians are scared of an ad bill [because] the media are key to them when they run for office."

Rep. Faulk said he believes his legislation "is not going anywhere" for lack of legislative support.#

DDB, Dai-Ichi forming new agency venture

By GARY LEVIN

New York—DDB Needham Worldwide and Tokyo's Dai-Ichi Kikaku plan to announce next week the formation of a joint venture agency network in the U.S. and Japan, sources say.

This major expansion of an existing affiliation agreement, in which each agency already owns a small stake in the other, will result in creation of a third agency with offices in New York, Los Angeles and several Japanese cities.

Dai-Ichi is Japan's fourth-largest agency with 1987 billings of $837 million. DDB Needham, a unit of Omnicom Group, billed nearly $2.6 billion last year.

The move is patterned after HDM—a similar venture by Dentsu, Young & Rubicam and France's Havas—and Lintas:Hakuhodo, a U.S./Japanese joint venture.

The new venture will be funded equally by the two agencies and won't affect current equity relationships.

Sources say the venture is designed to give Dai-Ichi's clients better expansion capabilities in the U.S., while offering DDB Needham's U.S. clients a stronger base of operations in Japan. The separate venture could help avoid conflicts that might arise if Needham and Dai-Ichi handled each other's business in their respective markets.#

Networks hit for ad clearance cuts

By RICHARD L. GORDON

The presidents of two national advertising associations have sharply attacked the Big 3 TV networks' latest cutbacks in their commercials clearance departments.

NBC last month revamped its broadcast standards department, cutting the number of professionals assigned to commercials clearance. CBS reduced staffing in its advertising standards unit more than a year ago.

ABC, which made cutbacks over the past two years, is expected to make more trims this year.

The network staff units review tens of thousands of commercials a year and are a major cog in the ad industry's self-regulation system.

In separate letters to the chairmen of NBC, CBS and ABC, American Association of Advertising Agencies President Leonard S. Matthews and Association of National Advertisers President DeWitt F. Helm Jr. denounced the "virtual elimination" and "continuing diminution" of the networks' broadcast standards process.

"We have long argued against government intrusion because the advertising and broadcast industries were doing such a good job policing themselves," Mr. Matthews wrote. "However, diminution of the self-regulatory process can only weaken the entire broadcast/advertising industry position and will invite government regulation to fill the void."

The staff cutbacks "play into the hands of our critics and adversaries and the would-be 'do-gooders,' " Mr. Helm wrote, "and provide them with the ammunition they need to maintain that government regulations must be enacted to fill the void in protecting the marketplace, and only after great criticism of and costs to the industry."

The ANA board is expected to review the situation when it meets this week.

American Advertising Federation President Howard Bell said AAF, which includes the networks as members, hasn't taken any formal position, but he "hopes nothing is done to weaken the self-regulation of advertising."

The Four A's and ANA letters followed NBC's reorganization of its 60-person broadcast standards department into what's expected eventually to be a 20-person "program marketing and administration" unit dealing with programming matters and an eight-person advertising standards unit.

Only three commercials editors are now assigned directly to pre-clearing commercials, down from five. Several years ago there were eight.

NBC "intends to maintain the same level of quality service. These are our clients, these advertisers," said Rick Gitter, VP-advertising standards.

"I appreciate their concern," Mr. Gitter said of the association letters. "The very clear intention here—and the intention of the company—with regard to advertising standards is to continue to perform the function."

ABC, in a response to the Four A's letter last week, said "the essential activities supporting our responsibility and accountability as broadcasters remain a corporate commitment."

Staff cutbacks that swept through CBS more than a year ago cut in half its program practices department, which includes the ad review unit.

Beyond the ad clearance units' role as important standard setters for national TV advertising, their smooth operation is vital for the day-to-day functioning of advertisers and agencies.

About 50,000 scripts and storyboards are submitted for review by the networks every year.

Delays in the review and approval of network commercials could easily upset ad timetables and marketing strategies.

"We don't have any less need now that they have less staff," said Carla Michelotti, senior VP-associate general counsel at Leo Burnett Co., Chicago. "We work on very short timetables. We trust services will continue."

Advertisers also take complaints about competitors' advertising to the networks under "challenge" procedures.

NBC said some 65 to 85 challenges are reviewed every year.#

Champion seeks shop

TOLEDO, OHIO—Champion Spark Plug Co.'s switch to regional advertising is behind the search for a new agency for its $9.5 million account.

Champion and Scali, McCabe, Sloves, New York, agreed to end their two-year relationship as part of the marketer's new strategy to concentrate on market-by-market, rather than national, advertising, said George Braatz, Champion's manager of corporate communications.

The company, which markets Champion and Anco automotive products, recently named 13 regional marketing specialists in 13 geographic divisions nationwide. Now the marketer is looking for an agency with regional offices and capabilities that's based closer to its headquarters here.

It's too early to say how Champion's ad budget will be affected, Mr. Braatz said, adding that the company will continue to do some national advertising.#

After buying binge, what?

Flurry of acquisitions leads to owners asking how to best use sales promotion capabilities; the answer, it seems, is to involve shops from the very beginning

By Scott Hume

Sales promotion is destined to become either marketing's Pet Rock or its gemstone.

Suddenly everybody wants a sales promotion agency—they're small, they're cute, they're relatively inexpensive. But the tough part is figuring out what to do with sales promotion capabilities once you have them.

Estimates vary on the dollars spent annually on trade and consumer sales promotion, but there is no disagreement that promotion's share of total marketing now is 60% to advertising's 40%, when the opposite was the case less than a decade ago. And the gap between the disciplines is expected to widen before it closes.

Manufacturers' increasing needs for local and regional marketing strategies and tactics that can produce short-term sales boosts are fueling promotion's rapid growth and media advertising's stagnation. Understandably, that has elicited some cockiness on the part of some execs on the non-media side of the fence.

Says John Kawula, president of the Point-of-Purchase Advertising Institute, "Except for Ginsu knives and Rosemary Clooney records, sales occur within a retail store, not in front of a TV set or by flipping through the pages of a magazine."

But sales promotion's popularity comes as it faces some tough choices. It has outgrown its genesis as a supplier of novelty items and corrugated cardboard displays. The business' future lies in providing marketing strategy—involvement with clients from the start—rather than in being called in later to implement pre-selected tactics.

As a result sales promotion increasingly will overlap advertising agencies' role with clients as well as eat away at advertising's share of budgets.

"To some extent, ad agencies are buying promotion agencies under an 'Eat or be eaten' threat," says one top sales promotion executive. "Advertising wants sales promotion, needs sales promotion but also fears sales promotion's growth."

How sales promotion and other non-media marketing communications are merged with traditional advertising may determine the structural makeup of ad agencies into the next century.

American ad agencies, many of which realized too late promotion's importance, may be missing the boat again.

Under the American plan of action, sales promotion is one of several "secondary" marketing services—along with direct marketing, public relations, Hispanic marketing, product design and others—that advertising agencies maintain as tactical arrows within their quivers. When needed, these units are called forward.

Several British companies are pursuing a different course that may prove the wisest, equally integrating all services under a broad marketing-communications umbrella. The key concept is synergy rather than separatism.

American ad agency executives have never understood sales promotion and still undervalue it, charge critics on both sides of the Atlantic. That's why some of the top sales promoters here now report to London-based bosses.

"In the U.K., the promotion business is about five years ahead of the U.S. in all respects," Joseph Flanagan, president of the Impact agency and the Council of Sales Promotion Agencies, conceded in a recent speech. "As evidence of this, client/sales promotion agency relationships have matured to the level that seven promotion

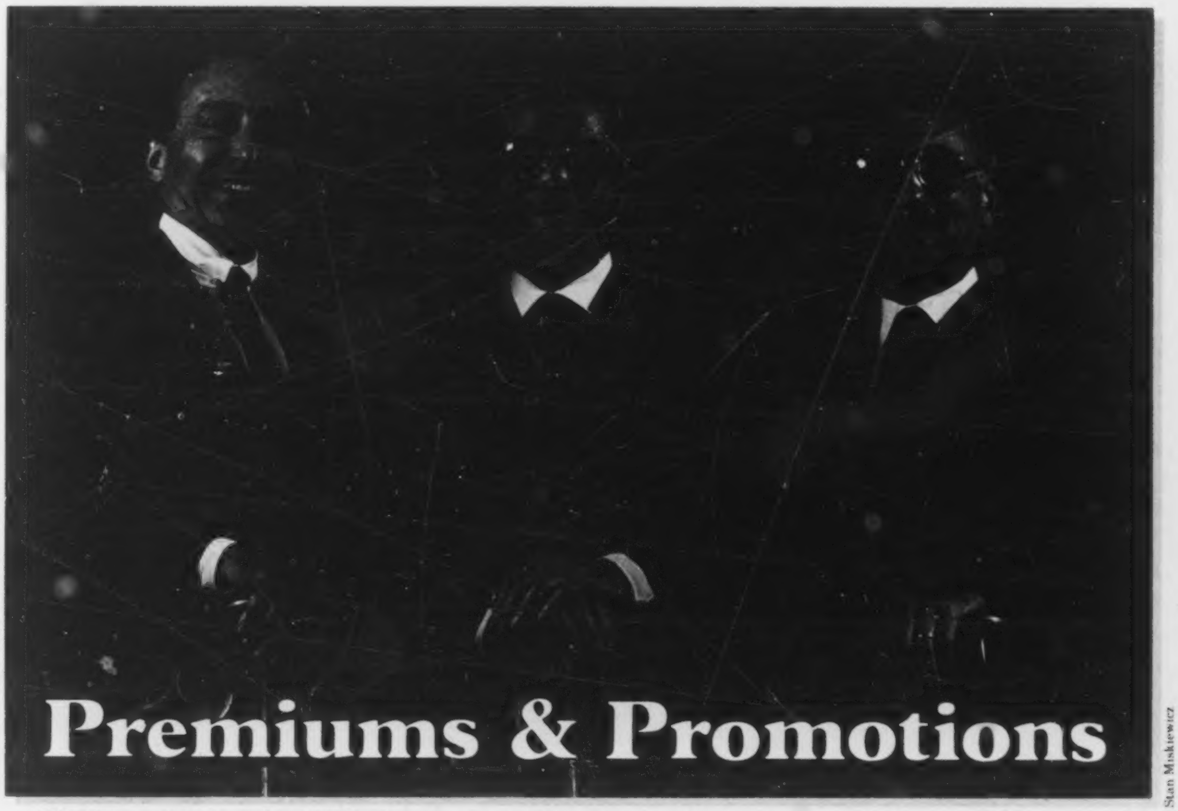
Promotion masters see field grow to maturity

A discussion with Davidson, Frankel and Robinson

By Norma Green



Stan Miskiewicz

Bill Robinson, Bud Frankel and Bill Davidson run three different types of sales promotion companies but come from the same roots.

If a Chicago School of Sales Promotion exists, Bill Davidson, Bud Frankel and Bill Robinson are its founding faculty.

The three sales promotion company heads worked together at Kling Studios and at William A. Robinson Inc. in the industry's formative days, and still get together at periodic "mafia dinners" initiated by Mr. Robinson.

They represent three different types of sales promotion companies found in the marketplace: Mr. Frankel heads the largest independent promotion agency in the U.S. with 280 persons in three offices; Mr. Robinson just sold his 50-person two-office agency to Ketchum Communications, and Mr. Davidson runs a 25-person independent shop.

Recently, they got together for a wide-ranging discussion concerning the evolution and future of sales promotion.

One heck of a living

AA: How did you first discover the field of sales promotion?

Davidson: I first heard of it after I had come from an ad agency. I think my first question to Bill was, "Are you really able to make a living doing it?" I guess we're still trying to find the answer to that one.

But we were truly in the infancy of it. I don't think the sales promotion agency existed at that time [the 1950s].

Robinson: No, I don't think so. It was really collateral material business when we started out.

Davidson: A lot of printers and art studios hired copywriters and they'd become instant sales promotion firms. But, the true sales promotion agency as we know it today, was a response to the professionalization of marketing in the schools. And I think it raised the level of marketing and promotion generally.

Frankel: The M.B.A.s started to ask questions that we were never asked before.

Davidson: Certainly Bill and I first found this with Procter & Gamble.

Robinson: The other thing that was happening was printers used to hire artists to make sketches to sell printing and we came along and said, "Let's start doing some planning or let's not give the sketches away." We started digging in our heels and said, "Hey, we ought to get paid for these ideas."

Davidson: That's when they [ideas] began to be called concepts. I think we give them much more care and thinking today than we did in those days.

At that time, we gave a great deal of thought to display designs and the cutting of cardboard and the shaping of motors. The linkage of displays was perhaps every bit as important as the objectives and strategies then.

Frankel: The client was very specific about what they wanted and you just had to fill in the blanks. We were a reactive, service-oriented creative agencies are now publicly held and traded on the London Stock Exchange."

These British companies, which one U.S. agency exec not so affectionately collectively calls "the Alphabet Group," also have been actively acquiring CSPA member agencies.

KLP Group has snapped up Comart Associates, ranked second among U.S. full-service promotion agencies by ADVERTISING AGE (AA, April 4), as well as direct marketer Metro Seliger Industries, and market researcher Field Research Corp.

WPP Group, already the owner of J. Walter Thompson, acquired ninth-ranked Einson Freeman.

Not to be outdone, FKB Group bought a four-pack of U.S. promotion shops: No. 6-ranked QLM Associates; No. 13 Focus Marketing; No. 27 Hermann Group, and unranked Saugatuck Group.

business.

Robinson: When there began to be a sense of parity among products, either the clients or we began to realize that paper cardboard premium displays could be tiebreakers for the sales organizations. If we came up with stuffed animals and buttons and whistles, a sales organization could go out and sell merchandise where before they didn't have much to talk about.

Frankel: Today, the display fixture is part of the deal the trade expects. The things we were doing in those days were breakthrough. Today, it's just standard stuff.

Robinson: Looking backwards, the '60s was a decade of hard goods and we've taken much of our growth from that. In the '70s, we found a lot more package goods. As the '80s approached most of us saw that high technology and service industries would dominate much of the growth.

Our companies tried to look ahead in terms of these categories. Certainly individual areas like auto, liquor or fragrances and, of course, fast-service restaurants, have always been interesting areas.

Fast food and 1992

AA: What about the '90s?

Davidson: I think package goods are still viable, and fast-food restaurants.

Robinson: We've looked ahead at industries that have been deregulated—the financial area, transportation. When they were regulated, they weren't marketers and today they're spending so much. High tech areas will continue to grow.

Frankel: I think the organizations we have built in the past will not succeed in the '90s. We've got to better integrate the disciplines required to do an intelligent marketing job.

One of the keys to our success is that budgets have moved from an extreme of 90% advertising and 10% non-media to 65%-35% with non-media leading the way. Marketing management is looking at the outside services that they're buying. And they weren't looking at them before.

In years past, they'd have a $4 million ad budget and a $6 million trade and promotion budget. They'd hire the world's largest agency to handle the $4 million but the $6 million was relegated to three assistant brand managers and they said, "This is wrong. We need professional help."

Davidson: There is a breakdown taking place now through regionalization, the growth of local marketing, target marketing. You have to wonder about the difficulty of maintaining a broad national image in the face of fragmentation as the regions take more power.

That's quite a challenge for both the agency of the future and the marketer.

Frankel: All the things Bill is saying are true and that's generating a graying of divisions and disciplines. Advertising agencies are buying up the PR, promotion, direct response, audio-visual and design firms and they're trying to put it all together. The good news is that they've been unsuccessful. The bad news is that they're going to figure it out.

Robinson: Since the advertising agencies have the most to lose, they are the most

SWEEPSTAKES AND GAMES: THE TIP OF THE ICEBERG.

Because there's more to sales promotion than sweepstakes and games, at Don Jagoda Associates we do more than just create and execute sweepstakes and games.

re'bates

We work with advertisers and their agencies on planning and administering refund/rebate offers. We screen and verify all responses, very painstakingly, and return cash or coupons according to the terms of the offer. We're very careful when it comes to handling other people's money.

in·cen'tives

Because we know sometimes it takes more than money to motivate sales people, brokers, distributors and dealers, we help create and implement incentive programs. We know where and how to buy the prizes that will help increase sales, within budget.

pre'mi·ums

Looking for premiums or self-liquidators? We can help you there too. Our premium buyers shop the world looking for the right items to produce the right responses.

ful·fill'ment

And, with our ever expanding facilities, we have streamlined and expanded our capabilities for fulfillment. Getting the right merchandise to the right person on time, intact, is as important as getting people to respond to your offer.

Finally, if you decide to get involved in sweepstakes and games, the most visible tip of the promotional iceberg (in five years, sweeps have almost tripled in number), our more than 26 years of experience can be invaluable. We'll help you conceptualize, administer and—through our National Judging Institute—judge your promotion. We go out of our way to help our clients avoid the myriad pitfalls that can befall the unwary promoter.

When it comes to promotion, whether it's the very visible type or the not so visible but very effective nitty gritty variety, you have our number.

acquisition route several years ago now are beginning to combine their non-media marketing agencies.

Young & Rubicam, one of the pioneers and still the epitome of the "American Plan" approach to marketing communications, moved in August to consolidate its various independent holdings. The huge, as yet unnamed, unit includes merchandising/sales promotion agencies Rogers Merchandising and Cato Johnson/Y&R, as well as design companies CYB and Beautiful!, Paris; Krown, which develops TV and movie promotion, and Y&R Retail.

The problem, say critics of the separate-but-equal approach, is that no matter how you play with the lines of command, as long as sales promotion and direct-marketing functions operate as separate, subservient profit centers, true integration with advertising operations will never occur.

One of those critics is Bud Frankel, chairman of Frankel & Co., Chicago, the largest full-service promotion agency in the U.S.

He has been courted by almost every top agency in the world but has resisted merger and buyout overtures because "when I ask what it is that they are bringing to the party, their answer is always 'Money.' And that's not enough. What's needed is a new structure.

"Agencies want sales promotion units so they can parade them in new-business pitches. But as it stands now, the management rep heading an account at an advertising agency has to be crazy to recommend that a client take part of his budget to the sales promotion unit, even if the agency owns it. That's money out of his bonus going out the door," Mr. Frankel says.

"I'm not saying that the British approach is necessarily better," he added. "Perhaps there needs to be a completely new way to thoroughly integrate all marketing communications into a more equitable structure."

KLP Group has positioned it-highly motivated to keep in step.

Frankel: Marketers look at all their audiences and they break it down—consumer, trade, distributors, sales forces, etc.—and they are refocusing on the needs of their business rather than just historically putting budgets in place. That's motivating the ad agencies to chase the disciplines because they, too, are recognizing this.

Robinson: Agencies are not only looking for the synergy of services, they're looking for lost revenue.

Davidson: I think the current move toward mergers has the most to do with the value of the dollar because a great deal of internationalization is taking place. The client is getting the short end of this.

Globalization, internalization is certainly coming, regardless of the value of the dollar. The global community is here.

Frankel: And in 1992, it will be here in spades.

Davidson: You're talking about the European community and the dropping of trade barriers. The opportunities over the next 20 years for exposure into Europe are great. The opening of the European community and greater access into Eastern Europe will provide the people who follow us over the next 10 or 20 years with marvelous opportunities.

Frankel: Wait a moment. The assumption is that we're not going to be around for the next 10 or 20 years. We better be part of it because there's too much damn excitement to walk away now.

The future is still ill defined. We don't know whether the influence is going to come from the client, ad agencies, organizations like ours, the Brits, the French, Japanese. All I know is that it must be client-centered.

Chicago and service

AA: Do you see yourselves as part of a Chicago School of Promotion?

Frankel: I really do. I don't see the kind of depth and kind of disciplines coming from organizations outside of Chicago.

Davidson: Perhaps the Chicago-based agencies seem to exhibit more creativity. A more earthy form of creativity, perhaps . . . maybe it's our Midwestern character.

Frankel: It's not a Chicago issue, it's an industry issue. Where's the quality? Where is the depth? Where is the commitment? I see it in Chicago-based agencies where I don't see it in other places.

Robinson: Well, this is one of the few places where we disagree.

I think this was probably true 10 years ago. It was much less true five years ago. When you start looking at the pockets of expertise in Westport, Conn., New Jersey, and even New York and now in Southern California, I know there are some formidable competitors in those markets today.

Davidson: We've always had the feeling that the Westport agencies were more concerned with number crunching, even more than they were with the entire problem.

Once they'd developed the path of recommendations they thought the client should follow they frequently left the rest of it to the clients. In fact, we made that one of the things that differentiates our agency from the agencies in the East particularly.

Robinson: I think that's true of many of them. But more and more today, there are real full-service marketing communications and promotion agencies on the East Coast and the West Coast. ■ self as one of the most aggressive architects of a multinational organization that its executives believe is both more equitable and more in tune with the future. Its main difference is that it so far has no advertising "mass" at its core.

"What we're pursuing are really two separate strategies," says KLP CEO Gerry Postelthwaite. "One is geographic, creating or acquiring creative promotional agencies in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Atlanta, Boston and Canada.

"The other is structural. We want that national network to encompass the entire range of response communications so that we can build total programs for clients.

"And we can do this without the central ad agency [that Saatchi & Saatchi or WPP Group have]," he says. "I think we may have to develop competence in the field of media, and we could do that through acquisition of a media-buying service perhaps. But I don't think we need to move into traditional media advertising."

That confidence in KLP's ability to grow without relying on advertising comes in part, he says, from the differences between the U.K. and U.S. advertising industries.

"The concept of the full-service promotion agency developed faster in the U.K. because fewer manufacturers had in-house capabilities as they do here," he said. "That accelerated development in the 1970s and allowed sales promotion to gain more importance."

One other difference will grow increasingly important in coming years.

"I think the British style not only is to accentuate the synergies that can exist between sales promotion and direct marketing, say, but between countries as well. I think we're taking a more global approach to networking marketing services companies," Mr. Postelthwaite says.

"The U.S. is bigger than Europe now, but after 1992 when all the marketing borders [separating European nations] disappear, that simply won't be true. A lot is going to change when that happens, and I think the strategy we're pursuing takes that into account." ■

Diet soft-drink war invades So. Korea

By OLES GADACZ

SEOUL—It's not on the list of official events, but the race to grab a chunk of South Korea's diet cola market may be as exciting as the high jump at the Summer Olympics.

Coca-Cola Co. and Pepsi-Cola International are gearing up for the first battle between diet drinks in South Korea. Coca-Cola is introducing Diet Coke as the Games start Sept. 17; Pepsi introduced Diet Pepsi earlier this year.

Neither company is devoting big money solely in the diet segment, expected to be only 1% of the $555 million soft-drink market this year.

"Koreans don't really have weight problems. [Diet drinks] will take some time to develop," said Pepsi-Cola International's Kim Dong-Soo, regional director for East Asia.

Coca-Cola, which entered Korea in 1968, outsells rival Pepsi by more than 5-to-1. Coca-Cola holds about 85% of the South Korean cola category and Pepsi about 14%.

Oricom handles Coca-Cola's $3.5 million 1988 ad budget. Coca-Cola, which generally uses print and sales promotion, began stepping up TV spots last month and will run spots through this month.

As an official worldwide Olympic sponsor, the company will operate vending machines and run 115 food and beverage concessions in the Olympic venues.

Coca-Cola is supplying free soft drinks to the athletes, journalists, members of Olympic committees and other accredited attendees totaling about 120,000.

Also, the marketer is sponsoring two pin trading centers at two major Olympic venues and holding a local Olympic pin design contest, said Lee Yong-Il, Coca-Cola's manager for Olympic operations.

To counter Coca-Cola's Olympic sponsorship, "we have to use ambush strategies," Pepsi's Mr. Kim said.

Free Pepsi and Diet Pepsi will be offered to patrons of selected restaurants, including PepsiCo-owned Pizza Hut, on days when the South Korean team wins gold medals. Pepsi will give away 50,000 sun visors with its logo to spectators watching the marathon, cycling and other events.

On a 45-inch TV screen inside the Lotte shopping center—Seoul's largest—Pepsi will show videotaped highlights of the Games and U.S. Pepsi spots, including commercials featuring Michael Jackson.

Diet Pepsi was launched April 10 with the support of a one-month $70,000 print and direct-marketing campaign.

It's targeting "opinion leaders" in "prestige outlets"—hotels and supermarkets in affluent neighorhoods, Mr. Kim said. Daehong Advertising handles.#

Y IN CALIFORNIA
ARS OFF THE ROAD.

Consumer Reports had rated the tires "not acceptable" as a result of tread separation.

The Center for Auto Safety had written a cautionary letter. And the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration had requested an investigation.

Still, on the night of Moira Johnston's near fatal blowout, Firestone was continuing to sell defective "Firestone 500" tires by the hundreds of thousands.

So said Moira Johnston in an exclusive article in California Magazine. An article that was to affect the entire nation.

In "Hell on Wheels," Ms. Johnston documented the dangers of the "Firestone 500" tire.

She reported how Firestone had attempted to silence its critics with restraining orders and by threatening lawsuits.

She called for Federal authorities to investigate the allegations and force Firestone to pull millions of tires off the road.

And the Federal authorities listened.

"Hell on Wheels" is the kind of involving journalism rarely found in America today. But the kind of involving articles our readers expect to find in "California" every month.

Maybe that's why over a million opinion leaders in California base so many of their opinions on what they read in California Magazine.

Because no one covers California like we do.

NO ONE COVERS

Backer takes lead in Europe

position. The London office of Dorland was combined with Backer—forming BSB/Dorland—in March 1988. Most of Dorland's offices in Europe became part of the Backer network in 1987, say Saatchi officials, though competing agencies dispute this claim.

The No. 2 network had 1987 gross income of $229.6 million but a below-average increase of 27.3%.

The fastest-growing network in 1987 was No. 9 Grey Advertising, with a 55.2% increase in gross income to $151.4 million in Europe.

J. Walter Thompson Co.'s 19.3% income growth was the slowest.

Without the boost of the average 15% weakening of the dollar against European currencies, which benefits agencies when European earnings are converted to dollars, JWT would barely have grown in 1987.

In local currency, JWT's billings dropped by 11% in West Germany and by 28% in the Netherlands.

On a network-by-network basis:

- Backer is strongest in Scandinavia, accounting for more than 30% of its European billings, and Germany. The German figures were boosted by Scholz & Friends. The Hamburg agency, majority-owned by Backer, is responsible for almost two-thirds of Backer's German billings.

The three-agency Grupo Bates is No. 1 in Spain but suffered staff and client defections this year from its Grupo Alas.

Backer is weakest in Italy, where it's No. 22. The U.K. agency, once expected to close down, will rank near the top in the U.K. in 1988 because of the Dorland combination.

- Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising's strategy of buying top local creative agencies to spearhead growth has been most successful in Italy, Spain and the Netherlands, where S&S offices are in the top 10 and heading for the top five.

Saatchi is benefiting from a trend toward awarding business on a European basis, often run out of London, such as Gillette Co.'s $30 million Natrel deodorant launch and Johnson & Johnson's $25 million Silhouette sanitary protection brand introduction.

Saatchi led new-business winnings in the U.K. Saatchi added new business totaling $254.4 million in the first six months of '88, compared to $266.3 million for all of 1987 and $231.4 million in 1986.

"To be strong in Europe, you've got to be mega in the U.K.," said Andy Fraser, Saatchi's worldwide new business director.

- Ogilvy & Mather's gain of the $100 million, nine-country Ford Motor Co. business lost by JWT helped its position. O&M has carved out leadership in planning and buying new media. O&M handles new media buying for Unilever, American Express Co. and PepsiCo.

The network's gross income grew most in Portugal (more than 100%), Italy (49.1%) and the Netherlands (48%). O&M's creative profile is highest in the U.K., where it was the only U.S.-owned agency to rank among the top 10 winners of creative awards in 1987.

- McCann-Erickson agencies rank in the top 10 in 12 of 15 European markets, second only to another Interpublic Group of Cos. shop, Lintas:Worldwide.

McCann ranks No. 1 in Italy and Portugal, No. 2 in Spain and Belgium and No. 3 in Germany, despite the loss of the $40 million General Motors Corp. account to sister agency Lowe International in 1986.

McCann's London office mainly wins the U.K. portion of multinational business already handled by McCann in other countries. The network's continental offices are more successful at winning business locally.

- Young & Rubicam agencies rank in the top 10 in 12 of 15 European countries in gross income. Growth was especially strong in Germany (39.6%), Spain (63.2%) and Italy (47.2%).

Y&R has a reputation for winning new business locally rather than relying on accounts from its international network.

- Lintas:Worldwide ranks in the top 10 everywhere except the U.K. and Sweden. Strongest growth was in the Netherlands (97%), Italy (73.8%) and Portugal (78.5%).

Lintas' major problem is its weak U.K. agency, ranked No. 16. The London office is on a perennial hunt for a strong managing director and creative director and has looked for agencies to buy to improve its U.K. operation. Lintas:U.K. lost business last year from three different subsidiaries of Unilever, Lintas' largest client worldwide.

- In the No. 7 slot, JWT is struggling to regain billings after losing $100 million of Ford business and Richardson-Vicks business in Germany, France and other markets. Ford's refusal to allow JWT to seek another car account leaves a gap in JWT's client list.

While JWT's 1987 gross income in Germany grew by 7.9% in dollars, it fell by 11% in local currency. Hardest hit was the Netherlands, with a 12.5% drop in gross income in dollars. The U.K. office continues to be JWT's main strength and gained $90 million in net new business last year. Another $100 million is expected this year. For the first time, JWT appointed a European new-business director to oversee new business activity for the region.

WPP Group-owned JWT's new fill-in strategy is to buy local agencies and combine them with JWT in the markets where JWT is weakest. The acquisition of Dutch agency PPGH in June should put JWT/-PPGH in second place in the Netherlands in 1988. Belgian, Austrian and Scandinavian markets, where JWT ranks between No. 10 and No. 27, are in line for acquisitions.

- BBDO Worldwide ranks No. 1 in Germany, Switzerland and the Netherlands, with the combined three accounting for 48% of BBDO's European income.

BBDO is weakest in the U.K., where the agency ranks No. 39 and grew by only 10.3% last year, and in France, where BBDO ranks No. 21 but grew by 56.3%. BBDO is expected to lose its No. 1 slot in Germany to Lintas in 1988 because of BBDO's sale this year of Imparc to D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles. Imparc bills about $40 million.

- Grey ranks among the top 10 agencies in only four markets: the U.K., Germany, Denmark and Sweden. Grey grew fastest in the U.K. (82.8%), France (74%), the Netherlands (73.1%) and Italy (70%).

The network's rapid growth came from account gains, especially in the U.K. and Germany, acquisitions in the U.K. and Spain and setting up direct marketing, sales promotion and PR agencies.

- The billings of HDM, jointly owned by France's Havas, Japan's Dentsu and the U.S.' Young & Rubicam, are more heavily concentrated in one country than any other network except Saatchi.

HDM France contributed 48.8% of HDM's European billings in 1987. HDM makes the top 10 in only four countries, ranking No. 4 in France, No. 6 in Belgium, No. 7 in Switzerland and No. 8 in Spain. Fastest growing markets by gross income were France (57.6%), Spain (44%), Italy (42%) and Switzerland (36.4%).#

Weller leaves Riney for Bush

WASHINGTON—Jim Weller, senior VP-executive creative director at Hal Riney & Partners, Los Angeles, is leaving to join the ad team of Vice President George Bush. Jim Travis, president of Riney's New York office, said Mr. Weller quit to join the Republican presidential campaign after being denied a leave of absence. Messrs. Weller, Riney and Travis all worked on the "Tuesday Team" that created advertising for President Reagan in 1984.

Goodby sells stake to Boase

SAN FRANCISCO—Goodby, Berlin & Silverstein has sold a 37.5% interest to Boase Massimi Pollitt, London, for an initial payment of $1.5 million. Any future payments would depend on whether BMP exercises an option to buy an additional stake later. BMP also owns Ammirati & Puris, New York.

WSJ's bullish bet

Paper goes to three sections on Oct. 3

By PATRICK REILLY

NEW YORK—The Wall Street Journal will embark on one of the biggest gambles in its nearly 100-year history when it unveils a new third section on Oct. 3.

A prototype of the newly reorganized paper shown to ADVERTISING AGE by WSJ executives and Norman Pearlstine, the paper's managing editor, reveals that the addition of the third section is part of a subtle though substantial redesign of virtually every part of the nation's largest daily newspaper.

The changes, which create a second section carrying the name "Marketplace" and a third titled "Money & Markets," are part of a long-range plan spearheaded by Mr. Pearlstine to expand WSJ's readership by offering increased coverage of professions, such as law and media, and of areas not extensively covered by the paper, such as growing companies, entrepreneurs and high technology.

"We are really expanding the concept of what business news is," Mr. Pearlstine said.

While a three-section WSJ has been generally well-received by ad agency executives, some have reservations about reader reaction.

"The open question is how readers will respond. When you go to three sections, there is more to read. Readers are going to either shift time to reading WSJ from other publications or add more time to their reading day. But no one knows what they will do," said Michael Drexler, exec VP-national media director at Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt.

WSJ executives are aware that readers already are deluged with material. "We don't want the reader to feel there is too much to read," Mr. Pearlstine said. "We want to make the Journal easier to read."

"I think the Journal has become a chore to read," said Bruce Thorp, media analyst at PNC Financial Corp. The Dow Jones & Co. newspaper went from one section to two in June 1980.

"There is so much good stuff in there," he added. "Not that you need to know it, but it's such enticing reporting [that] it catches your eye. That becomes a time burden."

Another question is the wisdom of making the move during a particularly soft period for financial advertising.

Although the paper's restructuring will offer immediate attractions to advertisers, WSJ has suffered substantial losses in its ad linage—and circulation—following the Oct. 19 stock market plunge.

For the six months ended June 30, WSJ officials said, circulation was down

Burger King plays $140M promo game

By SCOTT HUME

Burger King Corp. is trying for the first time to beat archrival McDonald's at its own game.

The No. 2 hamburger chain plans one of its most ambitious national promotions, a heavily advertised combination instant-win and game-piece effort based on the venerable board game of checkers.

The promotion is expected to start Sept. 30, just as McDonald's Corp. is wrapping up its "When the U.S. Wins, You Win" Olympics promotion.

With a total prize value of $140 million, Burger King's promotional event will be its largest ever.

Sources estimate the chain will put $30 million in ad support behind the game, including a heavy round of network TV spots from N W Ayer. Einson Freeman, Paramus, N.J., created the promotion.

Burger King had hoped to run Checkers earlier in the year, but a combination of the revival of McDonald's Monopoly game in April and a reported inability to convince franchisees to approve the game forced the delay until fall (AA, April 4).

The new promotion couldn't come at a more opportune time for New York-based Ayer, Burger King's beleaguered national ad agency.

Philip Smith, new chairman-ceo of Pillsbury Co., Burger King's parent, last week promised that shareholders will see more effective advertising from the chain this fall (see related story on Page 93).

The Checkers promotion is Burger King's chance to prove to its uneasy franchise owners, wary parent company, doubting securities analysts and frustrated consumers that it can do a professional job in the marketing arena.

Burger King currently is resisting the idea of totally regionalized marketing through regional agencies, a strategy that would hurt Ayer.

If Checkers is a hit, it's a victory for centralized, national marketing—and Ayer.

Burger King officials declined to discuss the promotion, which they intend to announce at a news conference in Miami on Sept. 26 (AA, Sept. 5).

In many ways, the Checkers game mirrors McDonald's Monopoly II promotion from earlier this

WHAT NEXT, RON?

Cosby, Reagan, Hope top celeb survey

By SCOTT HUME

Another career awaits President Ronald Reagan when he relinquishes the free world's top job in January. And it's a line of work he's already had a fair amount of experience and success in: celebrity spokesman.

That may sound farfetched, but one Hollywood "celebrity broker" said he already has three firm offers for the president's future services in advertising.

Although he's not even out of office yet, President Reagan was runner-up to comedian Bill Cosby in a survey in which adults nationwide were asked to name the person they considered the best celebrity spokesman.

The survey was conducted for ADVERTISING AGE by the SRI Research Center, Lincoln, Neb.

As the pitchman for Coca-Cola, Kodak film and processing, and Jell-O pudding and frozen desserts, Mr. Cosby certainly is among the most visible of celebrity presenters (though sportscaster John Madden is coming on strong, as if another of those clunky championship rings were going to be awarded to the person logging the most airtime).

Products aside, A.C. Nielsen Co. TV ratings attest to the fact Mr. Cosby also is one of the most pop-

Dukakis to alter two-team ad lineup

Hancock exec accepts role of liaison between ad teams

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

Presidential candidate Michael Dukakis' unusual two-team ad structure is floundering, and the candidate is turning to the man who supervised John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.'s "Real life/real answers" campaign for some answers.

The assignment to David D'Alessandro, Hancock's corporate sector president and former senior VP-corporate communications, is to serve as a liaison between the Democrat's presidential campaign staff and the group of Madison Avenue executives who form the Future Group.

Indications are the heralded two-team ad structure devised for the Massachusetts governor isn't working.

When the Dukakis group was put together by pollster Thomas Kiley and campaign adviser Francis O'Brien, it was to consist of two distinct teams—one composed of political advisers to handle tactical, quick-response ads; and the other, made up mostly of commercial admen, to handle strategic and "big picture" commercials.

But the advertising produced to date generally is regarded as uninspired and not in sync with what the candidate himself is talking about. The reason could be a lack of communication and coordination between the two groups.

Mr. D'Alessandro was unavail-

Jackson, Cosby are sought for black-oriented campaign

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—The Rev. Jesse Jackson is being courted by Michael Dukakis' minority ad team to appear in TV commercials for the Democratic presidential nominee.

If the Rev. Jackson agrees, he'll become part of a multimillion-dollar campaign targeting black voters that broke last week.

Also being courted are celebrities Bill Cosby, who appeared in commercials for the Rev. Jackson's primary race against Massachusetts Gov. Dukakis, and Harry Belafonte.

"Scheduling problems" are the biggest obstacle to corralling the Rev. Jackson, said Sam Chisholm, president of the Mingo Group, New York, the agency handling the black-oriented campaign.

The first ads broke last week on radio and in 150 newspapers.

TV spots, still being shot, are planned to start this week. They Ads go regional

Chevrolet gets Geo-graphical

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

LAS VEGAS, NEV.—A marketplace creative shoot-out could be shaping up for fall as Chevrolet uses two approaches and two agencies in regional launches of its new Geo brand.

The two different campaigns were created by national agency Lintas:Campbell-Ewald, Warren, Mich., and by Chevy's West Coast regional agency, Vic Olesen & Partners, Culver City, Calif.

Geo represents the General Motors Corp. division's attempt to lure hard-core import buyers by using the new name and separate showroom sales areas for small cars and trucks imported or built in joint ventures with Japanese companies (AA, March 28).

Initially, Chevrolet intends to use the Olesen campaign on the West Coast and the Lintas:Campbell-Ewald campaign everywhere else. But General Marketing Manager Mike Erdman said in an interview at Chevrolet's media preview here that the Olesen ads will run in one non-West Coast market and the other ads will appear in one West Coast market.

Jeep rolls new ad plans—P. 80
Cadillac unveils new spots—P. 81

The first regional spots break in October, and the Lintas:Campbell-Ewald campaign will run nationally in November. But the big ad push won't start until next spring, when a full line of four models is available to dealers.

Chevrolet decided to run the two campaigns in different areas "just to Hurricane Gilbert comes as blow to Texas ad people

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE and CHRISTY FISHER

Hurricane Gilbert's uncertain path frightened the Texas advertising community well before the huge, dangerous storm was expected to hit landfall last Friday night.

Local newspapers scrambled to prevent advertisers from pulling weekend ads while some ad agencies rushed to meet Friday deadlines ahead of schedule.

In Houston, N W Ayer transferred work to its New York office to keep up with client Continental Airlines' deadlines.

Celebrities were affected, too. Calvin Klein canceled a personal appearance at Macy's Houston Galleria store for his new fragrance, Eternity. The Sept. 17 Liza Minnelli, Frank Sinatra and Sammy Davis Jr. "Ultimate Event" concert was postponed until Oct. 9.

The pending storm wasn't bad news for all, however. Some advertisers used Gilbert to boost business.

Stewart & Stevenson, a Houston-based power equipment specialist, lost no time in running a newspaper ad in Houston and Corpus Christi, headlined "Hurricane Alley," to

State officials target Quaker

CHICAGO—Quaker Oats Co. is the latest target of an ad hoc group of eight state attorneys general investigating potentially deceptive advertising by food marketers. The Texas attorney general asked for information on print ads for Quaker's standard and instant oats; the ads, which ran last year, claim oats can help reduce cholesterol. Quaker, which earlier this year gave the Federal Trade Commission information on the same ads, sent a copy of that material to the Texas official. Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor, New York, created the ads.

Sales promotion called into court

A-B execs to label gifts as 'normal'

By IRA TEINOWITZ

The sales promotion industry goes on trial this week in St. Louis.

In a case that could shake the fast-growing field, defendants in the case of the U.S. vs. Joseph E. Martino, Michael A. Orloff and Mark L. Shyres are expected to counter government allegations of gifts, kickbacks and illegal trading of contracts by showing that such deals are normal in sales promotion.

Jury selection starts today in what is expected to be a four-week trial in U.S. District Court.

Although the 19-count indictment lists the two top former A-B executives and a promotion agency head, it is beer marketing and promotional practices that will be on trial.

Defense lawyers have decided to call top executives from the sales promotion field to testify, but declined to say who has been subpoenaed.

For A-B, the trial is expected to be deeply embarrassing, perhaps the most public airing of corporate dirty laundry in recent years.

Top A-B officials all the way up to Chairman-President August A. Busch III have been subpoenaed to buttress the defense argument.

The damage could be worse for the $55 billion sales promotion agency business, which has been struggling to achieve a professional image in keeping with its stature.

Consumer and trade promotions last year accounted for 64.8% of marketing dollars, with 35.2% going to media advertising, according to Dun & Bradstreet Corp.'s Donnelley Marketing.

But the defense will portray the relationship between sales promotion agen-

DANNY MANNING

By PAT SLOAN

Reebok International is reassessing its new "U.B.U." ad campaign as it grapples with conveying a performance message equal to that of archrival Nike.

Reebok is about to sign the National Basketball Association's No. 1 draft choice, Danny Manning, as a celebrity endorser.

Company executives are hoping that Mr. Manning, a superstar college and Olympic athlete, will be the next Michael Jordan, the Chicago Bulls' guard credited with putting Nike back at the top of its game.

Mr. Manning, who's expected to start his professional career with the Los Angeles Clippers this season, will introduce a new performance shoe for Reebok before the end of the year.

Reebok executives denied rumors they have contacted other agencies and that "U.B.U." and its creator, Chiat/-Day's New York office, are in danger of being axed.

"Not true and not true," said Reebok International President C. Joseph LaBonte, who nevertheless acknowledged that "a lot of us have been worried about how it might be perceived. It's on the edge, not conventional at all. . . . But playing it safe is not what this company is about."

Reebok spends $44 million annually on advertising;

Jesse Jackson's adman reviews first wave of political spots—P. 6

Want to know the Phil Dusenberry method of determining the winner of the presidential debate between George Bush and Michael Dukakis?

It's easy, says the chairman-ceo of BBDO Worldwide's New York office, who served as creative adviser to the 1984 ad team of President Reagan. "If you can take the 90 minutes of [debate] film and come out of it with 60 seconds worth of catchy phrases, one-liners and sound bites by your candidate, then he's the winner," Mr. Dusenberry said. "In 1984, we had Ronald Reagan and his priceless one-liner—'There he goes again.' "

Conversely, the surest way to spot the loser of yesterday's debate is to see which candidate follows up on the verbal sparring match with the biggest, newest wave of commercials, said veteran Republican media buyer Anthony Fabrizio, president of Multi Media Services, Alexandria, Va.

"If you looked bad in the debate and lost, then you've got to get right back out there to re-establish yourself," Mr. Fabrizio said. "The winner gets to enjoy all the free media about him winning, but the loser has to get his name back out there through commercials."

The president-ceo of President Reagan's 1984 "Tuesday Team," Jim Travis, did just that after the president's poor showing in the first debate in 1984.

Mr. Travis followed the debate with a flight of tax-increase commercials attacking Democrat Walter Mondale, who was enjoying favorable post-debate media reports.

"The first thing you want to do if the other

Nestle mulls more control of media buys

By KEVIN COTE

Nestle is studying ways to take greater control of its media buying, which would probably reduce the role of its ad agencies—first in Europe and then possibly the U.S.

The marketer, which claimed worldwide media billings of about $1 billion last year, is reacting to plans of several major agencies—including Saatchi & Saatchi Co., Omnicom Group and Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide—to combine media-buying operations to gain more clout and presumably discounts.

"I'm looking for a long-term solution in Europe. . . What we learn in Europe today may be valuable in the U.S. in five years' time," said Michel Reinarz, director of visual communications at the Vevey, Switzerland-based marketer.

Nestle is working with consultants and its agencies' executives, including McCann-Erickson Worldwide, J. Walter Thompson Co., Lintas:Worldwide and Publicis, to formulate a worldwide policy, which it hopes to complete by late next month.

"We can't wait any longer to develop a company policy on media buying," Mr. Reinarz said.

A copy of a Nestle presentation to its agencies was secured by Euromarketing, ADVERTISING AGE's European newsletter.

In the presentation, Mr. Reinarz indicates there's only one option on the centralized media-buying issue

Ferrell quits Y&R in creative revamp

By JON LAFAYETTE

NEW YORK—In trying to regain its creative edge, Young & Rubicam let the ax fall on John Ferrell.

Mr. Ferrell, 44, quit Y&R last week after 21 years. That decision came after he was replaced as creative director of one of the office's three groups by Eric Weber, 46, who recently rejoined the agency from Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton (AA, Sept. 19).

The bow-tied Mr. Ferrell has been one of the highest-profile creatives on Madison Avenue since a long story about his idiosyncratic approach to advertising appeared in Esquire in 1982.

He was offered other positions at Y&R but said the jobs "didn't fit in with what I want to do."

J. Ferrell

E. Weber

Y&R has made a number of moves to improve its creative work during the past year, and Mr. Ferrell, who until last year had been creative director of the New York office, should have been able to read the handwriting on the wall.

Last October, the creative job was split into three groups from one, which reduced Mr. Ferrell's role to Group One creative director.

At the time, the always enthusiastic executive talked mainly about the advantages of being closer to the work and to people working for him. But in an interview last week, Mr. Ferrell admitted the change left him with "not more responsibility, but less."

He said he "missed the authorit

Philip Morris surpasses P&G

By R. CRAIG ENDICOTT

Philip Morris Cos. has topped Procter & Gamble Co. as the nation's No. 1 advertiser.

P&G had held the No. 1 spot since passing General Motors Corp. on the charts 24 years ago.

Tobacco, beer and food giant Philip Morris parlayed a get-tough policy into aggressive advertising, pushing its total U.S. ad spending to $1.56 billion in 1987.

P&G, which has been in a low spending cycle in new-product marketing, spent $1.39 billion, down 7.6% from 1986. No. 3 GM was the only other advertiser to break the billion-dollar mark.

The 7.4% year-to-year growth in national ad spending at Philip Morris outshown the 4.3% composite growth of the nation's 100 leading advertisers, according to ADVERTISING AGE's 33rd annual report on the 100 Leaders, to be published in a special issue Sept. 28.

Of the 100 companies, there were 35 with reduced national spending.

The top 100 continued to favor network TV among the 11 media measured in the report. It accounted for $6.67 billion, or 23.5%, of $15.36 billion in media advertising. These advertisers represented 72.6% of all network spending in 1987.

P&G remained the top network advertiser with $377.6 million, down 15.6% from 1986. Philip Morris was close behind at $330.8 million, down 3.4%.

Total spending of the 100 came to $28.4 billion, including heavy "unmeasured" spending of $13.04 billion. The so-called unmeasured advertising includes couponing, in-store displays, newspaper free standing inserts, direct marketing, special events and promotions.

Philip Morris, tiring of the earnings performance at two of its big subsidiaries, General Foods Corp. and Miller Brewing Co., ordered a reversal and ended up spending aggressively for advertising.

The company first became a contender for the top spot in 1985 by acquiring GF, which that year spent $450 million on U.S. advertising.

A similar development has occurred now, with Eastman Kodak Co.'s acquisition of Sterling Drug. Combined ad spending has elevated Kodak to No. 7, from No. 34 the previous year.#

NBC ratings belly-flop forces ad make-goods

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—Poor ratings for the 1988 Summer Olympics telecasts are forcing NBC to give advertisers substantial "make-goods" on their commercial buys.

The low ratings are also creating a web of finger-pointing and excuses within and outside the network.

Ratings had fallen nearly 20% below guarantees at midweek last week. NBC reserved blocks of commercial time within the Olympics telecasts to pay back advertisers if ratings took a nosedive, but it's unclear how much make-good time is left.

Olympics '88

The network acknowledged, however, that some advertisers would have to accept make-good commercials, paybacks for ratings underdelivery, in other network shows.

"Everybody's not going to be taken care of in the Games," said Bert Zeldin, VP-Olympic sales, who was at the Games in Seoul last week. "[But] nobody's panicked."

The seriousness of the make-good situation won't be fully known until the end of this week, when the Games conclude. But last week's poor showing suggests NBC will be hard-pressed to reach the 21.2 average Nielsen rating it promised advertisers.

Make-goods pose a problem for both network and advertiser. If audience underdelivery continues at current levels, NBC's projected $65 million profit on the Games will be wiped out.

Advertisers, some of whom bought time on NBC's telecast to culminate two-year promotional efforts, also will be hurt if their make-good spots are shunted into other

Honda scoops the Air Force, revealing both of their stealthy models in a new spot.

A Prelude to Stealth

Honda '89 campaign ready for takeoff

By CLEVELAND HORTON

The TV commercial opens with a stark, ominous picture of the supersecret flying wing known as the Stealth bomber.

Various hoses start uncoupling and falling away from the craft as it slowly rolls out on a runway.

But as the voice of "Hill Street Blues" star Daniel J. Travanti tells viewers the U.S. government soon will be unveiling the Stealth, a sleek, black Honda Prelude Si pulls up under the aircraft.

"For the record," Mr. Travanti says, "we introduced ours first."

Yes, American Honda Motor Co. will give the U.S. Air Force a little advance (and unwanted?) publicity in the centerpiece TV spot of its estimated $140 million 1989 model year ad campaign.

The commercial, from Los Angeles agency Rubin Postaer & Associates, features an almost full-size mock-up—20 tons of mock-up!—of the B-2, as it's more officially known, constructed in the Mojave Desert by

Execs see 'newsmagazine of the '90s'

'Time' revamp set

By PATRICK REILLY

NEW YORK--The Time Inc. mystery is solved. Or, at least, one Time Inc. mystery is solved.

The company, rocked in the past 10 days by rumors it was a takeover target or headed toward a major restructuring, is involved in neither, executives said.

Instead, its executives are preparing to unveil significant changes and additions to Time, the company's 65-year-old flagship publication.

Time, the nation's largest weekly newsmagazine, will introduce the changes in the Oct. 17 issue, on newsstands Oct. 10. While Time won't deviate from its traditional review of the week's news, some of the changes include several new departments, such as "Travel" and "Interview," a question-and-answer feature with leading personalities. At the same time, existing departments such as "Critic's Choice" and "People" will be expanded.

So significant are the changes in the newsweekly that Time Inc. executives, through an internal memo issued earlier this month, called a "drop everything" meeting of all Time salespeople and managers Sept. 27 here. At the meeting, Managing Editor Henry Muller will explain the changes to the staff.

Henry Muller peruses Time's redesigned news pages.

The call for the meeting itself was reported in New York media and fueled rumors that a major management shake-up was coming at Time or that Time Inc. itself was restructuring. The speculation prompted wide stock fluctuations.

While restructuring has been ruled out by top Time Inc. executives, it was clear from interviews with ADVERTISING AGE that they're eager to usher Time into a new era.

"It really is Henry Muller's vision of what the newsmagazine of the 1990s ought to be," said Reginald Brack, president of the Time Inc. Magazine Group. "It sweeps away the old vestiges of Time."

The changes are purely editorial, and Mr. Brack contended they weren't made specifically to appeal to advertisers. However, he expects a positive reception from the advertising community.

"New ad adjacencies could flow from this, but we aren't

Campbell reheats 'M'm m'm good'

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

Campbell Soup Co., which has vowed "back-to-basics" marketing, is reviving one of its best-loved ad themes: "M'm m'm good."

The theme reappears this week after a decade-long hiatus and will be backed by a $10 million boost in ad spending.

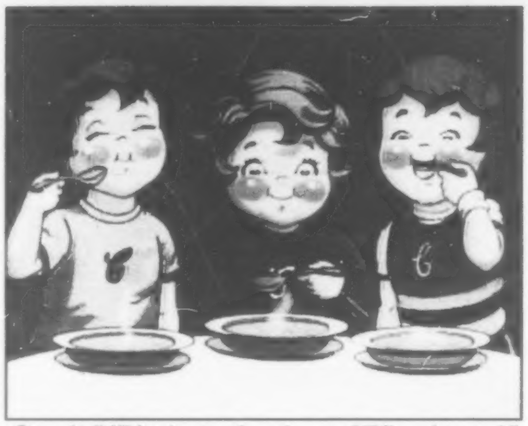
The company's strategy is to emphasize equity in its established products and focus the bulk of its estimated $260 million budget on those lines, particularly canned and frozen foods.

Spending on the red-and-white label soups, Campbell's oldest and dearest product, is expected to get the biggest hike in ad spending, rising 20% from last year's estimated $50 million to $60 million for 1989. Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, handles.

Research showed the "M'm m'm good" tag is so closely identified with Campbell that 74% of all adults remember it, said Jay Wissink, director of marketing for condensed soups.

The theme "means a lot more than taste; it's a feeling, it's emotional," Mr. Wissink said. He said it conveys the idea that "soup tastes good and makes you feel good" more succinctly than "Soup is good food," Campbell's most recent theme. That theme stressed the product's healthful qualities.

Another company source said reviving the theme was Campbell's idea and was strongly resisted by Backer. BBDO Worldwide created the "M'm m'm good" line.



Campbell Kids sing another chorus of "M'm m'm good."

The new national TV effort plays heavily on emotions, showing slice-of-life vignettes.

The first spot shows a mother commiserating with her child's less-than-perfect grades by serving him alphabet soup. The child picks A's and B's out of his soup to show Mom he'll do better next time.

In other commercials for children's soups such as Chicken & Stars, Campbell is reviving another company icon—the Campbell Kids.

Themed "What kind of Campbell Kid are you?" the commercials use quick cuts, live action and animation to show children eating soup. The 30-second spots will run mainly on Saturday morning and late-afternoon programming.

"Kids are growth opportunity for soups," Mr. Wissink said, adding that the spots aim to communicate not just good taste but the fun and satisfying qualities of Campbell's soup.

The prepared-soup market has been flat for several years, a troubling fact for Campbell, which has 66% of that business. Despite Campbell's $30 million boost in spending in fiscal 1988, prepared-soup sales for the year ending July 1988 were up only slightly from 1987, by 5.1% to $1.85 billion.

Mr. Wissink said company studies indicate consumers have eight to 10 cans of Campbell soup in their cabinets at any given time. The new campaign strives to get consumers to dust them off and serve them.

Campbell is facing some hot competition from regional brands and private-label soups.

Progresso, now owned by Pet Inc., has been gaining share in its regional core markets, primarily in the East.

To combat competitors, Campbell is allocating a larger chunk of its regional marketing budget to soups.

"We'll be doing more aggressive advertising, more aggressive couponing and committing more to spot TV advertising this year than in the past," Mr. Wissink said. "There will be more local funds for regional brand sales managers to generate displays and feature activity."#

New Goodyear ads raise awareness

By SCOTT HUME

"Breakthrough creative," that much-discussed but rarely seen phenomenon, can appear in some unexpected product categories.

Tire advertising, for example.

Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.'s advertising consistently has been the first- or second-best recalled in the tire category in ADVERTISING AGE'S monthly adWatch survey. The "Goodyear, take me home" theme helped it gain very good top-of-mind awareness.

But last year, Goodyear changed agencies, shifting the account to Young & Rubicam's Detroit and New York offices from J. Walter Thompson USA, New York (AA, Nov. 23).

Y&R's first advertising for Goodyear is dramatically different from what the company—and its competitors—has done before.

Consumers have noticed the change, in a category that seldom arouses large-scale changes in ad awareness.

Last month, when the 1,000 adWatch survey respondents were asked to name the first tire advertising they recalled, Goodyear was named first by 27.5%. That was an increase of more than 5 percentage points from the 22.2% share of first mentions Goodyear got in the July survey.

Y&R's first advertising, which broke in July, focused on Goodyear's Certified Auto Services outlets. TV commercials pose a rapid series of questions about viewers' auto-service needs, interspersed with humorous scenes of motorists and their cars. The theme is "Nobody fits you like Goodyear."

That same theme and creative approach is used in Y&R's advertising specifically for Goodyear's tires. That advertising began Sept. 17 during NBC's Olympics telecast (AA, Sept. 12), after the August survey was taken.

AdWatch survey of advertising awareness Top 10 in August

One thousand people were asked: Of all the advertising you have seen, heard or read in the past 30 days, which advertisement first comes to mind? Source: SRI Research Center, Lincoln, Neb.

7	—	Want ads/classifieds	Various
8	9	Chevrolet	Lintas:Campbell-Ewald
9	—	Political ads	Various
10	8	Tide	Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton

Interestingly, in addition to being the best-recalled, Goodyear's was the only advertising among the top finishers that was better recalled by men than women.

Of the 275 respondents who named Goodyear first, 58% were men and 42% were women. For Michelin Tire Corp., which finished second with 184 mentions, the split was 41% male, 59% female. For third-place Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (65 first mentions), the split was 37% male, 63% female.

Goodyear's advertising didn't break through enough to gain it a spot among the top 10, however. When respondents were asked to name the first advertising overall (regardless of category) that came to mind, the winners were, in descending order, Pepsi-Cola, Coca-Cola, the California Raisin Advisory Board, Anheuser-Busch's Budweiser/Bud Light, Ford, McDonald's, want ads/classifieds, Chevrolet, political ads and Procter & Gamble Co.'s Tide.

AdWatch is a joint project of AD AGE and SRI Research Center. Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the advertising that comes to mind first, both overall and in specific product categories.

Last month, 1,000 people were polled by phone. The survey has a margin of error of 3.1%.

Radio reps dance to new beat

Shakeups, growth, research woes stir unprecedented race for stations

By David J. Wallace

After crawling through a prolonged infancy, the Spanish radio rep business is learning to run before it walks. Having experienced growing pains caused by tremendous expansion—total Spanish-language radio market billings soared 102% in five years to $162.8 million last year, according to Hispanic Business—rep companies are gearing up for a new level of competition.

Spanish Broadcasting System triggered further upheaval in March when it pulled representation of its five stations in-house, eliminating the strongest outlets handled by Major Market Radio Sales/Espanol. Julio Omana, MMR's general manager, joined SBS to head up its fledgling network and MMR closed, starting a mad dash for MMR's other stations.

"Everybody scrambled for stations to fill out their lineups," says Gene Bryan, national sales manager, Katz Hispanic Radio, which was slugging it out with Caballero Radio Network and Lotus Hispanic Reps for the spun off stations.

Now SBS has joined the fray. "We're not actively pursuing it. I created it simply to rep my own stations because I couldn't consolidate them with any other firm [as a result of conflicts with existing lineups]. But we're finding out that other stations want to be aligned with us and we're talking to some in Texas and California," says Raul Alarcon Jr., SBS president.

With his stations' annual national sales of $8 million, he says the savings realized by cutting out the middleman are substantial.

Agencies are thrilled with the upheaval. The business, previously having been dominated by two companies, is now more evenly distributed among four players, says Meg Bernot, media director at Publicidad Siboney. "It is now more competitive in terms of both rates and services."

Radio station owners agree the wider choice of rep firms has improved services. "It has required all of them to do a better job," says Mac Tichenor, president of Tichenor Spanish Radio.

Part of that has been expanding stations' reach. This summer CRN affiliated with Interep Radio Networks, tapping into the latter's penetration into general-market advertising agencies.

"It's very important that they have a stronger general market presence," says Mr. Tichenor. "Eduardo [Caballero] has always been very good at marketing." But Katz provides stronger audience research and analysis, he says, adding that this area is the future battleground and explaining why his stations are repped by Katz.

Rick Kraushaar, president of Lotus Hispanic Reps, says Spanish radio cannot be bought by ratings because of book-to-book fluctuations and questions about the accuracy of audience measurement. More emphasis is placed on the strategy of Spanish radio instead of simply buying ratings, he says.

The radio industry currently is slogging through an internal debate on audience measurement. Early recommendations by the Spanish Radio Advisory Council were rejected by station owners (AA, April 25). The SRAC, composed of client companies, agencies and media, later was folded into an Advertising Research Foundation subcommittee.

With the confused state of ratings research, most reps still focus on a concept sell.

The issue, however, remains whether clients will continue to buy the pitch. "Agencies are requiring more sophistication from radio sellers because clients are asking for that," says Mr. Bryan, adding that Katz will sell concept or numbers depending what works with a prospective client. "In Paris, you have to speak French."

Mr. Caballero describes Katz

FM format sets N.Y. abuzz

Alarcon eyes mostly Spanish-some English hybrid

The tongues were wagging in New York. What set them off was not that Raul Alarcon Jr. spent an estimated $55 million to $65 million to acquire WEVD-FM last month from Forward Association, but speculation concerning the programming format New York's first Spanish-language FM station would adopt.

"The biggest rumor was that it would be a bilingual station, Spanish jocks with 50-50 English-Spanish music, a Contemporary Hit Radio/Spanish hybrid," says Gene Bryan, national sales manager, Katz Hispanic Radio.

New York seems to be the ideal place to test this format: A number of stations in Puerto Rico experiment with it, and 45% of New York Hispanics are Puerto Rican.

"I've heard the whole gamut of speculation," says Mr. Alarcon, president of Spanish Broadcasting System. He lays the rumors to rest by defining the format as a less Anglicized version of Mr. Bryan's description. "We'll have a sprinkling of English-language artists, maybe one or two numbers per hour."

As its name suggests, the CHR/Spanish hybrid is both English and Spanish-language media.

"The beauty of this is you can position the station against Spanish dollars and English dollars," says Mr. Bryan, noting that New York stations WHTZ-FM and WQHT-FM and Los Angeles outlets KIIS-FM and KPWR-FM pitch this crossover segment. But they do so from an English-language perspective, which has caused them problems at Hispanic agencies (See story on S-13).

"Doing it all in Spanish from an Hispanic agency's point of view is the format to use. Not so much for logistical reasons but that Spanish-dominant Hispanics are the group we want to address," says Font & Vaamonde Associates Exec VP Rochelle Newman, who questions Hispanic media focusing on English-language music and videos when they are readily available on general-market

Miami makin' waves

'Prototype of future Hispanic radio market' at point where it's 'easier to reach than Anglo market'

By David J. Wallace

The following is a test of the Spanish radio free market system. This is only a test.

With nine Spanish-language radio stations in south Florida, advertising and radio executives are wondering if the market has a ceiling. Currently, six AM and three FM Spanish-language stations are spread across the dial, more than in any other U.S. Hispanic market. At press time, WWFE-AM was expected to start by month's end, bringing the total to 10.

"Miami is a prototype of the future Hispanic radio market. You have a few properties that are the top dogs and then the others that are surviving on only a local level," says Gene Bryan, national sales manager, Katz Hispanic Radio. "L.A. is following [with seven stations], New York is coming closer now that the new [WEVD-FM] is joining." San Antonio with six stations and San Francisco with five also rank among rapidly maturing radio markets, he says.

George Hyde, general manager of WQBA (AM/FM), Miami, says he thought the local Spanish radio market might have been saturated six years ago when he first came to Miami. But the market has kept pace, with south Florida's Hispanic population growing 33.3% since 1980 to 949,000.

But that figure falls far below the Hispanic populations of Los Angeles and New York, leading to questions of whether Miami's audience can support all of the stations.

Most Spanish-language radio executives say all major Hispanic markets could support more stations. In comparing non-Hispanic population figures and the number of general-market stations with Hispanic population totals and Spanish-language stations, it appears the Hispanic radio market is underpenetrated. For example, 32 English-language stations serve south Florida.

But the logic stumbles when advertising revenue is the yardstick. Although WQBA—when its AM and FM ad dollars are combined—is the market's No. 1 station with $8 million in ad revenue, it is the only Spanish-language operation to rank among the Top 6, according to "The James Duncan Radio Report." Gross ad revenues among Spanish stations are estimated to be about 25% of the local radio market's total.

As the Spanish-language station count increases, the radio dollars spent in each market become crucial. Hispanic Business estimates that in 1987 Los Angeles' seven Spanish-language radio stations shared $31.5 million in ad revenues, Miami's nine outlets attracted $28 million and New York's four pulled $20 million.

Radio executives say Miami's situation is unique, citing area Hispanics' high median income, greater interest and involvement in local and international affairs and thriving business-oriented economy.

"The answer is simple: There's good money going into Miami," says Mr. Bryan. Spanish-language stations can compete directly with general-market outlets in both Miami and San Antonio, where Spanish-language outlets rank in the markets' top five, he says.

Between 25% to 30% of all national radio ad dollars spent in Miami end up in Spanish radio, Mr. Bryan says. "And the top three station groups are taking most of those. The others are surviving on local dollars."

South Florida's promotion-oriented small business community provides an ample source of local ad dollars, says Mr. Hyde. "Nobody at Libby's or Del Monte got rich because of gross ratings points. The question is, 'Do we make the cash register ring?' "

News/talk formats attract audiences to the AM band, primarily because of the exile experience, Mr. Hyde says. Recently arrived Cuban and Nicaraguan refugees closely monitor events in their former countries. Controversial radio talk show hosts, such as WQBA-AM's Tomas Garcia Fuste, develop strong audience loyalty.

But Herbert Levin, senior VP at WADO-AM, New York, and a Miami radio market veteran, questions whether increasingly specialized programming can attract necessary ad support. "The market is too fragmented. Frankly, I think it's overbuilt," he says.

Format specialization to reach Hispanic subgroups reflects general-market radio fragmentation, says Dick Kelsey, director-media and mar-

Networks battle for the sexes

Little to attract 18-34 male targets, buyers complain

By Kristine Stiven

A demographics dilemma is retarding the ad growth of Spanish-language broadcasters Telemundo Group and Univision Network.

"There's virtually no programming out there for men, and there's nothing for young people," says Eileen McKnight, Tatham-Laird & Kudner's group media director/Procter & Gamble. "If you've got an 18-34 [male] target there's nothing for you to buy."

Current programming is skewed too heavily to women, claim agency executives, adding that a wider variety of advertisers will not embrace Spanish TV without more diverse programming that targets other demographic categories.

"We need more opportunities for them to reach their audience," says Laura Marella, media director, Casanova, Pendrill Publicidad. "For the taste of some of my clients, programming is a bit skewed towards novelas, and therefore the women's market."

Henry Silverman, Telemundo's president-ceo, admits the predominance of novelas is seen as a big problem, "although more men watch them than you'd think . . . We're reworking our programming to bring in different groups."

Telemundo will debut a Friday night boxing package Oct. 14 to attract men. To broaden its programming's appeal, first-run Spanish-language motion pictures will join the line-up through a joint agreement between Telemundo and Million Dollar Video, which imports the films from Mexico.

The client's interest should come first."

English media reps say Hispanic agencies are afraid they will lose their budgets to the general-market agency if they recommend an English-language buy.

Nancy Tellet, VP-media director at Conill Advertising, says that is not a big concern and that most agencies recognize crossover media plays a role. "If you want to reach all Hispanics, that should be part of a buy." But she says that crossover buys currently are considered part of a general-market buy.

Hispanic agencies need to reposition themselves as segment specialists, serving the same function as black market agencies, says Gene Bryan, national sales manager, Katz Hispanic Radio. "Then they could go in and tap general-market budgets."

That scenario pits them against the general-market shop, however. And it is unlikely clients will increase budgets to buy crossover media, says Meg Bernot, media director at Publicidad Siboney.

Although 95% of Hispanic agencies' time is spent on Spanish-language business, they should explore any alternative to position themselves for the inevitable growth of the bilingual, bicultural segment, says Carl Kravetz, VP-general manager, Ferrer/Ad America. "Forward-thinking agencies see they have to do a good job in both languages."

In handling an English-language, Hispanic-oriented spot for client McDonald's Operators Associations' San Francisco/San Jose Region, Ferrer solved the agency problem—"primarily a semantics issue," says Mr. Kravetz—by focusing on its area of expertise in planning Hispanic creative. General-market shop DJMC placed the media, "which it could do much more efficiently than we could."

The issues of media efficiency and rate cards haunt English-language radio broadcasters that pitch Hispanic agencies. "Spanish-language media is comparatively very cost efficient at reaching an Hispanic target," says Ms. Tellet.

Ms. Greenspan admits that spots on WQHT probably cost about three times more than those on New York's top Spanish-language stations. According to Birch/Scarborough Research, WQHT has a 27.8 share of average quarter hour Hispanic listeners age 12 to 17, however; WADO has a less than 0.1 share.

"If they talk in terms of efficiencies against a specific Hispanic segment, we're very competitive," she says.

Hispanic hits elusive for Big 3 networks

But potential is so attractive they may keep trying

CBS' "Trial and Error," as it turns out, was largely a trial and an error. The network ran only a few episodes of the sitcom, which starred two Hispanic actors, before yanking it.

The show typifies the Big 3 networks' attempts to reach Hispanics. ABC canned the drama series "Juarez" before it hit the air; another sitcom, ABC's "I Married Dora," also was short lived.

But Spanish-language media should not snicker at the networks' attempts, says Meg Bernot, media director, Publicidad Siboney.

"It would be naive to think that there aren't general-market media executives out there planning for ways to counter the need for Spanish-language media, whether its programming, audience numbers or studies of advertising effectiveness," she says. NBC's Spanish-language network promos are a result of the networks' realizing the market's potential, she says.

Barbara Corday, exec VP-prime-time programs, CBS Entertainment, says the network is interested in creating a "Hispanic-based show similar to the way you'd say a 'black' show. I think we will probably look to have more Hispanic characters in our shows."

The shows need to reach a higher level, however, says Ms. Bernot, adding that networks' attempts have been reminiscent of early comedies featuring black characters. "They were made for white audiences; it was whites laughing, not the blacks."

Doug Alligood, VP-special markets at BBDO, says the networks will have to replicate the "Bill Cosby situation," where Hispanics have executive and creative control. Currently, no Hispanics are in those positions, he says.

While Mr. Alligood says the Spanish-language networks have to be aware that children are growing up on the high production values of general-market TV, the Big 3, which have to program for the mainstream, will have a difficult time addressing the Hispanic market's nationalities. "They have a tough row to hoe. If they cast a Puerto Rican as a Mexican, they'd have some real problems," he says.

However, the networks have to create more crossover appeal because they will need the numbers, Mr. Alligood says.

"Ratings certainly are an issue," says Ms. Corday.

But she also says the networks philosophically need to represent and accurately mirror every population segment.

"It may not add 10 rating points to a show, but it is our responsibility as broadcasters to represent the world as it exists," she says.

Although the pie still is too small to grab their attention, the Big 3 will come out with some shows that work, says Browning Holcombe, senior VP, director-sales and marketing, Univision Network. "But until they do them in Spanish, they will fall short."

To prove the point, Joaquin Blaya, Univision's president-ceo, says Paul Rodriguez, one of "Trial and Error's" principal actors, is doing a Univision special.

"He said he had to do it because his mother didn't think he had a real job until he did a program with us."

spot on a New York Spanish-language radio station for $45, while a general-market buy would cost up to 10 times as much, says Raul Alarcon Jr., president, Spanish Broadcasting System.

"They have to realize they will have to pay more," he adds. Mr. Alarcon hopes to get $500 for a 60-second spot on his new AM/FM combination.

Advertisers buy at bargain rates because they—not the media—bargain from a position of strength. Advertisers and agencies are taking advantage of a surplus of commercial time inventory, Mr. Silverman says.

"There will be significant price increases when occupancy increases," he points out. Telemundo's occupancy has increased from 40% two years ago to 60% in 1988.

"At that pace we'll be at 90% in three years and that's when we'll push the rates," says Mr. Silverman, adding that the network has raised rates 10% to 15% annually.

Tichenor Spanish Radio is analyzing specific dayparts and raising rates accordingly, because its stations' inventories are sold out at specific times.

But Mac Tichenor, TSR president, says unsold inventory is not the sole reason rates remain static. "You are tied to what the rates were last year."

Agencies might agree a market is underpriced, but will contest percentage increases. "We've gone into markets that were underpriced and found a 25% or more increase warranted, and they scream bloody murder," Mr. Tichenor says.

Although he could justify a 100% rate increase on some of Telemundo's programs, Mr. Silverman says to do so would be to invite marketplace suicide. "We can't go in and say that $5,000 spot is now $10,000. They'd tell us to stuff it," he says.

Bill Grimes, president-ceo, Univision Holdings, says attractive percentage increases were the key to raising commercial rates while he steered ESPN toward greater profitability.

"We can raise prices aggressively and still deliver better CPMs. But it won't get pushed to parity tomorrow. Pigs can get fat, but hogs can get slaughtered," he says.

Language debaters fluent in defense

By Marie Spadoni

Hispanic media executives are far from tongue-tied in an expanding battle over primary language in print.

The emergence of English-language print media as a viable Hispanic marketing tool has clearly created a rift in the ranks. Those print media executives selecting English as the language of choice see it as the only way to go. Their Spanish-language brethren admit it may have a role—albeit a minor one.

"What makes an Hispanic an Hispanic is the language. That is where the word 'Hispanic' comes from," says Enrique Perez, advertising director of the Spanish-language Diario las Americas. "If you are of Hispanic origin and English becomes your realm, you are no longer truly an Hispanic."

Those are fighting words to people like Alfredo Estrada, publisher of English-language monthly Hispanic, which launched in April. "To get ahead in the U.S. market, you need to speak English. I believe it is the wave of the future."

Both stances have merit, leading Whittle Communications to carefully analyze the best approach, says Ashley Shoemaker, marketing director. Whittle is considering launching an Hispanic-oriented publication but has not decided whether to use English or Spanish.

"There are lots of issues [involved]. Most of the population growth is still coming from [immigrants] who are not primarily speaking English. But logic tells you that people who are brought up in our school system are going to be very comfortable with English," he says.

So far, Mr. Shoemaker adds, it "seems like most people flip a coin to decide which language. We hope to take a more reasoned approach."

The growing number of second and third generation U.S. Hispanics has fueled the English-language print movement. Another factor is the success of Vista, a 3-year-old, English-language Hispanic-oriented newspaper supplement and the first Hispanic publication to hit 1 million circulation. This month the supplement, distributed free inside 28 English-language newspapers to more than 1.2 million households in Hispanic areas, increased its frequency from monthly to weekly.

and we run the Spanish version, we lock out those people who don't speak Spanish," he says.

As the concept of English-media-for-Hispanic-audiences expands, advertisers are weighing available vehicles against more traditional Spanish-language buys. The onus is on the programmers to deliver audience numbers.

"There are a lot of shows like this popping up. But because of limited budgets for Hispanic media, there aren't a lot of advertisers who can afford to experiment," says one agency media executive. "We met with [World Television], but they were still very fuzzy about their numbers and how they would validate the audience. We can't spend the money just because it's a 'new, special show.' "

Diane Librizzi, Bravo account exec at World Television, contends the show's format allows for creative selling. "When we go to an Hispanic agency we pitch the Spanish-language version, but tell them we'd like to be a part of their general-market efforts.

"Then we approach clients who are new to the market and see it as a high-visibility maneuver into the marketplace," says Ms. Librizzi, claiming the show is near "closing some big business."

The show is sold on a cash-barter basis where syndicating stations buy Bravo and an accompanying three minutes of national advertising. Another three minutes of spot time must be sold by the station. "It's a 50-50 split, a pretty standard sell," says Ms. Fortuin.

Carlos Sabatino, World president, says his goal was to clear 95% of U.S. Hispanic households by yearend, and is guaranteeing 80% coverage in the fourth quarter. "We still think the figure is realistic."

Ms. Galan, who created the show, says the work is hard but rewarding. "Every time you see another market come on it's like having another baby. My family is getting pretty big."

MAXWELL'S MARKET SHARES

Marketers milk cold-cereal sales

By JOHN C. MAXWELL JR.

Health-conscious U.S. consumers are pouring record amounts of cold cereal into their bowls, as marketers capitalize on interest in high-fiber, low-fat diets.

The cold-cereal industry saw another record year in 1987, with volume up 3.9% to 2.37 billion pounds. In dollars, the market was up 8.9% to $5.3 billion.

It's expected that unit volume this year will grow 3% to 4% again, and the market in dollars should be up at least another 9%.

The industry took a 5% price increase toward the end of 1987, and another 5.5% price hike was added last July.

The main growth areas in 1987 were family products and adult products. Kellogg Co. pretty much maintained share and is now moving ahead, led by such new products as Mueslix and Pro Grain, as well as some additions to the fruit-filled biscuit line.

General Mills lost some share but is now aggressively backing its overall portfolio with share probably up 0.5 to 1 percentage point compared with all of 1987.

The company entered the hot oatmeal area in September 1987, and that segment has grown 15% to 20% in units. New items in that segment are expected this fall. General Mills has 7% of the overall market, and 13% to 14% of the instant portion.

General Foods Corp., which had about maintained share last year, is starting to see its share erode again, at least half a point so far. Quaker Oats Co., which saw some nice share increases last year, is relatively flat now and is spending more than $40 million to maintain its market position in the hot cereal category against General Mills.

The other company that appears to be losing share overall is Ralston Purina Co., as some of the fad (licensed) cereals weaken along with Chex. However, Ralston's private-label group appears to still be moving up.

Nabisco Brands has recently introduced Frosted Wheat Squares. Initial acceptance is positive.

New products such as Fruit Wheats have been extremely well accepted, and Nabisco is going through aggressive capital spending to expand production capacity.#

Food brokers back regional moves

WASHINGTON—The nation's food brokers want to work with food manufacturers to create regionalized ad and promotion programs, but they worry about increased costs.

That's among the key conclusions of a survey of attitudes toward regional marketing commissioned by the National Food Brokers Association.

More than half (54%) of the food manufacturers responding to questionnaires said they've implemented regional marketing programs (promotion and/or advertising efforts tailored to local market needs); another 12% say they plan to do so in the near future.

Regional marketing activity is most common in dry groceries and frozen foods. More than three-fourths of the brokers responding (78%) said they've encountered regional marketing efforts for dry groceries; 71% said the same of frozen foods.

Health & beauty aids came in third, at 26%.

Dechert-Hampe & Co., a Chicago-based sales and marketing company, handled the survey, mailing questionnaires to 250 food brokers (who function as a bridge between manufacturers and retailers) and

Lotteries sell luck at home

By LAURO LORO

The odds that couch potatoes can get rich are growing.

By mid-1989 the Pennsylvania Lottery will decide whether to become the eighth state lottery to introduce subscription service.

A subscription provides players automatic weekly entry of the same numbers for six months or a year. Cost of a subscription ranges from $50 to $100, depending on the state, subscription length and amount bet.

Of the 29 states with lotteries, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New York and Vermont have subscription service, said Terri La Fleur, senior editor, Gaming & Wagering Business. Subscription sales account for 3% or less of total sales in each state, she said.

The Pennsylvania lottery reported 1987 sales of $1.4 billion, up 7.5% from a year earlier. Lewis, Gilman & Kynett, Philadelphia, handles the $8.9 million account.

Subscription service "guarantees someone has bought the product and will continue to buy it and [most often will] automatically renew that subscription, because they've had the numbers for quite a while and don't want to give them up," said Frances McDonnell, PR manager of the Massachusetts State Lottery.

The New York Lottery expects 1988 subscription revenues of $17.5 million, slightly more than 1% of total revenues of $1.6 billion. Michigan's subscriptions account for about 1% of total sales, projected at $1.15 billion for fiscal 1988. Subscriptions in New Hampshire accounted for about 3% of fiscal 1987 revenues of $75 million.

While states see subscription service as a convenience serving a small pool of players, it once was used to draw out-of-state players. But in 1985, the U.S. Postal Service prohibited interstate lottery sales via mail. Other federal statutes also regulate interstate lottery sales. "That has crushed the business," Ms. La Fleur said.

Still, these programs enable lotteries to find new players and markets, said Mel Nasielski, exec VP, Allan & Nasielski, Philadelphia. The ad agency, specializing in direct mail, is preparing a proposal for Pennsylvania.

Using their own data, lotteries can find prospective players by comparing the demographics of strong sales areas, such as inner-city neighborhoods, with those of areas similar in demographics but weak in sales, he said.

Direct-mail subscription also can introduce new games to heavy players, as well as target upscale players who are too busy to wait in line or too embarrassed to admit they play, Mr. Nasielski said.

Tri-State Megabucks, the joint lottery of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, promotes its Season Pass subscription as a Christmas gift, using spokesman Robin Leach. Pick Three Ltd., Brattleboro, Vt., handles Tri-State's $3 million account.

While most states don't spend much promoting subscriptions, heavier, year-round investing in direct mail could boost subscription sales to 4% to 5% of total sales, Ms. La Fleur said.

Subscription is just the beginning of lottery direct marketing, Ms. La Fleur said. Ticket sales via automated teller machines and in-home sales via interactive TV and telephone are on the horizon. For example, New Hampshire sells subscriptions over the phone; players pay with a credit card. The California State Lottery is considering phone sales and other distribution, said Jim Barnett, executive director.

Out-of-state players also can buy New Hampshire subscriptions. The lottery sends information by United Parcel Service rather than the postal service. However, a U.S. Department of Justice spokesman said that such interstate sales are illegal under federal statutes governing lotteries. But the Justice Department hasn't brought any cases against state lotteries for that practice.

Rick Wisler, New Hampshire games manager, said, "The feds have never approached us. [UPS] checked with their lawyers, who said it was fine when second-day air service was used rather than ground service."

Bob Kenney, UPS spokesman, said the statute that applies to mailing lottery materials prohibits on-ground interstate transportation but doesn't cover air shipments.

Subscription service has its drawbacks. State agencies must be cautious approaching heavy players, who tend to be low-income minorities, Ms. La Fleur said. States also worry that such easy access will harm compulsive gamblers.#

Why Publix went West

Grocer seeks research strength

By LISA L. TREISTER

NEWS ANALYSIS

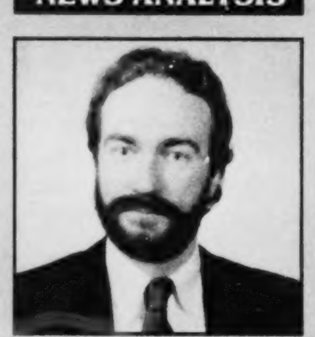
LAKELAND, FLA.—The shift of Publix Supermarkets' $15 million account to West & Co. from Benito Advertising highlights the increased competition in the supermarket industry in Florida—and the opportunity that offers an agency.

Although Publix's official reason for the shift is to consolidate its marketing and advertising assignments at one agency, West fulfills an urgent Publix requirement. The agency offers Publix the data-base marketing research capabilities that Publix must have to remain a leader in an industry where up-to-the-minute information about shopping patterns and product preferences is critical.

Not long ago Publix and Winn-Dixie Stores could take for granted the lion's share of supermarket sales in Florida. They still pull about 50% combined, but out-of-state newcomers such as Albertson's from Idaho and Food Lion from North Carolina have awakened the giants to the importance of aggressive promotion and savvy marketing.

The supermarket business has changed in this state dramatically, as shoppers originally hailing from other parts of the U.S. continue to move here, seeking the foods of their hometowns that may not be familiar to Florida grocers.

Jacksonville-based West & Co. has focused on market research since 36-year-old President-CEO Ben West took over his father's Cecil West & Associates in 1985.



BEN WEST

The younger Mr. West gained experience on the account side at New York agencies Ogilvy & Mather, Young & Rubicam and D'Arcy MacManus Masius, working on accounts such as Anheuser-Busch, Johnson & Johnson, Procter & Gamble Co. and SmithKline Beckman Corp.

A year after moving South, Mr. West was instrumental in gaining research and planning projects from Publix. At the same time, Publix hired Benito to succeed Young & Rubicam/Zemp, both Tampa, which had handled the business for 32 years.

West, which bills about $33 million, also handles the Florida Ballet, Jacksonville Symphony Orchestra, Florida Publishing Co. and more.

"I hit Publix at a good point," Mr. West said.

The timing was right in more ways than one. Publix, like West, is transferring top management roles to a second generation. It's no secret that Howard Jenkins, 37, is being groomed to take over management of the $4 billion privately held chain from his father, George Jenkins, Publix founder and chairman. The younger Mr. Jenkins is chairman of the executive board and VP-research & development.

It's also not surprising that the move has prompted bitter feelings at Benito, whose billings will drop to $30 million.

"We were never told that what we had wasn't working," said Duke Miller, Benito exec VP.

West's assignment, Mr. Miller said, was supposed to be strategic marketing, while his agency was named for newspaper and TV advertising.

Publix has continued to use longtime Y&R/Zemp-created slogans "Where shopping is a pleasure" and "Fresh picked; not picked over," even after giving the account to Benito.

Mr. Miller has said he felt he was "always walking around with [West's] shadow." He was unaware of a focus group test of a West-created TV commercial that beat out Benito's until after the test.

West was a finalist in Publix's review two years ago when Benito was given the assignment but didn't gain enough votes from the marketing committee at that time for the entire piece of business.#

Wrigley polishes gum's image

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

CHICAGO—Wm. Wrigley Jr. Co. is out to increase gum consumption with an ambitious new multibrand TV campaign.

To create the campaign, BBDO drew on Phil Dusenberry, chairman-ceo of BBDO Worldwide's New York office, in addition to Group Creative Director Phil Gant here.

The campaign, which broke Sept. 18 with an initial 60-second spot, is aimed at increasing consumption particularly among males, said Ron Cox, Wrigley group VP.

Mr. Cox wouldn't reveal a budget for the corporate effort but said it was incremental to Wrigley's brand-specific spending and would represent a spending increase "in the high double digits."

That could mean as much as $20 million; in 1987, Wrigley spent $102 million in measured media to advertise its six key gum brands, according to Leading National Advertisers.

Gum consumption, which had been steadily declining, began to grow again in 1984, when Wrigley launched its Extra sugar-free gum made with NutraSweet.

"Now, we're trying to move the meter further," Mr. Cox said.

Wrigley claims about half of the $1.8 billion U.S. chewing gum market.

He said two major factors are responsible for the lag in consumption: price, which Wrigley addressed last year by cutting the price of its single five-stick packs to 25¢, and the social acceptability of chewing gum.

The new campaign, themed "Share a little piece of America," addresses that second factor.

Vignettes show "a whole host of very acceptable situations in which people chew gum," Mr. Cox said. Wrigley's four top brands—Big Red, Doublemint, Juicy Fruit and Spearmint—are featured in the spot.

Some of the footage is from previous Wrigley campaigns, but Mr. Cox said three-fourths of the scenes are new.

He described the campaign as a joint effort of BBDO's Chicago and New York offices. "The crux of the idea came from New York, then was refined in Chicago," he said.

The campaign is running on the Summer Olympics and other event programming, as well as network prime-time and spot buys.

Mr. Cox said other media will be added in the future.#

Reebok

about $25 million goes toward "U.B.U."

The company has recognized, however, that the campaign must be taken beyond funky imagery to a more hard-hitting execution.

" 'U.B.U.' as a strategy is on target—it's the execution," said Mr. LaBonte, who maintains the company always knew there would have to be a second phase.

Sources close to Reebok said Chairman Paul Fireman, who's described as initially having been ambivalent about "U.B.U.," last week put out marching orders to move the campaign along.

Citing the advantages of the campaign, Mr. LaBonte said it caught attention fast and has flexibility. Now, he said, it needs to be more product-specific and focus more on performance.

That sort of jock talk is the lifeblood of sporting goods retailers, who make up an estimated 80% of Reebok's distribution, compared to 20% for department stores.

"U.B.U." has been popular with department stores, but it hasn't gone over well with many sporting goods outlets. A standing joke in one sporting goods chain buying office is "Let them be U.B.U. We be Nike."

George Corn, an athletic-shoe buyer for Allied Dept. Stores, Savannah, Ga., said, "I'm not a performance-type store. . . . 'U.B.U.' is the right type of campaign for my store."

But Footlocker, a national athletic-shoe chain based in New York, thinks the campaign is wrong.

"Nike's advertising is far superior because they hone in on actual items rather than lifestyle. Nike with Air is phenomenal," said Lamoine Adams, Footlocker's VP-general manager.

"We're geared to serious athletes," added Jim Hines, VP-merchandise, Oshman's Sporting Goods Stores, Houston. "Reebok's ads don't hit the mark for us. They may be award-winning and they may even sell a lot of shoes, but they don't say to the athlete, 'This is what we stand for.' . . . I'm not sure I understand them."

Frank O'Connell, president, Reebok Brands and the former ceo of HBO Video, has championed "U.B.U." from the start.

"What we're trying to do is see if we can take 'U.B.U.' and bring it to another level by being more product-specific," he said. "But if we can't do it with 'U.B.U.,' we'll do it with more product-specific advertising."

The theme will "continue to run for a period of time as part of an umbrella lifestyle campaign," Mr. LaBonte said. "In all likelihood it will continue to run into 1989. But you'll see some new commercials that were shot earlier and not used. Some will be more serious; some will stay light. We're not walking away from lightness altogether."

Despite the company's denials that Chiat/Day is in any trouble, one source said the agency is under considerable pressure to make "U.B.U." work.

Chiat/Day is experimenting with new executions, Mr. O'Connell said, noting that the task of expanding the campaign will fall to Reebok's new senior VP-chief marketing officer, Mark Goldston (AA, Sept. 19).

Asked what he thinks of "U.B.U.," Mr. Goldston said: "My personal opinions are not important at this point."

What matters, he said, is how the campaign performs.

The former Faberge president is expected to run classic marketing tests against the campaign, measuring intent to purchase as well as awareness.

Reebok's new Energy Return System shoe commercial has a light approach to its technological message.

Reebok International has sales of about $1.4 billion so far this year, with the Reebok brand accounting for $1.1 billion—or about one-third of the $3.5 billion athletic-shoe market, compared to an estimated $1 billion for Nike.

Observers estimated Reebok could end the year with a 10% sales increase, compared to 7% to 8% growth for the industry.

Nike, which had an 81% jump in sales to $510.7 million in its first quarter ended Aug. 31, is growing faster.

So far in 1988, Nike has picked up some market share, advancing from 18.6% in 1987 to 25%, while Reebok is believed to have fallen from 37% in 1987 to 32% for the year to date.

That represents a switch for the two companies. Up until 1986, Nike led Reebok but was overtaken. Now it may be Nike's turn again.

Although Reebok's broader appeal once guaranteed it a pre-eminence that no other sports-shoe marketer could rival, it may now work against it.

As category and unit growth slow, Reebok will have to sell more higher-price shoes to make up the difference and also to boost profit margins as earnings come under pressure in an increasingly competitive market.

Traditionally, Reebok's strength has been in six classic shoes, including its $50 aerobics shoe, which account for half its business. Sales of the classic shoes have been particularly strong since "U.B.U." began, Mr. O'Connell said.

Reebok needs to boost sales in more expensive shoes that go head-to-head with Nike Air. Those can fetch as much as $110 a pair.

Reebok's new Energy Return System, retailing for $75 to $90, might be Reebok's answer to Nike Air.

Reebok broke a spot on NBC-TV's Summer Olympics telecast Sept. 22 for the Energy Return System, a technological advance meant to take the wind out of Nike Air.

The commercial isn't part of the "U.B.U." pool, though it retains a light approach to its technological message. Reebok executives see it as the halfway mark between where the company's advertising has been and where it's going.

But Oshman's Mr. Hines said overcoming Nike Air will take considerable effort.

"Nike has done a pretty good job of conveying Air, but ERS won't be easy to convey," he said.

While Reebok still leads Nike in many stores, Nike is coming on strong, thanks to Mr. Jordan and Air. In Oshman's stores, Mr. Hines said Nike and Reebok sales "are now just about in a dead heat."

And Nike intends to fan the competitive fires in 1989.

After increasing ad spending by 36% to $34 million in 1988, it will hike its budget 32% to about $45 million in 1989.

The No. 2 marketer is spending $20 million this fall on its "Just do it" campaign, running through next spring. Wieden & Kennedy, Portland, Ore., created the advertising.

This week it starts filming several new spots for the campaign, featuring Mr. Jordan and filmmaker Spike Lee as Mars Blackman, the ultimate Michael Jordan fan. That's a character Mr. Lee created in the movie "She's Gotta Have It."

Reebok will spend $70 million in total advertising this year, including $44 million for the Reebok brand alone, up 46% from 1987. The Reebok brand may or may not see an increase in spending next year.#

Rival shops fail to oust Backer on Lite account

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Miller Brewing Co. has seen the Lite and is keeping Backer Spielvogel Bates as agency for its top beer.

What the brewer apparently didn't see were creative suggestions thrilling enough to warrant a change.

As a result, Miller's seven-week review of its agencies' creative suggestions ended with plans for its top brand otherwise unsettled.

The brewer has yet to decide whether to keep its "Less filling, tastes great" campaign, featuring retired athletes, or replace that approach with another idea.

"We will test a variety of concepts," said Bob Bertini, public relations manager for Miller Lite, the No. 2-selling beer in the U.S. (behind Anheuser-Busch's Budweiser).

"But at this point we haven't made a decision on whether we will change the existing campaign for Lite and we have no timetable," he said. "For now, we will continue developing new creative using the traditional all-star advertising approach."

In July, Miller had asked Backer's New York office and the brewer's other agencies—J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago and New York, and Leo Burnett USA, Chicago—to prepare creative suggestions for the account (AA, July 25).

JWT, New York, handles Miller High Life and Matilda Bay wine coolers. Its Chicago office handles Lowenbrau. Burnett is the agency for the Lite Genuine Draft test.

Executives at some of the agencies involved in the review said Miller apparently got similar campaigns from all the shops and that, given the similarity, felt there was no reason to switch.

"Apparently all three agencies recommended reasonably similar solutions to Lite's advertising problems, solutions which retained various elements of the advertising that originally built the brand to its position of prominence," said Hall "Cap" Adams Jr., chairman-ceo of Burnett.

"The original Lite advertising was brilliant, and, all things being equal, I think the agency that developed it in the first place is deserving of the chance to continue on the assignment," Mr. Adams said.

Mr. Bertini said Miller will now test various alternatives, but he said no decision had been made on whether to use focus groups or actual commercials.

"There were a lot of concepts thrown on the table, and we will test a variety," he said. "But we haven't decided the full extent the tests will take."# a crew of six people working around the clock for seven weeks.

The spot starts airing in early October.

The designers based the model on a picture of the bomber that appeared in a recruitment newspaper ad for Northrop Corp., which is building the plane.

The model was transported to Florida in pieces for the shoot; it was then assembled on an abandoned 2-mile runway originally built for the Concorde.

Although the model was large enough to be seen from space, the commercial shoot attracted little attention, other than a U.S. Coast Guard aircraft looking for drug smugglers, agency executives said.

Honda's Prelude commercials have been the centerpiece of the importer's new-model campaign for the past several years, and each year the agency tries to top the previous year.

Last year, the Prelude was shown in a head-on shot while 220 horses rushed between the car and the camera to illustrate horsepower.

Honda's overall campaign for the new models this year takes an uncharacteristic turn—to more competitive messages.

Advertising promotes the number of firsts achieved by Honda and how the competition has chosen to follow in Honda's tracks.

One spot shows pictures of Honda Civics coming out of a photocopying machine as Mr. Travanti's voice says, "Their copies will never be as good as the original."

Also new for '89 is a beefed up radio schedule of spots featuring satisfied customers. Honda two years ago began running a TV commercial featuring real-family stories of loyal customers.

Honda's first '89-model print ad broke in USA Today Sept. 23.#

Burger King effort is like a bad dream

(Rating: ★ ★ ½)

Did you ever have one of those frustration dreams?

The kind where, say, you have to reach somebody, and you're trying to use a pay phone, and you can't quite focus, and you keep misdialing, and your heart is racing, and you try to feed your quarter into the coin slot, and you drop it to the street, and it rolls into a storm sewer.

Sound familiar? Well, either you've dreamt it yourself, or you've been following the past four years of Burger King Corp.'s marketing history.

Here is a company that went from the giddy opium dream of ad-induced growth in the burger wars to a sort of Kafka-esque pentathol nightmare.

From "Herb" to "Burger King town" to "Fast food for fast times" to "We do it like you'd do it when we do it like we do it at Burger King," the runner-up fast-food chain has thrashed around, uncoordinated and unfocused, unable to reach who it needs to reach.

McDonald's Corp., meanwhile, has consolidated its franchise as the feel-good, family-fun, fast-food destination of first resort.

Predictably, everybody involved at No. 2 is in a dither. At Burger King and parent Pillsbury Co., there have been firings at the highest level. The new chairman of Pillsbury has promised better results soon, so help him—this amid rumors the Burger King division is for sale.

And at N W Ayer, the panic is palpable. Having only just won the business in the biggest account change ever, the New York agency already is making radical revisions in the advertising.

It's as if they're frantically fumbling for change, trying to stuff coins in the phone, breathlessly trying to make the right connection, desperately trying to get through.

The result: "We do it like you do it," a dizzying sequel to Ayer's remarkably ragged debut campaign.

Three new spots, directed by Leslie Dektor, look at how burger-eating seems to coincide with life's minor milestones, and at how readily Burger King burgers substitute for the home-grilled real thing.

Everybody seems just as at home reminiscing over a Whopper as they do enjoying the original le sacre du barbecue in their own backyards.

Three new spots from N W Ayer use life's little milestones to hammer home Burger King's image. Leslie Dektor adds a welcome touch but would have had more success if Burger King had an image to begin with.

One commercial centers on a victorious men's bowling team, another on a lovestruck pair of teen-agers and a third on a 30-somethingish family-with-baby. In each spot, Dektor cuts backs and forth between the memorable cookout and the Burger King reliving thereof.

There's some irony in Dektor's style: choppy and shaky and sort of disembodied—like a frustration dream. But these spots are also unquestionably more distinctive, uniform and aesthetically interesting than the original pool of Ayer commercials, which were wildly uneven.

There the dialogue was stilted and overdone. Here it is natural and unforced. Though his cinematic techniques are approaching irritating ubiquity, the Dektor Look is far better than no look at all.

So, yes, the new spots are better. They also are worse.

There's more to advertising than visual style. ("Burger King town" had visual style out the gazoo and an infectious music track to boot. It stayed on the air about 15 minutes.) What Ayer, in its panic, has excised is much of what the campaign did have going for itself: an idea.

Advertiser and agency had decided that their mission was to make Burger King synonymous with charcoal grilling. Period. And why not? It was a point of departure, the seed of a discrete marketing image, exactly what this client needs.

The problem with the first pool wasn't the concept but the pitiful executions. The commercials stank, not the idea. Given some comprehensible TV spots, $120 million a year and the resolve to stick with one premise, here was a theme that might have helped restore Burger King's erstwhile charbroiled image.

Even the goofy jingle had merit. It was to the point and, in time, would have caught on. If "Twoallbeefpattiesspecialsaucelettucecheese . . ." could become part of the vernacular, why shouldn't "We do it like you'd do it when we do it like we do it at Burger King"?

Alas, Burger King is way too jumpy to stick with anything for long. This company can't even decide whether to put its money in advertising or promotion, much less commit to one jingle. The new spots cut the lyric in half, so that what once was a quirky mouthful is now brief and forgettable.

As for the home-grilled/Burger King connection, these commercials retain it but not to its best advantage. That all-important message is obscured by the secondary theme tying burger consumption to life's formative experiences.

Uh, who cares? At this stage of the game, Burger King can't be trying to hit emotional hot buttons. It has to persuade consumers that the stores are clean, that the menus are predictable and that the food tastes good.

McDonald's can afford to be soft, fuzzy and mawkish; it's long since done the basics.

I could jab further. I could note that the teen-age romance spot is virtually identical to a spot Dektor shot for Pepsi-Cola Co. and BBDO Worldwide, London—including, I think, the use of the same shy, squeaky, handsome boy actor. But I don't want to pick too much. There's something very important for Burger King to do with this campaign: Nothing.

How can this company ever sell anybody else a brand image if it can't settle on one itself? Rather than cast about for the perfect commercial, Burger King would be well-advised to air the daylights out of some less-than-perfect commercials. These, for instance.

Something, anything, with consistency is better than something new every three months.

"Burger King town" wasn't breakthrough work, but—had anyone had guts to stay with it—the company wouldn't be doing now what we do when we do it like they do it at Burger King. In other words: living a nightmare.#

The rating system uses four stars to represent excellent, three for notable, two for mediocre and one for pathetic.

'Time' changes

rushing out to sell fixed positions," he said. "We are doing this to better satisfy both readers and advertisers. We are addressing customer satisfaction."

Mr. Muller's changes may not have to make the difference for Time this year in ad page performance. After falling behind Newsweek in 1987 in total ad pages, Time in the first six months of 1988 had 1,207 ad pages, a 2% increase from that period last year, while Newsweek had 1,182 ad pages, a 6% decrease.

"The design is built to hold on to our readers," said Mr. Muller, who, with Time Art Director Rudolph Hoglund, created the magazine's new look. "We want them to think there isn't a better magazine around."

The changes appear in both content and design, and build upon alterations Mr. Muller has initiated.

"We've already added features like 'Profile' and 'Critic's Choice,' " Mr. Muller said. "But we've also been changing the tone of Time, make it less like a magazine preaching from Rockefeller Center. Now the form is following function."

The new "form" will include:

- A two-page "Index" rather than the existing one page.
- A more dramatic combination of photos and text in Time's front-of-the-book stories with larger, "gutsier" headlines, Mr. Muller said. He also will make more extensive use of pull-out quotes "to draw the reader in."
- New departments, including "Interview," which will alternate weekly with the existing "Profile" and "Travel," which Mr. Muller said "won't be some soft feature. We may do a piece on the most overrated travel destination."
- Expanding "Critic's Choice" to a page a week from a half-page appearing every other week. The plan also calls for expanding the "People" section, now usually a page, to two pages in a greatly redesigned format using varying body type and larger, more striking photographs.

The last significant redesign of Time was in 1977 by designer Walter Bernard. Newsweek underwent a major redesign two years ago that observers said resulted in a more unpredictable presentation than the traditional newsweekly format.

U.S. News & World Report, unlike Time and Newsweek, uses the back-of-the-book pages for service articles and bills itself as the most serious of the three.

Time remains the market leader as of June 1988, with 4.7 million average weekly readers, a growth of only 0.8% from the same period in 1987. Newsweek's circulation has reached 3.3 million, up 4.2%. U.S. News is third with 2.4 million and a growth of just 0.6%.

Newsweek's new publisher, Howard Smith, said he "wasn't fazed" by his rival's plans.

"Time had become inflexible to a point," he said. "Maybe someone over there got their way and said, 'We better change with the times.' We changed the basic concept of a newsmagazine. Newsweek's done it, and it's time for them to catch up."

Mr. Muller quoted from Time founder Henry Luce's original prospectus to justify many of the changes. In his 1923 prospectus for the magazine, Mr. Luce wrote: "Time is interested not in how much it includes between its covers, but in how much it gets off its pages into the minds of its readers."

"We thought about what we could give the reader in the 1990s, and it's really an old idea," Mr. Muller said. "Now the reader will have more ways to pull out information from our stories."# the computer category, a spurt that comes just as IBM Corp. seemed about to close the gap.

In August, Apple's advertising came to mind first for 30.2% of the respondents, up from its 24.1% share in July. IBM's advertising was named first by 22.6%, virtually unchanged from its 22.3% share in July.

Radio Shack was third with a 1.7% share.

- McDonald's Corp. once again has become an extremely active and visible print advertiser. That may help account for Big Mac's 4.3 percentage-point jump to a 47.1% share of first mentions in the fast-food category last month.

Burger King Corp. was second with 14%, up slightly from its 12.9% share of first mentions in July. Wendy's International was third with a 6.9% share, down from 9.3%.#

Philip Morris unseats P&G as top advertising spender

Package-goods giant's 24-year reign atop 100 Leading National Advertisers' list ends in year marked by continued emphasis on network TV buys and heavy new-product introductions

Philip Morris Cos., powered by $1.56 billion in advertising spending in 1987, has overtaken Procter & Gamble Co. to become the nation's No. 1 national advertiser.

The 7.4% year-to-year growth in national ad spending at Philip Morris also outstripped the 4.3% composite growth of the nation's 100 leading advertisers, according to the 33rd annual ADVERTISING AGE 100 Leading National Advertisers' report.

Advertising spending at the tobacco, food and beer conglomerate reflected the same get-tough aggressiveness that PM employed against the anti-smoking lobby and internally toward its General Foods Corp. and Miller Brewing Co. subsidiaries. P&G, in a low spending cycle in new product marketing, spent $1.39 billion, down 7.6% from 1986. It was one of 35 companies among this year's top 100 that reduced national ad spending.

P&G held the No. 1 spot since it passed General Motors on the charts 24 years ago. GM, No. 3 this year, was the only other advertiser to break the billion dollar mark. Sears, Roebuck & Co. reached that pinnacle in 1986 spending, but a 19.8% drop in 1987 dropped it back to $886.6 billion and a No. 4 ranking.

Network TV continued as the favored medium among the 11 media measured in this report. It accounted for $6.67 billion, or 43.4% of $15.36 billion in media advertising spent by the Top 100. The 100 in fact are the lifeblood of the Big Three networks, representing 75.7% of all network spending in 1987.

Total Top 100 spending came to $28.4 billion, including heavy unmeasured spending of $13.04 billion. The so-called unmeasured advertising includes non-media ad forms such as couponing, in-store displays, free standing inserts, direct marketing, special events and promotions.

Spending by the Top 100 on network TV grew 4.2% in 1987 over 1986 as P&G and Philip Morris repeated their 1986 performance and stayed far ahead of the pack with expenditures of $377.6 million and $330.8 million, respectively.

Spot TV registered $3.36 billion in ad spending by the Top 100, up 4%. PepsiCo and P&G, as in 1986, led with spending of $271.1 million and $238.1 million, respectively. Magazines drew $2.38 billion in national advertising in 1987, up 3.5%. Philip Morris dominated consumer magazine spending with $243.3 million, up 8.1%. PM also led the list in 1986.

Newspaper advertising by the Top 100 rose to $1.07 billion in 1987, up 15% over the previous year for one of the larger year-to-year increases among the 11 media monitored. Automakers dominated in newspaper growth. There were 10 car companies among newspaper's top 25, and among them only expenditures for No. 1 newspaper advertiser, General Motors, grew less than 20%.

Growth in 1987 ad spending also continued a steady rebound that has been taking place since year-to-year growth plunged to 2.7% in 1985, the low point so far in the 1980s. In 1986, the Top 100 advanced 3.4%. The sluggish growth in advertising during this period has paralleled the downturn in the value of the dollar and extensive corporate restructuring, conditions that have placed a strain on sales and earnings.

Ad spending returns for first half of 1988 indicate this year may return the 100 Leaders to the flashier growth years of the 1970s and early '80s. Through the first six months, spending by all advertisers in the nine media tracked by BAR/LNA increased 15.7% to $16.4 billion. Among the five top media, network TV rose 16.5% to $4.74 billion, compared with year-ago figures. Spot TV increased 13% to $4 billion; newspapers grew 6.6% to $3.2 billion; magazines, 25.9% to $2.7 billion; and syndicated TV, 34% to $424.8 million.

New product development among the 100 continued heavy in 1987, particularly for low-cholesterol products, frozen entrees and novelties and microwaveables. The controversial "smokeless" cigarette also was announced by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., a unit of RJR Nabisco, ranked No. 5 on the list.

In the tobacco business, PM, in particular, bared its teeth. Earlier this year, PM supported archrival RJR when it fired Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton for preparing a Northwest Airlines' no-smoking ad campaign and then financed an ad campaign to remind American industry of the economic power the American smoker wields.

PM, tiring of the earnings performance at its General Foods and Miller Brewing Co. subsidiaries, ordered a turnaround, but not without greater ad support. The dictate ultimately led to the departure of each unit's top executive.

PM first became a contender for the top spot in late 1985 when it bought General Foods, then spending $450 million in U.S. national advertising and ranked No. 12. PM was sixth at the time. Their totals, consolidated in the 1986 report, vaulted PM to the No. 2 spot behind P&G.

A similar development occurred this year in the 100 Leaders chart with Eastman Kodak Co.'s acquisition of Sterling Drug. Combined ad spending elevated Kodak to No. 7 from No. 34 the previous year.

Auto advertising remains the largest ad category among the 100 Leaders, with $3.72 billion, or 13.1% of composite ad totals of the Top 100.

Among the Big Three, GM clearly dominated the chart with $1.02 billion in advertising, up 22.2% over 1986, and well ahead of the No. 9 Ford Motor Co. at $639.5 million, down 1.7%. But Ford bested GM in total earnings for the second straight year.

Network TV continued as the favored medium among the 11 media measured, accounting for $6.67 billion. The 100 in fact are the lifeblood of the Big Three networks, representing 75.7% of all network spending in 1987.

The decline in the value of the dollar particularly crimped sales of imports in the U.S. market by pushing up sticker prices. Lower unit sales were reported by No. 33 Toyota Motor Corp., No. 47 Nissan Motor Co., No. 49 Volkswagen AG, No. 56 Mazda Motor Corp., No. 76 Subaru of America, No. 84 Daimler-Benz AG and No. 88 BMW AG. Unit volume declines ranged from 3.3% to 15.9%.

The auto market segment least affected by the dollar was the low-end sector where Hyundai Group, No. 52, lowballed the competition with its single vehicle, the Excel.

Four of the 12 entries to the 100 list in 1987 were automakers: BMW, Daimler-Benz, Hyundai and Subaru of America. Others were: No. 75 Dr Pepper/Seven-Up, No. 91 Hallmark Cards, No. 94 Marriott Corp., No. 95 Franklin Mint, No. 96 Southland Corp., No. 97 United Biscuits (Holdings), No. 98 Borden Inc. and No. 100 Ameritech.

Despite the successes of Hyundai, the big Japanese importers are favoring the high-end segment with pricy cars marketed through dealerships separate from their less expensive brands. Honda's Acura division is miles ahead of its fellow importers. The division expects sales of 400,000 by 1990. It markets the $20,000-plus Legend and the $13,000-plus Integra, both imported. But by 1989, they will be produced at Honda's Ohio plant.

Toyota plans to spend $60 million to back the introduction next fall of the Lexus through a separate dealership network. Nissan expects to have 75 free-standing dealers selling its upscale Infiniti model in 1990. The introduction will be supported with $60 million in ad spending.

Among new products, concern over cholesterol levels in the American diet has led to a proliferation of anti-cholesterol drugs to foods with low-to-no-cholesterol content. The market for anti-cholesterol drugs, pegged at $500 million, is expected to mature into a $5 billion annual market by the mid-1990s, analysts predict.

P&G set up an olestra division, named for a revolutionary fat substitute that awaits FDA approval. Initially P&G's olestra will be used in Puritan and Crisco cooking oils and shortenings and Pringle's potato chips. This February, P&G petitioned the FDA to revise its listing of Metamucil's laxative benefits to include cholesterol reduction.

PYA/Monarch foodservice division of No. 31 Sara Lee Corp. introduced two rapeseed cooking oils that claimed zero cholesterol and 50% less saturated fat. Unilever NV's Thomas J. Lipton unit is testing Country Fair Light Butter, touted as a reduced-calorie butter with 50% less cholesterol and fat than other brands.

Warner-Lambert Co.'s stock shot up 5 points in late 1987 when a study found that its ethical drug, Lopid, reduced the risk of heart attacks by increasing high-density lipids that aid in unclogging arteries.

W-L also launched Promega fish-oil vitamin supplement, which reduces cholesterol. Out of a joint effort between its consumer product

Where Advertising Age got its data

The national advertisers in this 33rd annual Ad Age 100 Leading National Advertisers Report, Part 1, are selected on the basis of measured ad spending only.

Unmeasured ad estimates then are applied to the leading 200 advertisers to determine rankings. Ad Age will report on marketers ranked Nos. 101-200 in Leading National Advertisers Report, Part 2, on Nov. 21. Ad spending is U.S. only and is for calendar 1987 and 1986.

BAR/LNA reports supplies the bulk of measured media information. Magazine and newspaper supplements are supplied to Leading National Advertisers by Publishers Information Bureau. Outdoor is supplied to LNA by Outdoor Advertising Assn. of America and Institute of Outdoor Advertisers. Network TV, spot TV, network radio and cable TV networks are supplied by Broadcast Advertisers Reports. BAR/LNA's seven-media service also supplies brand and category spending by media. Seven-media totals quoted in profiles throughout this issue include the aforementioned media.

BAR is monitoring ad expenditures on syndicated TV separately from network TV and spot TV buys. These spots are bought nationally with the show, much like network TV buys. This spending is not included in measured media in this issue.

Other monitored media includes newspaper from Media Records, business publication from MMS/Rome Reports, farm publication from AGRICOM and spot radio from Radio Expenditures Reports.

Some measured media expenditures are restated to reflect corporate structure as of Aug. 7, 1986. Companies acquired before that date are included in the new parent's ad spending for full calendar 1987 and 1986 totals. Units spun off before the end of calendar 1987 are subtracted unless otherwise noted.

Measured-media services vary in the way they track ad spending. For example, MMS/Rome Reports tracks ad spending by division, rather than parent total. Every effort has been made to give full parent company ad expenditures wherever possible.

Unmeasured advertising figures are estimates and include direct mail, promotion, co-op and couponing to name a few. Local newspaper advertising is not included, but free-standing inserts distributed nationally are considered part of unmeasured. Ad Age beat reporters and corporate sources assist in providing this total.

Sales and earnings figures are taken from public documents. Where private companies will not divulge this information, an estimate or an "NA" is used. Foreign currency conversion rates are stated in the profiles.

In the boxes accompanying each profile, sales credited to U.K.-based companies is their turnover and net income their trading profit attributable to ordinary shareholders. For credit card companies, sales are their total annual volume. These numbers also appear in the table "Top 100 advertisers by primary business" on Page 152.

American Brands is the gin rummy player who dives deep into the discard pile to pluck the right card and then must somehow absorb the extra ones on top.

AB at year-end came face-to-face with a hungry E-II Holdings, Chicago. E-II, a depository of name brands spun off from Beatrice Cos., had takeover designs on AB. But AB pulled the so-called Pac-Man defense by buying out E-II earlier this year, leaving AB deep in debt and overloaded with brands.

Shortly after the buyout—it cost $2.7 billion, including a $1.2 billion purchase price and about $1.5 billion in E-II debt—American Brands began the tedious process of discarding the "cards" that didn't fit.

American Brands folded into its home products business E-II's hardware and home products companies—Waterloo Industries Inc., a manufacturer of tool storage products; AristoKraft Inc., a maker of kitchen cabinets and bathroom vanities and Twentieth Century Companies Inc., a manufacturer of plumbing supply and repair products.

AB's office supply units welcomed into the fold E-II companies, Day-Timers, a direct-mail marketer of diary planners, and Vogel Peterson, an office furniture maker. Other significant properties retained included Master Lock Co., Prestige Group PLC in the U.K., Acushnet Co. and Foot-Joy Inc.

But the remainder of E-II Holdings, consisting of nine former E-II companies, was sold en masse this July for approximately $1.2 billion to a family company led by Meshulam Riklis, a Manhattan retailing exec. These properties included Martha White Foods Inc., Beatreme Food Ingredients Inc., Home Fashions Inc., Lowrey's Meat Specialties Inc., Pet Specialties Inc., Frozen Specialties Inc., Culligan International Co., Samsonite Corp. and Samsonite Furniture. Mr. Riklis also assumed the $1.5 billion in subordinated debt that AB took on in the E-II buyout.

At press time, details on the sale of several properties were being worked out, including the Stiffel Co., Acme Visible and W.R. Case & Sons Cutlery Co.

Apart from the E-II dealings, American Brands disposed of some of its food, personal-care, security and pumps and valves operations. Taylor Food Products was sold for $18 million earlier this year. Sunshine Biscuits Inc., Andrew Jergens Co., Aunt Nellie's Farm Kitchens Inc. and Mono Pumps Ltd. of the U.K. were sold for undisclosed amounts.

AB had been anything but idle on the acquisition front prior to its confrontation with E-II. It purchased in May 1987 the distilled spirits business of National Distillers & Chemical Corp. for $583.8 million.

The new unit was merged with James B. Beam Distilling Co. to form Jim Beam Brands Co., now a core business for American Brands. Beam, which gained Old Grand-Dad bourbon, DeKuyper cordials, Gilbey's gin and vodka and Windsor Canadian Supreme Whisky in the deal, vaulted to No. 3 in the domestic liquor market where it holds five of the top 25 brands.

AB additionally added to its office products business ACCO World Corp., acquired in August 1987.

Meanwhile, AB's American Tobacco Co., which accounted for 15.3% of companywide sales in 1987, continued to lose market share—down 0.3 points to 6.9% of market to rank No. 5 among domestic tobacco companies, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst with Wheat First Securities, Richmond, Va.

In the process, sales declined by $10.4 million for American Tobacco, compared with a $15.1 million decrease in 1986, although operating profits grew 22% to $429.7 million.

Malibu, a low-price brand, helped make the company a contender, as the company's franchise, Pall Mall, was bumped from the top 10 sellers when R.J. Reynolds' Doral, a branded generic, experienced a 44% growth, noted Mr. Maxwell.

Among its filter cigarettes, Malibu, in its first full year on the market, gained a 0.3% share, followed by Pall Mall with a 0.7%, compared with 0.6% in 1986. Carlton held a 1.7% share down from 1.9%; Tareyton recorded 0.8%, down from 0.9%; Silva Thins and Lucky Strike stayed unchanged at 0.1% and 0.5%, respectively, according to Mr. Maxwell.

Among its non-filtered lines, Pall Mall recorded a 2.3% share, down from 2.6%, and Lucky Strike came in at 0.5%, down from 0.6%.

Pall Mall (Red) Filters were introduced nationally at the end of the third quarter of 1987 and showed a 20% increase in unit sales through the first six months of 1988, compared with the same period in 1987, Mr. Maxwell said.

Vigorous marketing of Malibu and Pall Mall (Red) Filters have influenced a rebound in the first six months of 1988. Unit sales climbed 0.3%, compared with a slippage of 2.3% in industry unit sales. Over the first half of 1988, the company said its market share returned to 7.2%.

Measured spending increased 5.6% for American Tobacco products to $32.3 million, according to BAR/LNA, which in 1987 measured seven major media, not including spot radio, newspapers, business press and farm. Brand spending on cigarettes, which tends to be heavy in some of these media not monitored, still accounted for 39% of AB's measured total.

Pall Mall received $10.2 million in measured support for its line, up 193.7%, while Carlton took $17.2 million, down 22.5%, and Lucky Strike drew $3.6 million, down 25%. Malibu, debuting nationally in the summer of 1987, got $1.1 million in measured support.

The other heavily-advertised division, Jim Beam Brands Co., spent $23.9 million in 1987 in the BAR/LNA seven media for its line of distilled spirits, up from only $3.2 million in 1986. The addition of the new bourbon lines has pushed AB's share to 29% of the U.S. bourbon market, the company claimed.

AB said its Jim Beam Bourbon is the leading bourbon both in the U.S. and world. The white label bourbon alone garnered 20% of the U.S. market in 1987, compared to 19% for 1986 and 17% for 1985, according to the company.

DeKuyper Peachtree schnapps continues to be a strong point. Introduced in 1984, it sold 1.5 million cases within a year, making DeKuyper the 24th best-selling liquor product in the U.S. The number almost doubled in 1987. Mr. Maxwell estimates in 1988 the peach schnapps will sell about 2.4 million cases, which is roughly two-thirds of DeKuyper's sales.

Although DeKuyper showed nearly an 8% drop so far this year, mainly because of fluctuating sales of various flavors, Maxwell said the line has kept its position for the third straight year as No. 1 cordial.

American Brands made two major personnel changes in June 1987. William J. Alley became chairman-CEO and Thomas C. Hays became president-COO. Mr. Alley succeeded Edward E. Whittemore, who became ill, resigned and later died. Mr. Hays followed Virginius B. Lougee III, who retired.

Fictitious Pfabulous Pharmaceuticals is ranked 50th among Leading National Advertisers picked by Ad Age in this issue and based on total U.S. ad spending in 1987, which is reported as ADVERTISING in millions or billions of dollars.

Pfabulous Pharmaceuticals is based in Englewood Cliffs, N.J.

PP reports on a calendar basis like most of the leading advertisers. However, should a company report on a fiscal basis, the year heading column would read 1988 and 1987. If the fiscal closing occurs before this issue was published. Also, if PP is a foreign-based company, a currency conversion rate is given in the profile.

Worldwide and U.S. sales, earnings and operating income are reported from public documents, wherever possible. Financial figures for private companies are estimates.

Division sales are the business segments as defined by PP and include revenues for comparable years.

The advertising figures in the tabular breakout under U.S. advertising by media are a composite of PP's ad expenditures, both measured and unmeasured. See "Where Ad Age got its data" on Page 2 for an explanation of the tabular breakout.

American Cyanamid Co.'s heavily advertised Shulton USA division had the smallest increase in sales among the four divisions comprising the company in 1987, reflecting in part the sale of Jacqueline Cochran fragrance business to Paris-based Sanofi, a pharmaceutical, cosmetics and fragrance multinational.

But the division continued to be supported strongly by advertising, receiving much of the $266.2 million spent companywide in 1987, up 9.2% from 1986. Shulton, which includes Pine-Sol liquid cleaner, Combat roach and mice-control products, Old Spice personal-care products and Breck haircare and Lady's Choice personal-care products, grew 2.3% in sales, down slightly from a 2.9% growth the year before.

Among Shulton products, the most heavily advertised is the Old Spice line of personal-care products for men, with $12.7 million measured advertising in 1987. Of that total, $5 million backed Old Spice cologne, and after-shave, the leader in the heavily fragmented men's fragrance market with a 19% share (ounces consumed). The share remained the same as in 1986, but the first half of 1988 sales show a climb of one share point, said Kenneth Freeman, VP-marketing at Shulton USA.

A pricier product, Night Spice, introduced in fall 1987, "sold very well at Christmas," said Mr. Freeman, with an $8 to $13 price range for the 2- and 4-oz. bottles. Old Spice sells for $4 per 4¼ oz. bottle Two even costlier fragrances for men will be introduced this Christmas season —Santa Fe, at $10 to $15 for 1.7 oz. and 3.4 oz. bottles, and Bleu Marine de Cardin, an addition to the Pierre Cardin line, at $20 to $30 for 2 ozs. and 4 ozs.

A $5 million net TV and magazine campaign in October, November and December will introduce Santa Fe with the theme "Discover the mystery of its attraction." A $1 million print campaign will introduce Bleu Marine.

Old Spice will roll out Old Spice Liquid Stick, a men's liquid stick underarm deodorant with a porous plastic dome, in a $10 million network TV campaign scheduled to break this month and run through next March. Theme is, "The most advanced protection in the world." And Old Spice adds a citrus-based new scent, Fresh Scent, to its cologne and after-shave line this Christmas. A half-million scent-strip campaign will be limited to People magazine. Old Spice's planned $4 million in Christmas season TV ads will tag the new scent.

All of the fragrance introductions will be done by Scali, McCabe, Sloves which handles Cyanamid's Old Spice, Breck haircare and Pierre Cardin lines.

Pine-Sol, which pulled $10.6 million in measured spending, up 15.2%, continued to muscle the competition in the popular pine-scented household cleaner category by clinging to its 17% share in manufacturer's dollars. The product had an estimated $120 million (manufacturers dollars) in sales, according to James Daniel, analyst with Brown Brothers Harriman & Co.

Mr. Daniel said only one of the consumer products, Pine-Sol, was on his list of the company's seven biggest sellers. Pine-Sol, which was backed by $10.6 million in measured advertising, has an estimated $120 million in sales.

Shulton U.S.A. VP-Marketing Kenneth Freeman said, "We are easily the leading liquid household cleaner" with 17% market share (in dollar volume) followed by Mr. Clean with 10% share and Lysol with 7%-8% share. Shares remained stable from 1986 but sales continued to grow, Mr. Freeman said.

Shulton's Combat Roach Control product, introduced in 1985, is believed to have unseated Black Flag (American Home Products) in the No. 2 market spot with an 18% share. Combat rose from a 13% share in 1986 while Black Flag fell from an 18% share in 1986 to 15% in 1987. Leader is S.C. Johnson's Raid at a 45% share. Combat was backed with $6.5 million in measured ad spending in 1987, up from $3.1 million in 1986.

In the first six months of 1988, Shulton believed Combat had grown to a 22% share with its line that included two aerosol spray extensions added in 1987 and a new companion product, Combat Mouse Killer tamper-resistant bait tray.

Lederle Laboratories division in the spring of 1987 introduced FiberCon as the only fiber laxative in swallowable tablet form (as opposed to chewable tablets) with heavy measured ad spending of $5.5 million.

By May-June 1988 FiberCon had climbed to No. 2 in the bulk-laxative market with a 6% share compared to 48% for leader Metamucil (Procter & Gamble). According to Cyanamid, No. 3 Citrucel (Dow Chemical) had 5.5%, and Fiberall (Ciba-Geigy) 5%. The bulk-laxative market, worth $193 million in manufacturer's dollars in 1987, is expected to grow 20% in 1988.

Cyanamid has applied for wider use of the drug Novantrone, which the FDA has approved for use against leukemia. It is sold abroad also as treatment for advanced breast cancer. "It's been doing very well," says Mr. Daniel, "as have some old anti-cancer products."

Lederle pared back its heavy advertising in 1986 on vitamins and calcium supplements. Its calcium supplement line of Caltrate 600, and Caltrate Jr. for children pulled only $3.9 million in measured advertising in 1987. The trendy calcium supplements attracted $6.6 million in the prior year when a bevy of similar products hit the market. Centrum vitamins got $3.6 million in measured spending, down from $6.1 million in 1986.

On the industrial end of the business, Cyanamid's herbicide Scepter "has had phenomenal success," said analyst Mr. Daniel, with sales of $145 million in 1987. "Scepter will be up quite a bit this year," he said. Prowl, an older herbicide, had $139 million in sales, and Counter, used against the corn root worm, sold $122 million, he estimated.

Nothing has materialized in rumors that marked Cyanamid as a takeover candidate last spring. "Cyanamid was a logical company for a number of companies, mostly foreign, to expand their presence in the pharmaceutical industry in the U.S." The company, responding to the rumors, adopted "poison pill" provisions that will more than likely keep it independent.

American Express, New York, has been keeping to the high ground in the nasty credit card wars with rivals Visa International and MasterCard International.

American Express continued its award-winning "Portraits" campaign with two new print ads and regionalized it with ads featuring local celebrities such as Minnesota Twins outfielder Kirby Puckett. The company also broke new ground in the cooperative advertising field with the introduction of a seven-page magazine ad which was almost like a mini-catalog.

But Visa blasted American Express' new revolving credit card, the Optima card, as a direct threat by warning bankers it would compete with their cards. The move apparently backfired when consumer groups and some members of Congress supported the Optima card which initially had lower interest rates than most bank cards.

The battle continued, however, on the advertising front with Visa's campaign for the winter and summer Olympics stating that American Express would not be accepted at the games, when in fact the AmEx card was honored in host cities outside Visa's exclusive hold on the Olympic village and various sporting sites.

Another campaign by Visa used a "membership has its disadvantages pitch," a play on AmEx's "Membership has its advantages" theme, to point out the greater number of establishments worldwide that accepted Visa.

American Express' ad spending rose 5.1% to $212.5 million in 1987. Of the $150.5 measured total, credit cards received $76.6 million, up 11.8%.

The three card companies fought each other by giving travel awards to consumers for airline, hotel or car rental charges. American Express focused its ad efforts on credit card enhancements such as a Purchase Protection Plan which insured most items from theft, loss or fire. Rental car insurance also was offered free to Gold and Platinum Cardholders.

American Express Co. managed to do surprisingly well during the year despite the stock market crash that left revenues at its Shearson Lehman Brothers' subsidiary unchanged and the debt problems of less developed nations that forced American Express Bank to moved out of long-term lending in those areas, taking a $625 million loss.

Income from continuing operations in 1987 dropped 52%. Yet American Express, buoyed by the continued strong performance of its Travel Related Services group/division, saw overall sales gain a modest 6% this year. Net income of Travel Related Services increased 16% to $655 million. TRS' revenues were $6 billion, up 25% from 1986.

A record 27.1 million American Express Cards were in force at year-end, up 14% from a year ago and 80% from five years ago. Card volume grew to $75.2 billion, up 18% from 1986. Some 2.1 million establishments honored the card.

good years," said John Keefe, vp-financial services, Drexel Burnham Lambert, New York. "American Express continues to gather new cardholders and volume has grown nicely. It's first in profitability and first in prestige."

Even the new Optima card, which was promoted with little advertising, has had strong acceptance. There are an estimated 2.5 million Optima cards outstanding, with charges at $3 billion. "It's not only in people's hands, but they're using it," said Mr. Keefe. "American Express is expert at cross-selling, and Optima has a low cost of acquisition. They know people with good credit."

Also soaring was American Express Travel Related Services Co.'s Direct Marketing Group, which sells insurance and investment products. Sales were up to $500 million last year. It is now the fifth largest mail merchandiser in the nation.

Travelers Cheque sales rose 16% in 1987, reaching a new high of $19.9 billion. American Express introduced a new "gift cheque."

In January, Shearson acquired E.F. Hutton Group, which increased its network to 12,000 financial consultants in more than 600 offices in the U.S. The group became Shearson Lehman Hutton. In April, it formed joint ventures with Nippon Life Insurance Co., Japan's largest insurance company, to do business in the U.S., U.K. and Japan.

Following a reorganization last August which combined two American Home Products units—Wyeth and Ayerst laboratories—into one, brand franchises were reshuffled throughout the company's agencies.

Campbell-Mithun-Esty received the $7 million Riopan and Riopan Plus account from Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton. Young & Rubicam picked up Wizard Charcoal Starter and Woolite Rug and Upholstery Cleaner, Kornhauser & Calene got Sani-Flush and McCann-Erickson won the Easy-Off and Woolite accounts—all from N W Ayer.

Once the dust had settled, McCann-Erickson had amassed about $27 million in AHP advertising from various agencies, adding such products as Dristan, Fiber Guard fiber supplement and Dermoplast anesthetic spray.

The Wyeth-Ayerst merger allows the new entity to focus on prescription drugs, and it eliminated several areas of duplication. Both former presidents of the two laboratories assumed the leadership of the new organization. Bernard Canavan, former president of Wyeth, became chairman of Wyeth-Ayerst, and also was named a corporate executive VP, while the former president of Ayerst, Judson St John, is now the president of Wyeth-Ayerst.

One task facing the newly-formed division is the bringing to market of a powerful new prescription drug, AS 101, which is an antiviral compound capable of strengthening the immune system against certain AIDS and cancer viruses. According to reports, the company has acquired an exclusive worldwide license to market the product, and clinical trials, which are already under way in various foreign countries, are beginning in the U.S.

Having put the pharmaceutical house in more efficient working order, company officials set their sights on new acquisitions. VLI Corp., Irvine, Calif., manufacturer and marketer of the Today contraceptive sponge as well as other OTC products, was purchased in December 1987 for $74 million. Now a part of AHP's Whitehall Laboratories division, VLI gives AHP an expanded role in the $54 million market for home pregnancy test where AHP's lone entry is Predictor, and also now will include VLI's Clearblue and Clearplan, an ovulation predictor.

Nearly half of that market is dominated by Johnson & Johnson's Ortho Pharmaceutical product, Advance, and Warner-Lambert Co.'s e.p.t. Plus. Newly-acquired Clearblue holds a 10% share, according to Jim Saberton, senior consultant with Fairfield, N.J.-based Kline & Co., a marketing consultant company.

The greatest potential for growth is VLI's flagship product, the Today contraceptive sponge. It currently holds a 27.2% share of the $75 million female contraceptive market, making it the leading OTC female contraceptive in the U.S., while its future sales potential could be very bright. Only 14% of women using birth control have tried the sponge to date, leaving the market wide open. Recently, a condom bearing the Today name was introduced. VLI spent $3.1 million advertising its product line in 1987.

AHP hopes to finalize its planned takeover of A.H. Robins Co., of Richmond, Va., by the end of the year. Faced with the enormity of the litigation facing Robins from the Dalkon Shield contraceptive controversy, AHP temporarily abandoned its acquisition overtures last year. AHP stepped up efforts recently, however, eager to gain access to the $1.4 billion worth of brand names like Robitussin, the largest selling cough preparation in the country with a 26% share of the $330 million cough syrup market. Procter & Gamble's Vicks line is Robitussin's closest competitor with a 21% share, while Warner-Lambert's Benylin and Mediquell lines, together with Sandoz Ltd.'s Triaminic brand, hold a combined 15% share of that market, according to Mr. Saberton.

Another strong Robins OTC performer is Dimetapp, which holds a 7% share of the crowded $700 million cold medications category. P&G's Nyquil leads that market with a 12.5% share, followed by Miles' (Bayer USA) Alka-Seltzer at 9%. Burroughs-Wellcome's Sudafed and Actifed holds a combined 8.5% share, Mr. Saberton said.

Robins' other major brand line is Chap Stick, the market leader for lip care.

Before the acquisition can be completed, however, A.H. Robins must emerge from Chapter 11 bankruptcy status, which it requested as a result of the claims filed by Dalkon Shield users. AHP plans to set $2.5 billion aside to settle the litigation, in addition to its planned payment of $700 million in stock for Robins.

AHP current consumer successes continue to be dominated by the ongoing strength of Advil's performance. The ibuprofen-based analgesic from Whitehall Laboratories continues to build its lead in the $300 million OTC ibuprofen category, where, according to Mr. Saberton, it commands an impressive 50% share. Between 1986 and 1987, Advil actually lost 15 market share points, primarily to inroads made by Bristol-Myers' Nuprin, which currently holds a 25% share, and Johnson & Johnson's Medipren, with a 12% to 13% share.

Nevertheless, Advil has been the leading ibuprofen brand since its introduction in 1985, and sales are expected to continue to climb throughout 1988, Mr. Saberton said. Advil was supported by a hefty $48.4 million in measured spending in 1987, up slightly over $47 million in 1986, according to BAR/LNA.

Anacin, another analgesic product AHP supports heavily, clings to its slightly less than 15% share of the aspirin market, which translated into $120 million in sales in 1987.

In that $750 million market, Anacin competes head-to-head with Eastman Kodak Co.'s Sterling Drug unit product, Bayer, which increased its market share to just over 15%. Bristol-Myers' two aspirin-based entries, Excedrin, with its 10%-plus share, and Bufferin, with 9.5%, round out the top brand-name contenders in the aspirin group. According to BAR/LNA, AHP backed the Anacin line with $42.1 million; Sterling put $27 million behind Bayer; and Bristol-Myers spent $19.8 million on the Excedrin line and $9.6 million for Bufferin.

Although the analgesics market continues to be dominated by Johnson & Johnson heavyweight Tylenol, an acetaminophen with a 30% share, aspirin has received a boost from a new study that links salicylic acid to heart attact-fighting benefits. The effects of that study on consumer buying habits should become apparent in 1988. The Anacin line also includes an acetaminophen product, Anacin-3.

Joining other marketers who have recognized a vast audience in the Hispanic market, AHP spent $3 million in 1987 on Hispanic advertising, an increase of 76.5% over 1986.

The Boyle-Midway division continues to expand its range of microwave entrees and side dishes. Its cooking spray, PAM, the leader in the category for over 20 years, has addressed the needs and tastes of health-conscious Americans this past year, with the introduction of an all-natural formulation that contains virtually no fat or calories, and no sodium or cholesterol. PAM was backed by nearly $10 million in measured media support.

Boyle-Midway maintained 1986 spending levels in 1987 for its Woolite line ($15.9 million), and for Black Flag insect exterminating products ($5.1 million).

American Home Foods' business was bolstered by the 16% increase in sales for the Chef Boy-Ar-Dee line of prepared pasta, a category it continues to dominate, armed with $14.5 million in measured spending, according to BAR/LNA.

Buoyed by cost cutting, growth in core businesses and a rejuvenated computer strategy, AT&T has entered the fast lane—a turnaround from 1986 when the company claimed it was on the right road but going the wrong way.

AT&T has outlined a three-pronged strategy—to strengthen core businesses, become a leader in data networking and expand international business—under its new leader Robert Allen. Mr. Allen replaced Chairman-CEO James Olson, who died of cancer in April 1988.

Revenues for the year were down because of a continued decline in rental phone equipment, mostly by businesses, but net income rose to $2 billion, a huge gain from the same period in 1986.

AT&T put its worldwide advertising costs at $814 million in 1987, up 4.9% from 1986, although the expenditure includes salaries, research, media and agency work. AA estimate of $531 million for AT&T includes only U.S. measured media and below-the-line forms of advertising.

AT&T's "the right choice" ad slogan of 1987, which continued into 1988, stresses the anxiety associated with not "choosing" AT&T. "Choose AT&T" was the previous campaign. Scenarios, characterized by jumpy, cinema verite camera work, and tense, disturbing music, were disquieting because vignettes implied that an executive's job hung in the balance of making the right choice of a phone system for his/her company.

The second tier of the campaign brought in AT&T solutions presented by friendly AT&T employees talking to an off-camera interviewer about the dependability of AT&T's products.

"The Right Choice" continues to tag all advertising as a unifying positioning statement. "Reach out and touch" remains in consumer ad copy, but is no longer a stand-alone campaign.

AT&T's largest media expenditures were $77.9 million for its general promotion category, up 174% from the prior year, according to BAR/LNA, which credited AT&T with spending $285.7 million in eight media in 1987, up 2.1% over 1986.

Nearly 72% of the spending in the category was on TV, especially network, with magazines receiving the rest.

Revenues from telecommunications services—largely long distance—increased 2.9%, mostly from growth in calling volumes for international and 800 service. AT&T, which invested $2.7 billion in 1987 to improve its network and expects to invest another $6 billion in 1988 and 1989, derives about 50% of its revenues from telecommunications services. Calling volumes have been encouraged by reduced prices. In 1987, prices dropped 16%. In early 1988, they have dropped another 3.5%.

Long distance usage rose about 8% in 1987 at AT&T. However, the company's market share continues to erode, from 75% in 1987 to 70% so far in 1988, according to Northern Business Information, New York. "The volume is still there because the long distance market is growing at 6 to 7 times the market share rate that AT&T is losing," said Jack Grubman, analyst with PaineWebber, New York. That market has grown to $27 billion in 1988, up 12.5% from the prior year, according to NBI analyst, William Rich.

MCI holds 10% of the market in 1988, up from 7% in 1987; US Sprint Communication increased to 6% this year, from 4%; other services remained steady at 14%, according to NBI.

In long distance alone, AT&T will double in earnings over a four-year period even if it continues to lose market share, said Mr. Grubman.

Ad spending continued to decline on long distance lines—down 33.6% to $62.7 million in 1987, following a 20% drop from 1985 to 1986, according to BAR/LNA. Network TV claimed 50% with support coming from magazines, spot TV, network radio and newspaper supplements.

Ad spending also declined for AT&T long lines business, down 46% to $19.9 million, and for overseas long lines, down 11.4% to $32.5 million.

The second major contributor to AT&T revenues—business, data and consumer products— accounted for $8.3 billion in revenues, down 11.7%, as growing revenues from consumer products and newer systems could not offset declines in rentals and older data products. AT&T has cut costs by 50% in its Consumer Products division over the past three years by reducing staff and closing half of its phone centers, which now number 450.

Telecommunications networks systems, accounted for less than one fifth of AT&T revenues at $6.1 billion, from sale of equipment and related services. Switching systems, and cable and wire sales were up, but transmission equipment and other sales were down.

Advertising for the AT&T telephone card doubled to $12.1 million in 1987 as US Sprint entered the card fray with its own offering.

AT&T Telephones advertising dropped 33% to $11.5 million in 1987, with most of the spending in network TV.

Spending for informations systems grew to $24.9 million from $15.7 million in 1986, virtually all in network TV.

Through alliances with computer leaders Microsoft and, in October 1987, Sun Microsystems, AT&T is attempting to unify the different versions of the UNIX computer operating system. Rather than sell stand-alone computers, AT&T is putting together an integrated system that is meeting with market acceptance.

This strategy is deemed essential since AT&T's share of business revenues for personal computers through retail stores, fell to 2% in the first quarter of 1988 and to only 1% in the second quarter, according to StoreBoard, a Dallas-based market research company for the computer industry. For the comparable time period in 1987, StoreBoard estimated a 2% share for AT&T.

Mr. Grubman projects that the computer operations will break even by the end of 1989, more from cost reductions than from revenues. "But at least it went from a huge drag on earnings to neutral," he said.

AT&T's ability to cut costs is a big reason Mr. Grubman continues to be high on the company.

He forecasts doubled earnings over the next four years starting in 1988, 25% from growth in business, the rest from cost cutting.

Ameritech's corporate umbrella ad campaign themed "Solutions That Work" was severely challenged this spring when a suburban Chicago fire knocked out service, in some cases for several weeks, to about 35,000 Illinois Bell customers.

The Mother's Day fire tested the mettle of the Ma Bell spinoff as 400 workers were dispatched to rebuild a crucial Hinsdale, Ill., switching station that had relayed some 3.5 million calls daily before its meltdown in early May.

To combat the disruption in service that drifted into June, Illinois Bell quickly broke spot radio ads explaining the delay and advertised in the suburban and Chicago metro dailies about temporary telephone locations. A Small Business Administration loan-assistance program was set up in August to help businesses affected by the fire. Illinois Bell ultimately may have to set up a special fund to compensate customers for losses.

Clearly, the worse case scenario in Illinois was not what Ameritech had in mind when it launched the corporate campaign with a case studies approach on the heels of its Pan American games tie-in.

In 1987, Ameritech marketing highlighted its role as official communications company for the tenth games held in Indianapolis. It was the first use of Ameritech as a brand name in the marketplace. The "Solutions" campaign picked up where the Pan Am games marketing left off with case histories on other customers, including the University of Illinois and John Deere & Co.

Ameritech general promotion ad spending rose 9.8% to $4.5 million in 1987 to back "Solutions." The search is on for a new agency to replace J. Walter Thompson, USA, which had handled the $10 million corporate account before accepting the Bell Atlantic account. Finalists include Bayer Bass Vanderwarker, Grant/Jacoby, Tatham-Laird & Kudner, all Chicago and Ross Roy, Bloomfield Hills, Mich. The new agency will pick up the current theme, and focus on it in the business community, said David Parker, advertising manager. The new agency also is expected to develop an investor relations ad program, he said.

AA estimates Ameritech's 1987 overall ad spending at $83.4 million, up 22% from 1986. In seven measured media, ad spending rose 15% to $22.1 million in 1987, according to BAR/LNA. Aside from spending for Yellow Pages, the largest measured ad expenditure went to Illinois Bell. Spending doubled to $5.2 million from 1986, with about 86% of that allocated to spot TV. Residential and business campaigns were both themed, "Just Call."

Michigan Bell spending dipped by 5.3% to $1.8 million, with most of the spending in spot TV. Ohio Bell spending rose 7% to $1.5 million, almost all in spot TV. Its business campaign was themed, "Solutions that Work." Wisconsin Bell spending was about flat at $1.2 million, and Indiana Bell advertising declined 8% to $407,700. Its business advertising, was themed much like the rest: "Solutions without Problems."

In 1987, Ameritech formed two operating companies. Ameritech Bell Group consists of Bell companies serving Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin, Ameritech Communications, Ameritech Services and Ameritech Applied Technologies. Results from this operating unit were flat.

The second company, Ameritech Enterprise Group—consisting of Ameritech Mobile Communications, Ameritech Publishing, Ameritech Credit and ADR (Applied Data Research)—accounted for Ameritech's revenue gain for the year, and for more than half its net income growth. ADR, a systems software firm, was sold for $170 million this month to Computer Associates International, Garden City, N.J.

Among new services introduced for residential customers were public announcement services offering time, weather reporting, traffic, health and sports reports, and Automated Pay-Per-View cable TV, which enables customers to order programs by dialing a certain number, is available in several communities.

Automatic reading of gas, electric and water meters via customer telephone lines is being tested in some markets. One quarter of the region's meters are expected to be read by phone by 1993.

Business customers accounted for nearly one third of Ameritech Bell Group revenues in 1987. Ameritech is developing new network architecture that includes the Integrated Digital Network which permits simultaneous transmission of voice, data and video communication over a single telephone line and is now in service at McDonald's corporate headquarters in Oak Brook, Ill.

Ameritech Mobile, now in 15 markets, increased [illegible] by 47% in 1987. Mobile Acce[illegible]ata Service was introduced to allow customers to use their cellular phone with lap top computers.

Ameritech Publishing, which grew 13% in revenues in 1987, publishes 500 PagesPlus directories and specialty directories. Ameritech's single highest ad expenditure backed Publishing—$7.1 million, up 16%. PagesPlus Video was tested at several company locations. It displays information on restaurants, shops, sports and more and has the capacity to print out information.

The division's first Industrial Yellow Pages directory outside the Ameritech region, in western Pennsylvania and western and central New York, debuted in 1987. Ameritech also established a five-year agreement with Nippon Telephone and Telegraph to publish English language directories in Tokyo and Osaka.

Although AMR Corp. had a financially disappointing year in 1987, the parent of American Airlines posted record results for the first quarter of 1988.

The nation's No. 3 carrier attributed outstanding quarterly performance to a 21% increase in revenue passenger miles with a corresponding jump in capacity of 20%. Additionally, yield—the average price charged per revenue passenger mile—rose by 11%.

Heartened by first quarter results—net profits of $68.4 million on operating revenues of $1.96 billion compared to 1987 first quarter net profit of $19.9 million on operating revenues of $1.5 billion—Robert Crandall, chairman/president-CEO, told shareholders that positive financial results are due to the carefully executed growth strategy designed to reduce unit costs.

He attributed the net earnings decline for full-year 1987 to a strike threat in December, unusually severe winter weather that disrupted operations at several key cities and unrealized foreign exchange losses stemming from foreign currency financing.

Nevertheless, American anticipates strong growth in 1988 based in part on strategies initiated in 1987.

New hubs at Raleigh-Durham, N.C. and Nashville, Tenn., continue to expand while international service is growing.

The carrier inaugurated service from its Dallas-Fort Worth hub to Madrid and increased service to Paris by adding a daily flight from Raleigh-Durham. A non-stop flight from New York's JFK Airport to Zurich was added in May.

American's San Juan hub, launched in 1987, has made the carrier the largest in Puerto Rico, and the leading airline to and from the Caribbean. That status will be enhanced by the upcoming establishment of a flight crew base in Miami in January 1989. Further expansion will come from a flight attendant crew base in Nashville.

The carrier has reached the midpoint of its long-term growth plan and is on track except for delivery delays for aircraft which have delayed Raleigh-Durham expansion about six months, said an American spokeswoman.

American began to reap the benefits of its 1987 AirCal merger, which was completed smoothly. The airline now has a significant presence in the West Coast. Another expansion area centered on the acquisition of five of its seven American Eagle carriers, the smaller commuter airlines which service American hubs.

Deep discounts did not dominate airline fare advertising for the first six months of 1988. Instead, service quality was the theme for the top carriers.

American took the lead in this advertising message with its summer 1987 service campaign, followed by ads based on U.S. Department of Transportation performance data. American positioned itself as the top-rated major carrier—particularly in on-time performance.

To accentuate its theme, "Something special in the air," the carrier in spring 1988 began its "On-Time Machine" campaign based on the carrier's dependability performance. Media included TV, print and direct mail.

Like other major carriers, American matched Delta Air Line's triple mileage offer for frequent fliers during the first quarter of 1988. After that quarterly spurt, American re-evaluated the long-term cost of its frequent flier program. And like United Airlines, it announced revisions effective in 1989 to essentially raise mileage requirements and place a time frame on awards.

The company however said it remains committed to this marketing tool to reinforce brand loyalty. American was the first carrier to offer a frequent flier program.

Following the departure of R.A. McKinnon, VP advertising and marketing programs, Michael Buckman assumed the title of VP-passenger sales and advertising while George Mueller was named VP-customer services. Jim Simon, as managing director-advertising, took on advertising responsibilities formerly handled by Ann Smits, who left.

Donna Coyne was named to the new position of manager-domestic advertising.

Anheuser-Busch Cos. embarrassed the marketing departments of its beer industry rivals in 1987. By far America's largest and the world's biggest beer seller, the St. Louis brewer saw its U.S. market share rise to 42.1% from 1986's 39.7% even as total industry shipments dropped 0.4%.

Of A-B's $9.02 billion in revenue in 1987, $6.38 billion, or 70.7%, came from beer sales. That success, no doubt, was partly attributable to major advertising changes for two key rivals, Miller Brewing Co. and Stroh Brewing Co., which early this year switched advertising agencies or campaigns for major brews. In a sense, it also was responsible for Hal Riney & Partners resigning as an A-B agency; unwilling to depart from successful campaigns, A-B gave Riney little business.

The numbers tell the story. A-B sold 76.1 million barrels of beer, 42% of the total beer sold in the U.S. and 5.2% over the previous year. Four of its 12 beers were among the top 10 U.S. sellers. Flagship Budweiser grew 2.7%, shipping an industry-leading 50.4 million barrels, alone accounting for nearly 28% of all American beer sold.

Bud Light grew 19.7% partly on the strength of its association with Spuds MacKenzie. Spuds was so successful that A-B drafted it to do a corporate safe drinking campaign. Even competitor, Stroh Brewery, showed an English bull terrier of Spud's demeanor in its commercials.

Busch beer, A-B's subpremium-priced product, grew 11.7% and Natural Light grew 15.4%.

Only Michelob, A-B's superpremium beer, proved a trouble spot with sales for the three Michelob brands slipping 3%. Early in 1988, A-B dropped most separate advertising for Michelob Light and put the $31.5 million it saved into its main Michelob campaign. It also drafted Frank Sinatra, himself an A-B distributor, to do commercials for Michelob. And to further shore up the brand, A-B announced plans to bring out a dry beer under the Michelob name on Sept. 1.

A-B's overall ad spending showed little change in 1987 from 1986, with measured advertising reported at $395.1 million, down from $400.9 million the previous year, according to BAR/LNA.

A-B's success is more surprising in that A-B had no entry in the hot-selling draft beer category. A-B is continuing to test an Irish-style ale in two markets and this summer rolled out a dark German-style Anheuser Marzen beer in St. Louis. It also expanded distribution of its King Cobra malt liquor.

A-B's success allowed it to open a Fort Collins, Colo. brewery early this year and, in turn, expand distribution of the Busch beer brand westward. Last year A-B added Wyoming and Utah and this year Colorado and Montana to Busch's distribution. Busch beer now is distributed in all but nine western states and could go national within the next year. A-B also is expanding breweries in Newark and Tampa and has announced plans for a new brewery in Cartersville, Ga.

A-B's success at promoting its beers, not only through advertising but through sales promotion, sales meetings and production of its own TV programming, brought some side benefits.

A-B has been increasingly successful in selling those same services to non-competing companies. In April, Busch Creative Service opened its own Chicago office to serve non-A-B accounts.

Past sales promotion problems, however, continued to haunt A-B. Late in 1987, two top ex-officials, Joseph E. Martino, VP-sales, and Michael A. Orloff, director of marketing-wholesale operations, sued A-B over their departures. In May they were indicted and accused of scheming to take kickbacks from A-B external promotion agencies. The trial, due to start in September, was expected to reveal some common A-B practices.

If beer sales in the U.S. were A-B's strong point, sales of other products and overseas sales of beer proved weaker links.

After a second try at selling wine coolers, A-B's Dewey Stevens suffered the same fate as its first attempt, Baybry's Champagne Coolers, but Dewey Stevens was not so quietly put to sleep. Zeltzer Seltzer, another product of the beverage group, announced with great hoopla and featuring advertising from Hal Riney & Partners, failed to get the heavy advertising originally expected. Without the wine cooler volume, A-B sold off Zeltzer, and the rest of its beverage group, Saratoga and Sante mineral waters. A-B continues to produce Master Cellars wines.

Analysts said the beverage group's sales were too small for A-B to pay attention to the products, once A-B stopped selling wine coolers.

A-B also ran into trouble with its Eagle Snacks premium snack line and despite its having available capacity, A-B decided to keep distribution east of the Rocky Mountains until it solved some marketing problems. A-B began a new campaign early in 1988, featuring "Odd Couple" stars Jack Klugman and Tony Randall and said it expected national distribution by some products late in the year.

A-B had better success with Campbell-Taggart, its baking company, which reported improved profitability. A-B said its Busch Entertainment division, also had a successful years at its Busch Gardens in Williamsburg, Va. and Tampa. The A-B-owned St. Louis Cardinals won the National League pennant in 1987, losing the World Series in the last game.

In foreign markets, A-B gained greater distribution, but continued to have troubles in Great Britain and was being soundly beaten in Canada. In Japan, however, A-B captured 50% of the import market. A-B reorganized its European operations in May 1988, moving headquarters to Spain and putting the head of European operations on the company board.

Batus Inc., the U.S. arm of B.A.T. Industries, added a "fourth business leg" of financial services to its tobacco, retailing and paper companies after it won its fight in August 1988 to take over Farmers Group Inc. of Los Angeles in a $5.2 billion deal.

With Farmers Group, B.A.T.'s reliance on its tobacco contribution will be reduced to 50% in operating income from 62%. Currently, B.A.T. obtains 23% of its operating income from retailing and 15% from paper—both of which provided disappointing results in 1987.

During 1987, Batus's tobacco operation—Brown & Williamson Corp.—experienced a "banner year" despite declines in its domestic market share. A key to B&W's strong performance was excellent sales growth in the Far East.

B&W claimed the largest share of Batus' measured advertising, or $39.4 million, up 4.5% from 1986, according to the seven media tracked by BAR/LNA. The expenditure counted for 67% of total measured spending at Batus.

B&Ws share of the total domestic cigarette market declined to 11% in 1987 from 11.7% in 1986, according to estimates by John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst with Wheat First Securities Inc., Richmond, Va. In 1985, B&Ws share was 11.9%.

B&W's flagship Kool brand fell to 6% of market in 1987 from 6.4% the year before, according to Mr. Maxwell, while its competitor—Loews Corp.'s Lorillard's Newport brand—increased its market share to 4.2% from 3.8% in 1986.

B&W also saw a decline in market share for its brands in the "price/value segment." The price/value category—which includes generic cigarettes—accounts for about 10% of the cigarette market. B&W products account for 22.4% of all price/value cigarettes sold in the U.S., down from 26.6% last year, according to Mr. Maxwell.

The largest branded generic, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco's Doral, had introductions of Ultra Lights and Full Flavor packings in late 1986. The brand achieved a 3% overall market share, which is more than 30% of the price/value segment. RJR had 37.8% of the low-price market overall last year.

Measured advertising for Kool continued its decline—and hit second place in the amount of money B&Ws spent on measured advertising for its brands. Kool dropped to $12.3 million in 1987, down 39.1% from 1986. In 1985, measured advertising for Kool had been $28.9 million.

Thomas E. Sandefur Jr., B&W's president-CEO, told trade specialists in May 1987 that the company is focusing more on in-store promotions and direct mail. Those areas are not measured by BAR/LNA.

In 1987, B&W started a "Kool & Milds Today" campaign involving heavy unmeasured advertising in regions where there is a large population of menthol smokers. The promotion involves "buy-one-get-one-free" promotions and point-of-purchase displays.

The brand that got the most money for measured advertising was Richland—a "value for money" products—with $13.2 million in 1987, down 8.2% from 1986. In late 1987, B&W began testing Richland 20s, with 20 cigarettes in the package compared to 25 cigarettes in Richland 25s.

Capri, an ultra-slim cigarette, received $11.7 million in measured media. Capri, which is designed to appeal to female smokers, was introduced nationwide in July after being in test since January 1987. In 1987, the brand sold one billion units. The brand has been heavily promoted in areas of non-measured advertising as well. A $2-off coupon was used in test markets to generate interest. In addition, a major sweepstakes promotion was begun in May.

As part of the promotion, customers could win a trip to Paris with $50,000 cash as a grand prize. Other prizes included pearl necklaces, gold bracelets and beauty baskets. The Paris "cachet" was expected to encourage Capri trial use among females and build excitement for the brand. Advertising for the brand is handled by Geer, DuBois of New York.

Two other brands in test were dropped in late 1987 and early 1988, respectively—Eli Cutter, a non-menthol male-oriented, full-flavored brand and Kim 25s, a full-value brand targeted primarily at women smokers. The company said results were below expectations.

In January, B&W announced that it is testing another brand with the new slender style—Barclay Lights Ultra Thins, which is the same size as Capri—17mm in circumference. Standard cigarettes are about 25mm; some thin cigarettes already on the market are about 21mm.

The slims market segment amounts to about 6% of total U.S. cigarette sales.

The new Barclay brand is aimed at women and men because the company has found that it appeals equally to both. B&W began testing them in Atlanta and other areas of Georgia in November 1986. That area was selected because Barclay has strong appeal there.

In February 1987, B&W switched ad agencies for Kool and Kim 25s to William Esty Co., New York (now Campbell-Mithun-Esty), from Ogilvy & Mather, Chicago. O&M had held the account only since April 1986.

Last June, Esty got another creative assignment from B&W—Viceroy cigarettes, which had not been getting any advertising. Esty also handles Barclay in the U.S.

All media buying for B&W products is done by O&M.

Batus sold about 40% of its retailing operations in 1986, including Fredrick & Nelson, Crescent, Kohl's and Gimbels department stores. The major continuing Batus retailing businesses are Saks Fifth Avenue, Marshall Field's, Ivey's, Breuners and Thimbles.

Measured advertising dropped at Marshall Field's by 9% to $3.38 million and at Saks Fifth Avenue by 23% to $1.61 million. Ivey's measured spending grew 44% to $520,500.

The company said 1987 was a difficult year for its retail business with sluggish consumer spending, higher import costs, competitor markdowns and the October stock market crash which affected the fourth quarter.

In fall 1987, Batus announced major investment plans, including a $110 million renovation of Marshall Field's historic flagship store in Chicago and a five-year, $300 million nationwide expansion and modernization of Saks.

Ivey's experienced a tough year as the consolidation of the Florida and Carolina divisions proved to be a greater disruption to the business than planned. The consolidation is now complete.

Farmers Group, founded in 1928, controls a variety of auto, home, property and casualty and life insurers that do business in 26 Western states. It is the nation's third-largest home and auto insurer, behind State Farm and Allstate, and the seventh-largest property and casualty insurance company. It has about $11 billion in assets and is involved solely in insurance except for a small real estate operation.

The insurer had sales of $1.1 billion (which includes $286 million in life insurance premiums, $169 million in life insurance investment income and $678 million in management fees, according to Tom Welch, director of corporate investments for Farmer's Group Inc.) and per-share earnings of $3.09 in 1986. Sales have grown at an annual rate of 19% and profits at 16% during the past five years.

Bayer USA, the Pittsburgh-based American unit of West German parent, Bayer AG, got increased revenues across the board during an active year for product development.

Leading the growth in new products were consumer products marketed by Miles Inc. of Elkhart, Ind., and the specialized lines of Mobay Corp. of Pittsburgh; Agfa-Gevaert Inc. of Ridgefield Park, N.J. and Compugraphic Corp. of Wilmington, Mass.

The U.S. operations represented 20% of worldwide sales, down from 22% in 1986. Deutschmarks were converted to dollars at the average exchange rate of 2.17 DM to the dollar in 1986, the same conversion used by Bayer internally. The 1987 conversion rate was 1.79108.

Miles, which was second to Mobay in sales and first in growth among the American subsidiaries, dropped "Laboratories" from its name to reflect a broader focus.

Miles grew 15.5% in sales, but 59% in profit to $46.1 million during 1987. Miles, which does the vast majority of Bayer USA's advertising, also promoted heavily the familiar lines from which some of the new products sprang—especially Alka-Seltzer.

The Alka-Seltzer family accounted for 61% of the $79.1 million in measured advertising credited to Bayer USA by BAR/LNA. The $48.3 million spent on the line was up 25% from 1986, an increase that included expenditures for new entries, Extra Strength Alka-Seltzer and Alka-Seltzer Plus Night-Time Cold Medicine.

Miles believes it has strengthened its sales efforts in consumer healthcare by reorganizing into food and non-food divisions, as well as developing a unit to concentrate on national accounts.

The company claimed a 23% increase in sales for S.O.S. Glass Works, which competes with Drackett Co.'s Windex and Texize's Glass Plus. The window cleaner, in its second year, was assisted by a $6.2 million measured advertising expenditure, up 5.6%.

Miles also is capitalizing on the S.O.S. name with a lemon-scented steel wool soap pad, with a multimedia ad campaign launched at the beginning of this year.

Miles boosted advertising for its vitamin tablets to $17.6 million, up 39% from the prior year. The two components in the expenditure include Flintstones childrens chewable vitamins ($11.7 million advertising, up 33%) and One-A-Day Within vitamin tablets ($5.9 million, up 54%).

Marketing is building up for Cipro, which was approved by the FDA in the fourth quarter of 1987 for treatment of a variety of infections, and Prolastin, a drug for treatment of emphysema that was cleared in December. Still awaiting FDA approval are Baypress, for hypertension, and Nimotop, for treatment of hemorrhages.

Bayer places more than half its U.S. advertising in network TV. Network radio claimed another quarter of ad spending, according to BAR/LNA. The company tripled its tiny newspaper commitment and increased its magazine exposure by 60%.

Bayer USA spent more than $100 million on research and development for the fourth straight year. It finished the $36 million first phase of the Miles Research Center in West Haven, Conn., and selected its Berkeley, Calif. site to pilot production of DNA Factor VIII, for hemophiliacs.

Miles divested two small units, the disposable laboratory equipment business in Naperville, Ill. and the Cutter Biomedical cast business in Berkeley, Calif.

Mobay introduced the Salute broad-spectrum grass and broadleaf herbicide and Pryfon termite killer in its agricultural chemical line; launched new pigments, Quindo and Palomar and brought to market a dual-density shoe sole polyurethane system boasting a light, shock-resistant inner sole and an outer sole that is slip-proof and oil resistant.

Agfa-Gevaert, the photographic-product subsidiary, placed Agfa 35mm film in Walgreen drugstores during 1987 and converted Moto Photo to exclusive Agfa film product use. It also introduced an Agfastar photo-processing system, Supermaster offset duplication and other camera and darkroom products.

BCI Holdings Corp., the parent of Beatrice Co., had yet another watershed year in its roller coaster history.

Chairman-CEO Donald Kelly's resignation this August capped a year of twists and turns that had culminated in a July announcement that BCI no longer was actively involved in any acquisition or sale talks. That announcement came after a parade of possible buyers, including Quaker Oats Co., Unilever and RJR Nabisco, sized up the Beatrice's U.S. Foods companies.

President-CEO Frederick Rentschler assumed day-to-day control of the new Beatrice, which once again is an operating company—but of vastly diminished proportions. Reporting to Mr. Rentschler are the presidents of Beatrice's three remaining divisions: Swift-Eckrich, headquartered in Oak Brook, Ill.; Beatrice/Hunt-Wesson, located in Fullerton, Calif. and Beatrice Cheese, based in Milwaukee.

Gone are the nonfood brands Mr. Kelly placed under the E-II Holdings umbrella and planned to use as a foundation for future acquisitions. E-II was acquired in February for about $1.1 billion by American Brands, Old Greenwich, Conn., in a "Pac-Man" defense launched after Mr. Kelly first presented a tender offer for American Brands in January. Many of the E-II brands—including Culligan water treatment systems, Samsonite luggage, Stiffel lamps and Martha White Foods—were subsequently spun off from American Brands to Riklis Holdings.

Also gone from the Beatrice umbrella is Tropicana Products, the Bradenton, Fla.-based fruit juice marketer sold to Jos. E. Seagram & Sons in March.

BCI's 1987 measured media spending totaled $89.2 million, down 24%; excluding the divested brands, spending was $65.7 million.

Beatrice/Hunt-Wesson introduced a handful of new products during the past year. Notable were a canned Hunt's spaghetti sauce, rolled out nationally with $1.2 million in measured spending support and LaChoy Fresh & Lite Oriental frozen entrees and egg roll entrees,

Chicago doesn't need another Ad Agency.

When your business is creating advertising, it's all too easy to see it as the end instead of the means.

But if your company is going to prosper in the long run, the last thing you need is an agency that can't see past its advertising.

You need an agency that delivers long-term strategic thinking that is the cornerstone, not just of your advertising, but of every facet of your communications. Because advertising, public relations, sales promotion, direct marketing and Yellow Pages should all work together. To deliver a singular focused message that clearly tells everyone what you want him to hear.

At the same time, we don't think even the best strategies will take you anywhere in today's marketplace without compelling, gut-grabbing creative.

Now that's the kind of thinking Chicago does need. The kind of thinking you'll get from one of Chicago's newest, largest communications organizations. Ketchum.

launched in late 1987.

Two new flavors, caramel and sour cream & onion, were added to the nation's leading microwave popcorn, Orville Redenbacher, which claims about a 30% share of the $300 million market. General Mills' Pop Secret is second with an estimated 24% share, with Pillsbury third at about 9%. Measured spending on the entire Orville Redenbacher line totaled $10.7 million.

Late last year, Hunt-Wesson pulled its remaining brands—LaChoy and Rosarita foods—from J. Walter Thompson, Chicago, and reassigned them to primary agencies Dailey & Associates, Los Angeles and Ketchum Advertising, San Francisco.

The Swift-Eckrich division introduced Swift International entrees, and Swift microwaveable breakfast sandwiches. It invested $2.5 million in measured spending in a continuing battle with Hillshire Farm for a stronger position in the $110 million precooked breakfast sausage market.

The bulk of the division's spending—$8.8 million—supported its Butterball turkeys.

County Line cheese, Beatrice's major branded cheese, received a new TV and print ad campaign from Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt's Midwest office. Measured spending rose 36.8%, to $1.7 million.

Tropicana, in its last year within the Beatrice organization, received about one-fifth of total BCI spending, or $20.7 million. In November, Tropicana added a 96-oz. plastic jug in selected markets, and in February, introduced Tropicana Twisters fruit beverages after a successful test.

With an eye to the bottom line, Beecham Group PLC ended its nearly 10-year venture in the U.S. cosmetics business with its sale of Beecham Cosmetics Inc. this August, a sale that concludes a series of divestitures in the past two years.

Beecham's U.S. operations have become focused on more profitable pharmaceuticals, OTC medicines and toiletry businesses under the direction of Robert P. Bauman, chairman of the Brentford, Middlesex, U.K. company.

To support these core businesses, 1987 advertising spending rose to an estimated $154.9 million, a 34.5% increase that also included $7.3 million in ad spending on the disposed brands, according to BAR/LNA.

Ad growth largely came from increased expenditures for the Aqua-Fresh, Calgon and Massengill brands, including line extensions of all three.

By far, the largest spender was Aqua-Fresh toothpaste, with $16 million in measured media, nearly double 1986 spending.

The boost in part, can be attributed to the roll-out of Aqua-Fresh Tartar Control toothpaste in spring 1988.

The company reports a 77% increase in brand sales from the introduction.The brand's market share has been slipping since it notched a 12% share in 1984. It slipped to 11.5% in early 1986, and 10.5% in 1987, far behind Procter & Gamble's Crest, with 39% and Colgate-Palmolive's Colgate toothpaste at 23%.

Another line extension, Liquid Tums, introduced in 1988 may signify a push for Tums to become a category leader. Currently, it holds a 13% share of all antacids, including chewables, liquids and effervescents. Tums' share of the $360 million category (manufacturers dollars) is not far behind P&G's Pepto-Bismol's 18% share.

Of chewables—a $148 million business—Tums has 35% of the business, followed by Warner-Lambert's Rolaids with 30%. Spending for the brand was $10.2 million, up about 5%.

Other line extensions include N'ICE throat spray, supported with $1 million in measured spending and Aqua Velva Skin Conditioning Moisturizing Lotion After Shave.

New products include two children's bubblebath products, Miss Piggy's Pink Bananas and Kermit's Krazi Berri.

In 1987, Beecham pulled Delicare and a number of other products from Avrett, Free & Ginsberg. The Delicare casualty was directly related to Beecham's suit against Yankelovich, Skelly & White/Clancy, Schulman market research company for "faulty market research" provided Beecham in the launch of Delicare laundry liquid detergent—a product that received $8.2 million in measured spending in 1986 before being dropped in 1987. The $24 million suit was settled out of court in August 1988.

Another Beecham agency, Ogilvy & Mather, picked up creative work for Lectric Shave and Calgon water softener, both products previously handled by AF&G.

Lectric Shave advertising has been virtually nil until it got an infusion of $2.5 million, virtually all in network TV. Calgon advertising rose from only $1.5 million for the brand to $5.6 million for its varied extensions. Calgon Complete Laundry Aid was added to the line in 1987.

Massengill disposable douche received a medicated douche line extension and a big advertising boost to $9.9 million in measured spending, up from $2.6 million in 1986. Another extension, Massengill Soft Cloth Towelettes, has been added recently.

Amoxil, a broad-spectrum antibiotic, remains the company's largest selling pharmaceutical and continues to be the most frequently dispensed new prescription in the U.S., according to the company.

It is the mainstay in the profitable pharmaceutical segment at Beecham. The segment provided 82% of the operating income in North and South America in fiscal 1988, or about $180 million on sales of $661 million, while American consumer product sales of $363 million generated operating profit of $40 million.

British pounds in this report were converted to U.S. dollars at the exchange rate of 1£ = $1.5764 for both 1986 and 1987.

Augmentin, another broad-spectrum antibiotic from Beecham, showed strong growth in the U.S.

Applications were made to the FDA in June 1988 for Eminase, a new treatment for heart attacks. The drug already is available in West Germany and Belgium and is under review in the U.K. and the Netherlands.

In the executive suite, James G. Andress, former president of Sterling Drug, in June 1988 became chairman of Beecham Pharmaceuticals, based in London. He succeeds James Pollard, a 33-year Beecham veteran.

Beecham Cosmetics was bought for $91.5 million by Beecham executives and Bankers Trust Co. The business includes the Jovan and Vitabath brands and the U.S. licenses to manufacture and sell Yardley of London and Adidas fragrances and a production site in Bensenville, Ill.

Beecham earlier in the year sold to Revlon its lagging Germaine Monteil business, although Beecham will continue to market Jovan brands in the U.K., Germany, the Middle East and other countries. Beecham Cosmetics Inc. will continue to manufacture certain skincare products sold by other Beecham units in the U.S. The buyer was U.S.G. Industries, a unit of U.S.G. Corp. Beecham's other home-improvement line, Roberts Consolidated Industries, was sold earlier in the year to an investor group for $45 million. The disposed units contributed $7.3 million of Beecham's 1987 measured spending, according to BAR/LNA.

The beneficiary of this corporate infusion of cash from the sales is advertising, research and development, according to the company. Through the first quarter of 1988, research and development in pharmaceuticals is up more than 20% over the same period in 1987, while advertising and marketing in both pharmaceuticals and consumer products have grown by 10%.

Bell Atlantic has outlined a strategy to build on the strengths of its networks, focus on unregulated businesses and integrate strategies and businesses. Strong management, innovation and a robust economy led to good performance, analysts say.

Bell Atlantic recorded $59.6 million in measured media spending in 1987, a 21% increase from $49.1 million in 1986. AA estimates overall advertising grew to $138.6 million, up 21.4% from 1986.

A strong economy in the mid-Atlantic region has helped as annual growth in business telephone lines was 6.3%, and toll volumes increased by more than 11%.

In June 1988, Bell Atlantic hired a new agency, J. Walter Thompson, New York, and severed ties with Ketchum Communications, Pittsburgh.

JWT's advertising assignments, corporate/informative, product line and international advertising, is expected to generate $50 million in billings over a 12-month period.

A corporate umbrella campaign prepared by Ketchum is running through this summer and positions the company as a provider and manager of high tech products and services. JWT has developed a new corporate campaign.

The biggest single ad expenditure was $12.2 million for general promotion, up 37%, with magazines and spot TV splitting the till. Bell of Pennsylvania telephone advertising grew only slightly to $6.7 million, with the bulk of that going to spot TV.

Advertising expenditures, mostly in spot TV, increased across the board for Yellow Pages advertising for Bell Atlantic's various operating units as revenues from the publishing classified directories increased nearly 10% over 1986.

Bell of Pennsylvania Yellow Pages advertising grew 34% to $4.7 million, and a new campaign broke in July and will run through November that features Martin Mull and the tagline, "The One that Works."

The company in late 1987 dropped its 3-year-old Dragnet themed campaign bearing the tagline "We Wrote the Book," and featuring David Leisure of Joe Isuzu fame.

New Jersey Bell Yellow Pages had $4.9 million in measured ad expenditures, up 58%. Chesapeake & Potomac Yellow Pages grew by 23% to $3.8 million.

Bell Atlantic boosted its directory business by joining with GTE in a venture, Chesapeake Directory Sales Co., to sell Yellow Pages advertising for four C&P telephone companies. C&P Telephone spending grew 37% to $2.6 million.

In March 1988, U.S. District Court Judge Harold Greene opened the way for the regional Bell companies to provide certain information services. On the heels of that decision, Bell Atlantic has begun a message storage service this June in Washington, D.C. which permits callers to access information stored electronically in a central office.

Telephone answering will be tested in northern New Jersey and northern Virginia in the fourth quarter; tests for voice mail will begin in those markets for selected customers; and videotex gateway, which will provide PC users with a single entrance point to multiple information services providers, will begin market tests in Washington, D.C. and Pennsylvania pending FCC approval.

Bell Atlantic has looked toward diversification to expand, including cellular phone business, customer services and financial services—all under the Bell Atlantic Enterprises heading. Enterprises contributed $47 million to Bell Atlantic's earnings last year while revenues totaled $877 million, nearly double the $447 million in 1986.

CompuShop, a computer distributor, was sold in February 1988 after reporting losses.

"That's another piece of evidence of the management skill at Bell. They made a bad move, but they didn't compound it. They cut their loss," said Jack Grubman, PaineWebber analyst.

The company also sold most of A Beeper Company's paging operations outside the mid-Atlantic states, saying the business didn't fit long-term strategy.

Bell Atlantic entered international markets via agreements with Siemens and IBM to market intelligent networks in Europe and with Telefonica in Spain to provide operating support systems for Spain's telecommunications network.

The company also acquired Bell Canada Enterprises' computer maintenance operations in Europe.

"Bell Atlantic, from the beginning, had the best technology (of all the regional Bell operating companies) the fastest, with the most interesting applications," Mr. Grubman said.

Tampa Bay's
Largest Newspaper
TIMES

Tampa Bay moves with the Times.

St. Petersburg. Tampa. Clearwater.

Many cities comprise Tampa Bay, Florida's largest and wealthiest market. But only one newspaper unites these communities, moving more products and services — the St. Petersburg Times.

Read by 693,100 adults every day and 775,800 adults on Sunday, the Times delivers Tampa Bay's largest audience.

It's an upscale audience, too. A single advertising insertion in the Times reaches more college educated adults, more chief wage earners and more top income households than the metro area's second newspaper. More importantly, the Times delivers Tampa Bay's largest share of buying prospects in nearly every product category.

If you're looking to move merchandise in America's 20th largest metro area, run with the newspaper that delivers more for your ad dollar — the St. Petersburg Times.

BMW of North America pumped up its advertising, especially in support of its top-of-the-line 7-series, as it began in 1987 to challenge Mercedes-Benz for dominance of the $50,000-plus top end of the European luxury car segment.

BMW more than doubled its advertising expenditures for the 7-series (735i and 750iL) in 1987 to $14.6 million. And while it revitalized its world-class standing with the 7-series, the automaker gained an increased share of the mid-segment market by launching its M-series sport coupe and four-door sedan models, all designed by its BMW Motorsport division, Munich.

The big-ticket campaign proved successful for the automaker, which originally fashioned its reputation in the U.S. market with small, sporty sedans. BMW has an 11.2% share of the import market and 7% of the luxury performance vehicle market.

BMW positioned its limited edition M-3, M-5 and M-6 series as grand touring luxury machines powered by race-bred performance engines.

For BMW, the move into higher-priced models signaled the company was willing to give up volume in return for higher profits.

Despite a 44% increase in sales of its 7-series, coupled with sales generated by the new limited edition M-models, BMW's total U.S. sales of 87,839 represented a 9.2% drop from its record sales of 96,759 units in 1986.

BMW lost ground on its 3, 5 and 6-series models. Sales of BMW's 3-series dropped 5.2% to 57,757 from the 1986 total of 60,915. Sales of its 535i and 535is models, introduced in 1986, also dropped to 6,547 units, an estimated 11% decrease from the 7,377 total units sold their first year out. BMW has since pulled those models from its lineup in 1988 to undergo major model changes for 1989.

BMW's new 525i and 535i four-door sedans will be positioned similar to its 7-series, offering luxury and performance. The new 5-series will debut in late September 1988.

When BMW reintroduced the 635csi in 1986, some 2,979 units were sold. In 1987, the manufacturer's redesigned coupe failed to attract as many buyers, falling 35% to 1,944.

Industry observers noted that the overall decline in BMW sales paralleled what was happening in the rest of the European import category. With the value of the American dollar weakened against the West German mark and other currencies, prices of European vehicles soared. Stock market turbulence in October 1987 also had a negative effect on high-ticket items.

BMW was forced to increase prices on most of its cars during 1987, with the exception of its M-6 and 635csi models.

In the first half of 1988, BMW sales in the U.S. continued to follow the segment's trend of decline. BMW sold 34,786 cars in the first six months, a 19.1% decrease from the same period in 1987.

BMW of North America remains the largest of BMW AG's 14 subsidiaries, holding approximately 7% of the luxury performance market and 11.2% of the import market in the U.S.

BMW increased its network TV ad spending in 1987 to $27.4 million, up 55.6% from the $17.6 million spent in 1986, according to BAR/LNA.

Spot TV ad spending also rose from $3.6 million in 1986 to $5 million and the automaker spent $16.1 million on national newspaper advertising in 1987, up 47.8% from $10.9 million spent the previous year.

Unmeasured advertising totals include BMW's sponsorships and dealer promotions which are held regionally. BMW has limited involvement in national promotions. BMW sponsorships include the Mid-Atlantic Steeple Chase Series and additional equestrian events, as well as actively participating in Virginia Slims Tennis events and selected golf tournaments throughout the country.

BMW dropped its L6 and L7 luxury vehicles from its roster in 1987 to make way for new model changes and the introduction of the flagship 750iL.

BMW also introduced the 325ix, a reformulated 4-wheel drive version of its best-selling 325 model in November, priced at $33,290. In May 1988, BMW introduced the 735iL ultra-luxury version of the 735 model. The upscale version is equipped with BMW's acclaimed 6-cylinder engine and a longer wheel base like the flagship model.

BMW broke new advertising in April 1988, positioning its new 7-series at the pinnacle of the luxury market. "The Leadership Campaign" contains only the tagline, "The BMW 7-series. It brings new blood to a class of automobile that can certainly benefit from it." The campaign marked a departure from previous product-oriented advertising, by showing the cars in upscale settings such as horse auctions and a party at Embassy Row in Georgetown.

BMW eventually will extend the campaign to all of its models as well as continue to use the long-running "Ultimate driving machine" theme in its advertising.

In late October, BMW AG plans to relocate its North American headquarters from Montvale to Woodcliff Lake, N.J.

The acquisition drive that Borden Inc. began in early 1986 continued full throttle in 1987 as the company absorbed 23 new companies at a cost of just under half a billion dollars.

Heading the list of new entries—mostly to the Borden food basket—was Prince Co., the leading pasta company in New England valued at an estimated $170 million. It not only vaulted Borden from a small presence in the New England pasta market, but boosted Borden's U.S. pasta share to an estimated 31%, far ahead of second place Hershey with an estimated 17% share.

The Prince acquisition reflected the strategies directed by Borden's Chairman-CEO R. J. Ventres: buying small companies that are either first or second in their markets, and creating a national network out of regional companies.

Also acquired during the year were Laura Scudder's Inc. snack company in Anaheim, Calif., Bordon's first entry into the California market, that also serves Nevada and Arizona; and The Snacktime Co., Indianapolis.

Adding Scudder's solidified Borden's No. 2 ranking among snack-food marketers with an estimated 15% share of the $6 billion market. Frito-Lay, a PepsiCo subsidiary, remains well ahead at a 51% share.

The corporation also gained more canned seafood lines than any other seafood supplier in 1987 with the acquisition of the Orleans line of canned shrimp, oysters, clams and crabmeat from Pet Inc.'s Southland Canning; the Cutcher and Harris lines of mainly crabmeat, but also oysters, clams and shrimps, from Blue Channel Inc. and the canned shrimp line of DeJean's, Biloxi, Miss.

Borden, with its Borden and Meadow Gold brands, is the world's largest dairy products producer; the leading or No. 2 producer of grocery specialties in 23 grocery categories; the leading producer of polyvinylchloride film wraps, forest product glues, household glues (Elmers) and consumer spray paints (Krylon).

Borden also is the top producer of sweet snacks in West Germany and has been expanding its international base in snacks, pasta, wallcoverings and chemical specialties.

Borden's sales and earnings were influenced by the heavy acquisition activity. Its net income rose 20% on a 30% increase in sales in 1987 over the prior year figures which do not reflect the acquisitions. Borden expects the heavy acquisitions of the past two years, which cost it $1.3 billion, to contribute more than $2 billion in sales once a full-year's worth of their returns are added to Borden's books.

The company's expanded presence is beginning to change Borden from a regional to a national advertiser. In 1987, virtually all its advertising was in magazines and spot TV, still reflecting its regional character.

A national ad campaign has just been launched for Creamette that reaches 43 states, said Nick Iammartino, Borden's director of financial communications. The company also has national products in its Cottage Fries, Cheez Doodles and Wise brand pre-popped popcorn, each developed by different regional companies.

At least two other products are being prepared for national launch—Krunchers, a thick, kettle-cooked potato chip, gained through the Laura Scudder's acquisition; and Classico pasta sauce, a premium bottled sauce that Mr. Iammartino calls "the hidden jewel of the Prince acquisition." Grey Advertising is planning a national ad campaign for Classico to run this fall.

Borden's regional marketing presence has helped the company try new products in various areas with little extra expense and without fear of severe losses resulting from a miscalculation.

It also has allowed the company to expand from the bottom up. "Grass-roots recommendations from divisions" let the company closely track the "pulse of the market and realities of business fit, rather than following top-down decisions by corporate management," said Mary Lynn Harden, analyst with Duff & Phelps.

Apart from consumer food products, Borden's fastest growing segment is wallcoverings which has margins in the high teens as opposed to the low-margin grocery products. Borden is the world's largest producer of wallcoverings.

Bristol-Myers Co. became enmeshed in one of 1988's biggest health stories when a study using Bufferin aspirin showed that a daily aspirin dramatically reduces the risk of a first heart attack.

But although Bufferin was the aspirin used in the study, whose findings were published in the "New England Journal of Medicine," Bufferin competitors such as Sterling Drug Co.'s Bayer aspirin tried to capitalize on the findings much to the chagrin of federal authorities. The FDA ordered advertising about first heart attack halted until the study could be evaluated further by federal authorities. FDA approved the advertising of aspirin reducing second heart attacks in 1985.

B-M this year also witnessed new, heavy-hitting competition in the infant formula market as Nestle SA's Carnation Co. jumped into the $1.6 billion market now dominated by B-M and Abbott Laboratories. Carnation announced introduction of Good Start and Good Nature, two whey-based products, in July 1988.

And, looking to the future, B-M made a pact with Smith Kline & French Laboratories to develop and market an over-the-counter version of the ulcer drug, Tagamet. The drug won't carry anti-ulcer claims and will compete in the antacid category under brand names different from the prescription drugs.

In 1987, B-M's centennial anniversary year, each of its core businesses grew as total net earnings rose 20% on a 12% improvement in sales. Overall ad spending increased to $358.9 million, up 7.6% from year-earlier levels for both media advertising and promotional spending. Media advertising accounts for 53% of the total.

B-M's media spending held few surprises: The bulk of its ad budget continues to go to network and spot TV. Taking a hit were national newspaper advertising, down 71%, and supplements, down 93%, although both ad forms traditionally account for minor portions of B-M's media buy. Consumer magazines seemed the direct beneficiary of newspaper cuts: In 1987, magazine ad spending jumped 26%.

As expected, B-M put its heaviest spending behind key brands. Clairol brands got a 37% boost in media spending to an estimated $41 million. The spending hike coincides with a suddenly growing hair coloring market due largely to a graying population that wants only the hairdresser to know for sure. This trend helped expanded total Clairol sales 12% to $785 million. Clairol also experienced a 25% growth in beauty appliances.

Clairol's sales kept pace with the estimated $460 million hair coloring market (manufacturers dollars), which saw sales growth of 10% to 11% in 1987. Clairol has an estimated 60% market share, and competes directly with Cosmair's L'Oreal, which has a 26% total share, down from 26.6% in 1986. In food stores, Clairol's Nice 'n Easy and Miss Clairol brands garnered a 68.2% brand share in 1987.

B-M's OTC drug sales increased just 2% from 1986 to 1987, due largely to flat revenues of analgesics, according to DLJ Securities. However, the OTC outlook—particularly for Bufferin—could change dramatically if and when the FDA allows B-M to advertise the claim showing aspirin prevents a first heart attack. B-M is working with the FDA to promote that claim.

In the meantime, B-M has dramatically increased spending in 1988 for ads promoting Bufferin in the prevention of second heart attack. The ads promote a reformulated "Tri-Buffered Bufferin" which is easier on the stomach. It is aimed at "the millions who take aspirin more than once a week."

The company is believed to be spending $15 million, up from $9.6 million in 1987, on a campaign featuring heart attack victims Arthur Ashe and Geoff Kimball. Mr. Ashe was 1975 Wimbledon Tennis Champ; Mr. Kimball suffered a heart attack at the age of 27, and has since become a marathon runner and triathlete. B-M also is sponsoring educational TV spots with the American Heart Association about heart disease, which are then followed by a Bufferin ad.

Bristol-Myers' analgesic brands total "just over 15%" of the stagnant $1.7 billion (manufacturers dollars) analgesic market, and the company doesn't lead in any of the three main subsegments of the category.

Bristol-Myers has third place in the total analgesic market with 13% in overall shares. Johnson & Johnson holds the No. 1 spot with 33%, while American Home Products has second with 18% and Eastman Kodak's Sterling Drug holds an 11% share, according to Joseph Riccardo of Bear Stearns Cos., New York.

In the aspirin subsegment, which represents $749 million in manufacturers sales, Bristol-Myers is in a tight race. Sterling Drug's Bayer led the pack with $114 million sales, up from $95 million in 1986. It was followed by American Home Products' Anacin at $107 million, up from $98 million. Bristol-Myers' Excedrin had $87 million sales, up from $82 million while its Bufferin brand registered $71 million sales, down from $73 million in 1986. In terms of aspirin brand share of the total analgesic market, Bristol-Myers ranks third with 5.5% for Excedrin and with less than a 5% share for Bufferin, behind Bayer's 6% and Anacin's 6.5% market shares. B-M's Excedrin is not expected to benefit as much from the heart study as its competitor brands because it contains the stimulant caffeine.

In the acetaminophen category, with $644 million sales, up from $638 million in 1986, Johnson & Johnson's Tylenol dominates the market with $500 million in sales during 1987. But acetaminophens are losing overall market share to ibuprofens.

With $310 million sales, up from $217 million in 1986, the ibuprophen subsegment growth was spearheaded by Bristol-Myer's Nuprin which boasted a 23.9% increase in sales to $74 million, according to Kline & Co., a pharmaceutical consultancy based in Fairfield, N.J. However Bristol-Myers was overshadowed b American Home Product's Advil wit $163 million in sales, up from $146 mi lion in 1986.

Johnson & Johnson's Medipren trail with $40 million sales, up from $10 m lion in 1986, its first year on the mark In terms of ibuprofen brand share of t total analgesic market, Bristol-Myers' N prin is ranked No. 2 with a 25% sh American Home's Advil has a 50% m ket share, while Johnson & Johnson ha a 13% share in the market. EQUITRAC™ Now Measures The Unmeasurable– Advertising Campaign Equity

You have always known that an advertising campaign can have a special value all of its own. Something that can grow over time. Something that can magnify the effectiveness of the individual commercials within the campaign.

This "something" is campaign equity. And now it can be measured.

Using a campaign collage board to represent the key campaign "threads", EQUITRAC measures Advertising Campaign Equity through its key components:

1. Recognition of the basic campaign format.
2. Association of this format with the right sponsor.
3. Positive attitudes toward the campaign.

With this measurement and the diagnostic insights it provides, EQUITRAC serves as an unparalleled campaign assessment tool to reassure you that your campaign is right on track, needs modification, or needs to be changed.

EQUITRAC. It can tell you how much your campaign is really worth. Write or phone for a complete brochure.

B-M continues to wage a heavy ad battle for Nuprin, its media spending declined 11% last year to $32 million. Advil got $49 million in media ad spending in 1987, up 5%.

In household products, B-M's Drackett sales increased 12% in 1987 to $515 million after a particularly difficult 1986. Drackett's Windex glass cleaners received $4.3 million in measured advertising, up 30%. Windex is getting heavy competition from Miles' (Bayer USA) Glass Works. After suffering share erosion in 1986, Windex built its share to 46.9% for the year ending June 1988, compared to 44.6% for the year earlier. Texize's Glass Plus share dropped from 24% to 21.1% in the same period. Glass Works continued with a flat 15%.

And advertising was up 182% for Drackett's Renuzit to $6.3 million, which continues to battle Airwick Industries products in the $295 million (wholesale) air freshener category. According to a July 1988 Kidder Peabody data, Airwick has a 25% share, up from 23.3% in 1987, followed by Renuzit at 15% total (6% for Renuzit Spray, down from 6.5% in 1987) and Glade holds an estimated 14%, down 4 share points from 1986.

In infant formula, Nestle may force B-M to change the way it markets its Enfamil and ProSobee infant formula. Nestle's Carnation Co. is expected to spend anywhere from $50 million to $100 million to take on B-M and Abbott in the $1.6 billion market, and intends to go directly to consumers via mass media advertising. B-M and Abbott market mainly to physicians.

In infant formula, Abbott has an estimated share of 54% with its Similac and Isomil brands. B-M's Mead Johnson Pharmaceutical has a 38% share, followed by American Home Products 10% share with SMA, according to Salomon Bros.

Campbell Soup Co. has been attempting since mid-1987 to build up its flagship division, Campbell U.S. (soups, frozen foods and grocery products), which posted a 1% decline in sales and a 4% drop in operating earnings for fiscal 1987 ended July 31—its first such decline in years.

The company, citing market share losses in its soup and spaghetti sauce lines and disappointing new product introductions as the reasons behind the division's earnings decline, has revamped its internal marketing to emphasize convenience foods and out-of-home dining trends, and has slowed down its new product launches.

During this period, Campbell U.S. agencies were put on notice that it would be taking a hard look at all agency work, and possibly make changes—such as the "exportation" of its V-8 juice account to Saatchi & Saatchi, London. Campbell also expects to hike its spending by 15% to 20% to counter declining market shares for some brands.

But the going has been slow. Through the third quarter 1988 ended April 30, 1988, Campbell showed earnings of $201.9 million, up 13.9%, on sales of $3.7 billion, up 6.6% over the first three quarters 1987. However, in the Campbell U.S. division operating income of $202 million was down 3% on sales of $2.05 billion, up 3.3%.

Chief among Campbell's problems in 1987 were failed new product introductions. Its premium-priced Fresh Chef line of refrigerated pasta sauces, soups and salads foundered in regional testing before a full national rollout, falling far short of its $100 million sales goal. Other test products, including Soup du Jour line of frozen microwaveable soups, were pulled from test market.

As if this was not enough trouble, some successful new product introductions actually took market share away from existing Campbell products. Home Cookin', Campbell's highly successful line of ready-to-serve soups, drew business away from its Chunky Soup, according to Campbell. Home Cookin' was supported during calendar 1987 with $5.5 million in measured media, down 18% from introductory levels in 1986, according to BAR/LNA. At the same time, Chunky spending rose 63.8% to $8.4 million in a possible effort to curtail cannibalization.

Measured spending on other soup lines also rose, with Campbell's red-and-white brand soups at $26.5 million, up 36%. New categories included Creamy Natural Soups, at $4.8 million, and Special Request canned soup at $5.4 million in support of the line's national rollout.

Campbell continues to do battle with Lipton in the growing dry soup category. While condensed soup market has been stagnant, growing at a rate of about 2% per year, dry soups have been on the upswing. They now account for 27.5% of the total category, more than double their 13.3% share of 10 years ago.

Unilever's Thomas J. Lipton Inc. has been the undisputed leader in the dry soup mix category over the last few years, but recent activity has been from Oriental-noodle soup lines. These now account for as much as 66% of the dry soup category, according to Nissin, the marketer of Top Ramen, Oodles of Noodles and Cup o' Noodles. Campbell's Quality Soup & Recipe Mix products with some 3% of the dry soup market tried to build on the trend in late 1987 with the introduction of Campbell's Cup, a dry soup Oriental noodle product, with a $6.2 million spending blitz.

Campbell's competitors have taken advantage of the company's existing lines in the freezer case. Stouffer's Lean Cuisine and Heinz' Weight Watchers together control about 70% of the market for low-calorie frozen entrees, with Lean Cuisine at about 40%, according to 1987 Find/SVP DATA. In terms of premium entrees, Lean Cuisine held a 26% market share followed by Stouffer red box entrees at 18%, Armour Dinner Classics and D.C. Lite with a combined 17% share, Campbell's Le Menu at 13%, Kraft's Budget Gourmet at 12% and Weight Watchers with 10% in 1987.

Campbell's still leads all marketers in the prepared frozen-foods market worth an estimated $8 billion (including everything from entrees to desserts) with a 15% share, followed by ConAgra 13.8%, Pillsbury 11%, Stouffer Foods (Nestle) 9.4% and Kraft 7.5%, according to Find/SVP.

Spending on Le Menu climbed 150% to $2.7 million, while spending on Swanson Le Menu frozen dinners dropped 30% to $4.8 million.

Swanson Homestyle Recipe frozen entrees were introduced with $4.5 million in measured spending. Spending on Swanson Great Starts Breakfast entrees dropped to just under $1 million from introductory levels of $3.2 million.

Competition also has stirred up trouble for Campbell in the Italian foods arena. Its Prego sauce remains No. 2 behind Unilever's Ragu, though Prego has lost ground from 30% in 1985 to the low 20s while Ragu holds at 50%. Other competition in the market is coming from Borden, following its acquisition of Prince Co., with its Prince, Aunt Millie's and Classico sauce brands.

Spending for Prego sauce declined 20% in 1987 to $6.08 million. A line extension product, Prego frozen entrees, was helped with $2.3 million, up 29%.

The company reports strong sales of its Franco American canned meals, which were supported with $2.4 million in measured spending, up from just over $1 million in 1986.

A star performer for Campbell has been its Pepperidge Farm division, driven by its strongest cookie year ever. Its American Collection cookies were strongly received in test markets during the year, prompting Pepperidge Farm to add a companion line of frozen microwaveable American Collection Desserts.

Pepperidge Farm owns only 5% of the total cookie market, far behind Nabisco, with more than 50%, and Keebler, which has about a 17% share. Yet, it is the leader in the premium cookie segment, followed by General Foods Corp.'s Entemann's subsidiary.

Total advertising for Pepperidge Farm division rose 4% to $18.6 million. It was led by cookie advertising at $7.6 million, down 13%. Ad spending for Pepperidge Farm Frozen Pizza, climbed 146% to $7.3 million.

During 1987, Campbells made several acquisitions for its Vlasic subsidiary, which leads the $600 million pickle market with 35% share. Vlasic spent $4 million in measured media in 1987, down 29%.

Vlasic became leader in the $295 million per year olive market with the acquisitions of Early California from United Biscuit's Specialty Brands division, and Durkee brand from Reckitt & Colman North American Group. Durkee has approximately 20% of the green olive market, while Early California holds an estimated 27% share as the leader in the black, ripe olive segment.

As part of the Specialty Brands deal, Vlasic also acquired Marie's Refrigerated Salad Dressings. In a separate deal, Campbell bought Open Pit barbecue sauce from General Foods Corp.

During 1987, Campbell disposed of Champion Valley Farms (Recipe brand pet foods) to H.J. Heinz Co., as well as the remaining restaurant operations of H.T. McDoogal's, Annabelle's and Pietro's.

Chrysler Corp. experienced its first dip in its share of the U.S. retail car market in five years in 1987, although it was consoled by a substantial increase in truck market share related to its Aug. 5, 1987 acquisition of American Motors.

Despite its decline in car market share, Chrysler Motors, the vehicle-producing subsidiary of Chrysler Corp., enjoyed a banner year in 1987, including the acquisition of two well-known automotive nameplates—Jeep and Lamborghini—and further fine-tuning of its brand marketing program.

Chrysler, which held a 10.5% of the U.S. car market in 1987, down from 11.5%, boosted its U.S. truck market share to 15.9% from 12.1%. Share figures for 1987 calendar year include AMC, Renault and Jeep products from Aug. 6 to Dec. 31.

In total ad expenditures, Chrysler Corp. spent $568.7 million in calender year 1987, compared to $503.6 million in 1986. In 1987, Chrysler spent $125 million in unmeasured media and $443.7 million in measured media. In specific media categories, Chrysler spent $70.1 million in newspapers, $2.2 million in business publications, $17.3 million on spot radio, $608,000 in farm publications, $100.4 million in magazines, $151.6 million on net TV, $82.8 million in spot TV and $2.4 million in outdoor.

American Motors spent $116.2 million in total advertising in 1986 compared to $125.6 million in 1985. Ad expenditures for American Motors in 1987 are included in Chrysler figures for that year.

Chrysler continued to battle a tough automotive marketplace with costly consumer incentives and swallowed the expenses of its acquisition of American Motors. The company's net earnings of $1.29 billion compared to $1.39 billion in 1986 when Chrysler included a one-time net profit of $131.9 million from its interest in French automaker Peugeot.

All four of the company's car marketing divisions posted unit sales declines in 1987. The Dodge division sold 407,174 cars in the U.S. in 1987, down 20.2% from 510,136 in 1986. The Chrysler division sold 296,362, down 15.7% from 351,741 in 1986. The Plymouth unit sold 343,981, down 17.3% from 415,701. Eagle division (formerly the AMC car operations) sold 44,626, down 39.9% from 74,242 in 1986.

Dodge division truck sales in the U.S. for 1987 totaled 708,125, up 18.8% from 596,159. Jeep sold 208,440 units for the year, up 0.5% from 207,514 in 1986.

Among the leading nameplates, the Chrysler LeBaron coupe, including its convertible version, led the Chrysler unit in sales with 78,429 compared to 40,390 in 1986. The LeBaron received $28.7 million in measured ad spending, up from $13.6 million in 1986, according to BAR/LNA.

The aging Plymouth Reliant sedan paced Plymouth car sales with 83,415 compared to 99,727 in 1986. Advertising was measured at $5.3 million, up 23% from the prior year, according to BAR/LNA. More ad dollars, however, were spent advertising Plymouth's Sundance ($12.9 million, down 9%) and Voyager wagon, ($10.8 million, down 21%).

Reliant's sister car, the Dodge Aries, outsold the Dodge lineup with 81,182 compared to 80,581 in 1986. It received only $4.5 million, up 50%.

The Renault Alliance, although canceled after the 1987 model year, was the best-selling car for the Eagle Division in 1987 with 26,132 compared to 49,907 in 1986. It received $3.6 million, down from $14.8 million in 1986. The Renault Medallion pulled far greater ad support of $15.6 million, up from only $14,000 in 1986.

In 1988 model-year advertising, Chrysler introduced the Eagle Premier and its Jeep-Eagle division on Dec. 22 with its $25 million "Big Bang" promotion. William Estÿ Co. (now Campbell-Mithun-Esty), the ad agency used by AMC and retained by Chrysler after the takeover, created the ads.

The ad blitz included both ads for the European-designed sedan and introduction ads featuring Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca. Mr. Iacocca also appeared in a patriotic ad for the Jeep-Eagle division that appeared in the beginning of video cassettes of the movie "Platoon."

Esty also continued its "Only in a Jeep" campaign for Jeep with heavy concentration on the Cherokee and Comanche. In 1987, the two together received $33.7 million in measured advertising, up 17.4%, according to BAR/LNA. Dodge brought its car and truck products under one themeline for 1988—"It's got to be a Dodge." Dodge, which is handled by BBDO, Southfield, Mich., used b&w running footage with bright red vehicles in ads for its Dodge Daytona Shelby Z, Dodge Caravan and Dodge Dakota. Chrysler spent $67.9 million on these vehicles in 1987, compared with $24.5 million in 1986.

Plymouth continued to use the themeline "The pride's inside—Born in America" to stress the division's value and content attributes. Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, Birmingham, Mich., handles Plymouth advertising.

Chrysler division advertising, also handled by BJK&E, stressed its luxury image with ads for its new New Yorker and New Yorker Landau. Ricardo Montalban returned as Chrysler division's spokesman after a one-year absence to help launch the two new cars and introduce a special "Crystal Key" comprehensive maintenance program for the two models. The Mexican-born actor has been a Chrysler spokesman for 14 years.

Chrysler also purchased three-quarters of the automotive TV spots on telecasts of the Winter Olympic Games, which aired in February. Jeep was the official truck of the Olympic Games.

A special campaign was created for the Winter Olympic spots called "Chrysler—We do it right" by Chrysler's corporate agency BJK&E. The nearly $40 million campaign featured Chairman Iacocca touting selected products from each division. He departed from his usual tough-talking spokesman role for the campaign to appear with an owl and a shaggy dog in the campaign.

The 1988 model year was filled with upscale products for Chrysler. It introduced a front-wheel-drive New Yorker and New Yorker Landau. Jeep-Eagle received the new Premier in December and Mitsubishi-built Eagle Summit in August 1988. The Renault Medallion, a product inherited by Chrysler when it purchased AMC, was rebadged the Eagle Medallion.

The company plans to introduce the Dodge Spirit and Plymouth Acclaim sedans and a four-wheel-drive version of the Plymouth and Dodge Colt wagon in the 1989 model year. The two-seater luxury convertible Chrysler's TC by Maserati is scheduled to bow in November 1988 as an 1989 model, after numerous introduction delays.

It also plans to introduce in the spring of 1989 the Plymouth Laser, a sporty coupe built by Diamond Star Motors, the Chrysler-Mitsubishi joint venture.

The 1988 model year was also a time for a personnel shakeup at the top. Harold K. Sperlich, Chrysler president, took an early retirement in January 1988. Bennett E. Bidwell, vice chairman of Chrysler Motors, was named president of product and marketing for Chrysler Motors. Robert A. Lutz, exec vp of international operations, trucks and components, was named president of operations.

In other corporate news, Chrysler was holding talks with a handful of companies in attempt to sell parts of its Acustar parts-making subsidiary in early 1988. The United Auto Workers, fearing huge job losses, threatened a walkout and later Chrysler reversed its decision to sell the parts maker.

Chrysler also met with resistance from the UAW when it announced it would close its aging Kenosha, Wis. assembly plant, formerly owned by AMC. The closing was a public relations nightmare and Chrysler agreed to set up an estimated $20 million trust fund to help Kenosha workers and their families.

Chrysler Corp. Chairman Iacocca also published his second autobiography, "Talking Straight," in May 1988, although literary critics had scant praise for the successor to his mega-hit autobiography, "Iacocca."

Clorox Co.'s continued efforts to diversify beyond bleach, which accounts for nearly half of the company's profits, resulted in a 13% increase in ad spending and an 11.9% increase in sales for its last fiscal year.

That diversification effort, which has included salad dressings, charcoal, paints, cat litter, air fresheners and bottled water in recent years, will get perhaps its biggest thrust in 1988 when Clorox moves into the laundry detergent market with Clorox Super Detergent.

Tested for 18 months as Wave, the company decided to roll out the product in four Western states in June 1988, using the Clorox name. DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, is the agency.

Wave won market shares of 5.7% to about 8.5% in Denver, Salt Lake City, Memphis and Charleston, S.C., during its test encouraging the company to start the roll-out described by company officials as "more than a test and less than a commitment to a national brand."

While Clorox spent less than $2 million in measured media for Wave in 1987, analysts believe the company will have to spend more than $50 million for Clorox Super Detergent to impress consumers nationwide. Such spending would adversely affect company earnings in 1988, but analysts say the benefits of establishing a foothold in the $3.5 billion detergent market could positively affect the company bottom line for years to come.

If Clorox Super Detergent could command a 5% share, it would mean more than $175 million in annual sales further reducing the company's dependence on liquid and dry bleach. Clorox currently commands a 55% share of the total U.S. liquid and dry bleach market with some 45% of the company's profits directly attributable to bleach.

The challenge facing Clorox in the detergent world, however, is direct competition with heavy hitters such as Procter & Gamble, Colgate-Palmolive Co. and Unilever. P&G responded to Clorox Super Detergent by testing "lemon fresh" Comet liquid chlorine bleach in northern and central Indiana with a 12% to 15% market share. P&G is also testing Tide with bleach in the East, ostensibly to undercut Clorox Super Detergent's potential introduction nationwide.

John W. Collins, Clorox's chairman-chief operating officer, seems to relish the battle. "They're big, they're good and they're tough. But they're also reputable competitors. They play above board. To the extent that it's a fight, it will be a fair fight."

Clorox's heaviest measured ad spending is in support of its liquid chlorine bleach, totaling some $8 million for 1987, down 11%. The company also spent $6.1 million for Clorox 2 liquid in 1987, a tenfold increase over 1986, while decreasing measured spending for Clorox 2 bleach powder by 42% to $5.4 million, according to BAR/LNA.

The company is also testing Clorox Lemon Scent liquid chlorine bleach in Houston as a possible extension of its premium-priced Fresh Scent Clorox liquid introduced in January of 1986.

Among its other household products, according to BAR/LNA, measured spending increased the most for Formula 409, up 45% to $4.5 million which is near the product's 1985 level of support. Clorox spent $3.9 million in measured spending on Liquid-plumr in 1987, the same as 1985 and 1986, and $5.5 million on Soft Scrub Cleanser, down about 8% from 1986. The company also introduced Soft Scrub cleanser with bleach to two-thirds of the country in 1988 as a companion to regular Soft Scrub, but has yet to gauge sales.

Act, a concentrated laundry detergent in pre-measured "action pak" previously in test, has been dropped as the company concentrates on Clorox Super Detergent this year.

But as the company awaits the results of the laundry detergent roll-out in 1988, it is taking steps to become a more significant factor in food. The company is testing two pasta salad dressing mixes, Creamy Ranch and Ranch Style Italian, and a potato salad mix, Ranch with Bacon, in Cincinnati, Denver and Miami. Young & Rubicam, San Francisco, is the agency.

Measured spending for its various Hidden Valley Ranch dressings and mixes totaled $10.7 million in 1987, a 32% increase, according to BAR/LNA.

In addition the company is developing new products in the "barbecue/picnic/leisure time" area under the Kingsford brand. Clorox spent $3.6 million to introduce K.C. Masterpiece barbecue sauce nationally through its Kingsford division in 1987. Young & Rubicam, San Francisco, is the agency. Spending for Kingsford charcoal briquets remained virtually unchanged at $5.6 million, while Match Light, a test product in 1986, received $3 million in measured spending for its 1987 roll-out.

In the non-retail foodservice area, Clorox introduced Moore's beer-battered Monterey Jack cheese sticks, zucchini slices and mushrooms as a line extension to its popular Moore's onion rings.

Clorox expanded its bottled water holdings in 1987 by acquiring three small Florida companies that will likely be consolidated with Lodi, N.J.-based Deer Park Spring Water Co. and Aspen Water Co. in Tampa, Fla, two companies Clorox purchased in January 1987.

Earnings for the company's paints and stains business improved significantly last year because of a decision to stop marketing the Olympic and Lucite lines in the same outlets. Now the Olympic line is selling to independent retailers while the Lucite line is sold to mass merchandisers. Measured spending for Lucite also dropped about 37% to $2.3 million in 1987.

The company's architectural coatings business (paints and stains) has consistently contributed about 10% of total company sales, but its profits have been only marginal. Some analysts predict an eventual divestiture if performance does not improve.

Clorox also purchased its office building this year, reinforcing its ties with the city of Oakland.

Coca-Cola Co. has been absorbed over the past two years by its sweeping financial restructuring while counting up healthy returns from its foreign operations.

On the heels of the 1986 move to buy many of its major bottlers and spin them off into a separate corporation called Coca-Cola Enterprises Inc., the Atlanta-based soft drink company performed nearly the identical maneuver with its entertainment businesses in 1987.

Coke's Columbia Pictures entertainment group was merged with Tri-Star Pictures, Inc. and the combination spun off into Columbia Pictures Entertainment Inc. As was the case with Coca-Cola Enterprises, the parent company maintained a 49% interest in the new Columbia Pictures business. The majority of stock was distributed to the existing shareholders of Coca-Cola and Tri-Star.

Altogether, Coke's investments in such businesses brought in $119 million in profits during 1987 and left its marketing wizards free to concentrate on its robust soft drink business and still-troubled foods division.

Coca-Cola spent $720 million worldwide on media advertising in 1987, up 11% from 1986—a percentage increase resulting primarily from the decline in the dollar, said the company. Coca-Cola's foreign operations represented about 55% of net operating revenues in 1987, compared with 46.5% only two years ago when the dollar was stronger.

For Coca-Cola, market hegemony in its core soft drink business has become more a way of life than a fact of business. Dominance continued in 1987 with all Coca-Cola Co. soft-drink brands holding a 40 market share—up 0.2 share points from 1986, according to an analysis by the trade magazine Beverage World. Chief rival PepsiCo kept pace but was unable to decrease Coke's lead by also moving up 0.2 share points to 30.9%. In the fast-rising diet segment, Coke brands achieved a 50.6% share well ahead of PepsiCo's 38.6%.

"The diet category has been growing and it's an area where the companies obviously believe there is movement to be made in market share," said Lee D. Wilder, senior VP of Robinson-Humphrey Co. Inc., and soft-drink industry analyst.

"Coke and Pepsi may swap half a percentage point in the sugar cola segment, but they are obviously trying to establish market position in the diet segment, even at the risk of margins."

If Coke is an awesome presence in the U.S. soft drink market, it is an overwhelming force overseas. Coca-Cola derives some 77% of its soft drink operating income from its international operations. Moreover, analysts note that the company's foreign sales are expected to grow at about twice the rate of the company's domestic sales.

In January, Coca-Cola USA undertook a management shakeup and the realignment of the corporate structure. As a result of the Coca-Cola Enterprises spinoff, the parent Coca-Cola USA was no longer playing mother hen to a clutch of independent bottlers. This left expendable some 200 staffers at Coca-Cola USA, who were laid off. The company also restructured its management to separate the advertising functions from the promotion, media and packaging functions. Mike Beindorff was named advertising manager and the key contact for the company's major agencies: Lintas:New York, Lowe Marschalk and McCann-Erickson.

The foods sector, which lost ground in sales during 1986 from the prior year, rebounded in 1987 with a 7.1% increase in revenue. But the company struggled to reposition its Minute Maid orange juice line for popular taste—premium orange juice, which is chilled and pasteurized and not made from concentrate.

Minute Maid, however, ran into hot water with its premium offer, called Premium Choice, that it launched in December in 16 Midwestern states. Tropicana, in a law suit, challenged Minute Maid's ad claim: "Straight from the orange." Coca-Cola removed the claim from its advertising rather than contest the suit.

Minute Maid is the overall orange juice market leader with a 22% share compared to Tropicana's (Seagram) 18%, according to A.C. Nielsen figures of May 1988, but trails Tropicana (32% to 19%) in the rapidly growing ready-to-serve segment worth about $1.4 billion.

Emblematic of the company's problems outside the soft drink business is the steady decline in market share of its coffee segment. Maryland Club and Butternut coffees declined in the marketplace from about 2.5% in 1983 to 2% in 1987. Coca-Cola does not budget any major media spending for the products.

As Coke and Pepsi have done to their competitors in soft drinks, so General Foods and Procter & Gamble have done to coffee, increasing their combined shares from 57.8% in 1983 to 65.8% in 1987.

For the second year in a row, Coca-Cola's total U.S. ad expenditures dropped, according to AA estimates, 1.5% to $364.7 million. TV continued to dominate measured spending. And while the company spent virtually the identical sum of $182.3 million for network and spot TV combined in 1986 and 1987, it shifted emphasis to network in 1987 as that medium grew from 54% to 61% of the total TV expenditure.

Colgate-Palmolive Co., in its quest to become the leading international packaged-goods marketer by 1991, refined its global marketing structure in 1987, which resulted in a $211 million pretax charge, a net loss in the third-quarter and the elimination of 600 middle-management jobs.

Colgate chairman, president-CEO Reuben Mark said the restructuring will "improve the management of our global business and new-product momentum."

To stay competitive with Unilever and Procter & Gamble Co., Mr. Mark said Colgate, which introduced 201 new products and line extensions worldwide in 1987, would sell the remaining units of its Kendall Co. healthcare division as early as the fourth quarter of 1988. Kendall accounted for $1 billion, or 18%, of Colgate's $5.6 billion in sales in 1987.

Colgate already had divested two Kendall units and other investments for proceeds of $223 million. The impending sale of Kendall's hospital products groups will give Colgate seed money to invest in new global personal-care and household products, said A. Courtenay Shepard, president of Colgate-U.S. That includes healthcare products such as the Ectra line of analgesics, and allergy and stomach remedies now testing in selected U.S. markets.

Colgate in 1987 acquired Disposer Care, a garbage-disposal deodorizer from Twinoak Products, Plano, Ill., and purchased the liquid soap businesses of Minnetonka, including Softsoap, the leading liquid-soap brand; Sesame Street children's bath products and Village Bath adult bath additives. The company retained Minnetonka agency Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, Minneapolis, to work on the estimated $5 million account.

BJK&E joins a select agency roster which lists Young & Rubicam and FCB/Leber Katz Partners, both New York, as Colgate's main agencies. Business was consolidated with the two agencies in 1986.

Colgate management earlier this year told analysts it spent $500 million on promotion and $385 million on media advertising worldwide in 1987. The company is working on weaning both consumers and the retail trade from dependency on promotional spending, said Clay Timon, Colgate worldwide VP-advertising. Industry sources say that Colgate is getting a big return on coupons.

However, he would not comment on whether the reduced dollars in promotional spending would show up on the media side.

During the year, Colgate subsidiary Hill's Pet Products acquired Veterinary Cos. of America Inc., which is the largest independent distributor of Hill's therapeutic and nutritionally-balanced pet foods.

Overseas, where sales of Colgate's household and personal-care products jumped 17% to $3.2 billion, the company took a major step into the bleach business with the acquisition of certain household-product lines of Cotelle SA, the leading French producer of bleach, and the Klorin Group of Denmark, the bleach category leader in the Nordic countries. The company said the acquisitions moved Colgate into the front ranks of the worldwide bleach category, with strong market positions in seven European markets.

While ranked as a leading marketer outside the U.S., analysts say Colgate-U.S. has not demonstrated it can sustain the momentum of major new-product introductions over an extended period of time.

Colgate's major introduction of 1987 was Fab 1 Shot, a single-dose, washer-to-dryer packet filled with detergent, fabric softener and anti-static ingredients. The estimated $50 million advertising and promotion campaign via FCB/Leber Katz Partners netted the new brand an initial 4% share of the $3.25 billion heavy-duty detergent category, but its share slipped to less than 2% by mid-1988. Colgate is planning a promotional blitz in the fourth-quarter of 1988 to help boost the brand.

Overall, Colgate has only a 14% share of the laundry detergent category, trailing Procter & Gamble, which has more than a 51% share. Colgate during 1987 reformulated its three other heavy-duty detergents—Fab with Fabric Softener, Fresh Start and Dynamo II. More softening agents were added to Fab; a new stain-fighting formula was incorporated into Fresh Start; and Dynamo II liquid detergent was relaunched with a drip-free pour spout and a new stain-fighting formula.

An $18 million network TV and print effort for Fresh Start for the first time took on P&G's Tide by name in a hard-hitting, comparative campaign. The spots compared reformulated Fresh Start's stain fighters with those found in Tide powder, the category leader. Y&R handled.

Although Colgate is the No. 1 toothpaste marketer worldwide, its Colgate brand domestically holds only a 30% share compared to P&G's Crest, which is the leading brand with a more than a 38% share of the $1 billion U.S. toothpaste category.

Colgate in May 1988 broke its first celebrity spokesman campaign for Colgate toothpaste with four TV spots featuring actor Pat Morita as the Colgate "Wisdom Tooth." It pitches both regular Colgate fluoride toothpaste and Colgate Tartar Control Formula, providing a breather in the monotonous tartar war between Colgate and P&G. Y&R handles the $30 million toothpaste account.

To boost its share of the oral-care category, Colgate introduced nationally Colgate Tartar Control Formula mouthwash, which the company claims is the first product to combine a tartar-inhibitor with a breath freshener; rolled-out an improved, easier-to-use pump toothpaste dispenser, and launched Colgate Plus, a toothbrush with a compact head.

Colgate maintained its leading position in the $140 million liquid (at retail) automatic dishwasher detergent segment with Palmolive Automatic, but in the last year the brand has steadily been losing market share as competitors enter the new category.

In mid-June, Palmolive Automatic had a 41.3% share, down from 65.7% a year earlier. During the same time period, P&G's Cascade jumped to 31.6%, up 11 share points, while Lever Bros.' Sunlight earned a 22.5% share in its first year of national distribution. Palmolive Automatic created the liquid dishwashing detergent category two years ago and was the lone player for six months before its rivals entered with their own products. The liquid subsegment dominates growth in the total dishwashing detergent category that grew only 1% to $443.5 million in 1987.

Colgate is betting that a reformulated Palmolive Automatic, introduced in August 1988, will strengthen its market-share position. Y&R produced the $15 million TV campaign themed "Clean the first time around" to support the relaunch of the brand.

Palmolive light-duty dishwashing liquid was extended with a new lemon-lime scent and supported with more than $6 million in national advertising. The brand holds an 18% share of the $660 million category, down 1.5 share points from 1986.

The company reformulated its Irish Spring deodorant soap with skin conditioners, and is testing the waters for the first line extension of the brand with Irish Spring deodorant. Irish Spring soap holds a 5.5% share of the $1.15 billion category, up a half-share point since 1986. Palmolive bar soap had a 1.8% share of the category, unchanged from the previous year.

Overseas, Colgate extended the strong Palmolive haircare franchise from shampoos and conditioners into mousses and hairsprays; completed the global launch of Colgate Tartar Control Formula toothpaste; continued expansion of Axion dishwashing paste through the Third World, and rolled Protex anti-bacterial soap throughout Latin America.

Colgate's measured media spending in 1987 totaled $102.8 million, an 8% increase from $95.2 million in measured media in 1986, according to AA. The acquisition of Softsoap, Sesame Street and Village bath products from Minnetonka added $2.12 million in measured spending.

Much of the increase went into network TV, up 4.1% to $68.6 million, and spot TV, up 69% to $22.6 million, according to BAR/LNA, which also indicated Colgate slashed cable TV spending to almost nothing, spending $342,000, a 75% drop from $1.4 million the previous year.

The national introduction of Palmolive Automatic dishwasher detergent was supported with $11.1 million in network TV and magazines, while spending behind Palmolive light-duty dishwashing liquid declined 19.7% to $6.1 million.

Colgate Tartar Control Formula toothpaste and Colgate Tartar Control Mouthwash were supported with more than $27 million in measured media spending. Colgate spent more than $10 million behind the reformulated Irish Spring with skin conditioners bar soap, a 67% increase from the previous year.

Adolph Coors Co. has given its advertising a new look in the past 18 months as it expanded into new areas of the country, rolled out new brands and opened a new East Coast packaging plant.

Coors market share for all eight of its brands has inched up to 8.2%, an 0.1 market share point gain, and was the fifth largest brewer behind G. Heileman Brewing Co. (8.5% share), according to 1987 year-end ranking by trade specialists, Beer Marketer's Insights and Modern Brewery Age. The two breweries are running neck-and-neck this year, with Coors ahead slightly by 200,000 barrels, according to Jerry Steinman, publisher of Beer Marketer's Insights.

Coors Original Draft held a 3.8 share of market in 1987 with 7.2 million barrels, down 8.9% in volume from the previous year, said Mr. Steinman, but Coor's Light countered the decline by building a 4.27% share with 7.9 million barrels, up 9.7% in volume.

The company's net sales rose 2.7% in 1987, but competitive price pressure from the two top brewers, Anheuser-Busch (40% share) and Miller Brewing (20.7%), as well as startup expenses for the company's new Shenandoah Brewery near Elkton, Va., reduced net income to $48.1 million, down 18.9% from 1986. Earnings got back on track in the second quarter 1988 when they rose 10.5% over 1987 levels.

Brewing industry growth as a whole is flat. The aging baby boomers are drinking less and the new generation of beer-drinkers (20- to 30-year-olds) has been declining in numbers. In spite of the demographics, Coors boosted its barrelage of all brands in 1987 by 2.8% to 15.66 million barrels sold, one of three major breweries to record an increase. In the first half of 1988, barrelage increased to 7.64 million, up 4.7% over the prior-year period.

Following the industry trend of offering a different brew for every taste, Coors introduced two new brands—Herman Joseph's Light in September 1987 and Turbo 1000, a malt liquor, which began testing this summer in four markets.

As the new kid on the block, Turbo faces a tough challenge against G. Heileman's Colt 45 and Stroh's Schlitz Malt Liquor, which dominate the malt liquor market. TV spots with the tag "Looking for the man with a Turbo in his hand" by Tatham-Laird & Kudner, Chicago, support Turbo in the test markets.

Its 115-year-old Coors brand got a new look and name, Coors Original Draft, manifested by dropping the "Banquet Beer" ribbon on the can and adding "Original Draft" under the Coors name. Can color was changed from buff yellow to almond. A new TV, radio and print campaign by GSD&M of Austin with the tagline "The American Original" was introduced with the name change. Revisions are in production to feature the new packages.

In 1987, the Coors brand was moved from Foote, Cone & Belding to GSD&M of Austin, which previously handled Coors' Hispanic advertising. GSD&M also took over Extra Gold, previously handled by Tatham-Laird & Kudner, Chicago, which now handles Turbo 1000.

FCB still handles Coor's Light, Herman Joseph, HJ Light, Killian's Irish Red Ale and Winterfest as well as all media buying.

Coors Light has replaced its "Silver Bullet Bar" campaign with one featuring the tag "The Right Beer Now" by FCB. In 1987, it also began targeting women with a print campaign featuring women engaged in sports.

With the switch from TLK to GSD&M for Extra Gold, the "No beer's as bold as Coor's Extra Gold" was replaced with a new GSD&M campaign, "Full tilt taste."

Coors remains heavily into sports promotions including: Sugar Ray Leonard Boxing team; Jimmie Huega Free Style Ski Team; Coors International Bicycle Classic; Coors/Motor Craft Thunderbird race car team with Bill Elliott, driver and Silver Bullet stock car.

Coors continues its country-wide expansion started in 1980 when the company abandoned its regional status and crossed the Mississippi for the first time. A big push in the last 18 months into the Northeast partially accounts for increased expenses, but it also boosted sales. Expansion into New York and New Jersey in first quarter 1987 was backed by a $25 million ad budget. Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, prepared TV spots for Coors and Coors Light featuring a Coors truck hauling the "Taste of the Rockies" from the brewery at the foothills of the Rocky Mountain to the boroughs of the Big Apple and the Jersey shore. Ethnic markets received special targeting with TV and radio ads aimed at blacks created by Uniworld Group and with TV and radio spots in Spanish created by Austin-based GSD&M.

Although industry analysts predicted Coors would encounter resistance in these union strongholds because of past labor relations problems, demand in the market accounted for most of the volume gains in 1987 and offset declines in Texas and California. The timing of the AFL-CIO's decision in August 1987 to call off a Coors boycott may have helped. Coors agreed not to resist unionization.

Beer business analyst John Collopy, of the Milwaukee brokerage firm Cleary, Gul, Reiland, McDevitt & Collopy, suggests the novelty of Coors in the northeastern states may wear off. New entries "usually lose some of that initial thrust," Collopy said, noting "it's too early to tell what those markets are going to be in the long run for Coors."

Entry into Pennsylvania and Delaware this year almost completes the country-wide expansion. Only Indiana remains unconquered because of its law prohibiting beers that require refrigerated storage.

Coors also expanded distribution of Extra Gold, a heavier beer introduced in 1985-86, to all markets and the demand has outpaced supply, according to the company. "They're (Coors) meeting the trend in the industry which right now is extreme segmentation," said Mr. Collopy. All brands in the Coors line are now available nationwide including a holiday brew, Winterfest, sold from Thanksgiving to New Year's.

Coors began testing this summer a new mini-keg package, Coor's Party Ball, in eight cities.

In April 1987, the company entered the Japanese market in a licensing agreement with Asahi Breweries Ltd., and is second only to Anheuser-Busch for American imports there. Sales have exceeded production capacity at Asahi Breweries requiring Coors to airlift its product to Japan this summer.

Joe Coors, who had worked for 41 years with the company his grandfather founded, retired from day-to-day operations in 1987 but will remain as vice chairman of the board. His brother, Bill Coors, continues as chairman. Coors also hired Steve Ritter as manager of brand development, a new marketing slot.

Cosmair, embattled by a flood of new products from competitors on the low end of the market, experienced marginal sales increases for its L'Oreal line that kept a lid on overall sales growth in 1987.

Its high-end business, Lancome beauty lines, traveled much better as sales rose about 13%, according to industry sources. Perhaps reflecting some of this sales movement, ad spending patterns showed measured media advertising for the mass-market L'Oreal cut by 4% to $31.6 million, but increased by 4% to $13.4 million for Lancome—the net effect producing an overall reduction in advertising of 3.3% by the company.

While Cosmair pared its ad spending, two of its biggest competitors raised theirs—Noxell by 21% and Revlon by 3.4%.

Cosmair is fighting the competition with a steady flow of new products of its own. Lancome plans to market Forte-Vital Serum, a facial skin-firmer, later this year. Earlier in 1988, it introduced Teinte Majeur, a cream compact and Poudre Majeur, a loose powder makeup, both with "microbubbles," to lend the products smoother texture, said Joan Lasker, VP public relations, Lancome. Both products are performing strongly in the marketplace, according to industry consultant Suzanne Grayson of Grayson Reports. Lancome in October plans to extend the Majeur line with Blush Majeur, a cream blush.

This February Cosmair began U.S. marketing of Biologics 30, 40, 50, a skincare treatment for different age groups, marketed throught its Biotherm division. It is selling well, according to Ms. Grayson. Biotherm also is planning to launch Tonicite firming eye cream and Bio-Cils eye makeup remover this September.

Biotherm began marketing in April a product to battle body cellulite—Creme Contour Chauffante 10 Jours (10 day thermo-active body contouring treatment).

On the L'Oreal side, Plenitude will enter U.S. test market in Dallas this September. Plenitude is a European skincare line that includes five cleansing care products and four skincare creams for round-the-clock use.

Results for L'Oreal haircare products, traditionally one of Cosmair's most successful divisions, were mixed in 1987. Preference hair color again turned in a solid performance but Avantage, a newer hair coloring, was being blamed for food store market share dip as overall L'Oreal share dropped to 26% from 26.6% in 1986.

Cosmair's single largest ad budget for one product went to Preference with $10.6 million in measured media support, 84% of which was spent on network TV, according to BAR/LNA. Preference ranks first in the $760 million hair-coloring market where total market volume grew 8% in 1987, according to industry estimates. Clairol's Nice 'N Easy and Miss Clairol ranked second and third, respectively. Clairol remains the overall leader in food stores with a combined 68.2% share, according to Diana Temple, analyst at Solomon Brothers.

Cybill Shepard is entering her third year of endorsing Preference, which will get four new colors in February: light golden topaz, light golden reddish topaz, light topaz red and jet black.

L'Oreal's six Studio Line products also continued to grow. Because of the Studio Line success, Cosmair has launched four new products under the label: Mega Spritz, a non-aerosol hard holding spritz, Soft Sculpting Lotion, an aerosol Fixing Spray and Mega Fixing Spray, a maximum-hold aerosol. There are now 10 products in the Studio Line.

Sales of L'Oreal cosmetics, particularly lipstick and nail enamel, have dropped almost $15 million in dollar volume, say industry sources. L'Oreal's own problems may be related more to packaging than price. Sources say L'Oreal is trying to go toward a "whiter" look in packaging to better accent its cosmetics colors.

Lash-Out, a new mascara product launched in August 1987, is packaged in such a manner and is performing strongly, according to both industry and company execs. The product has received the bulk of TV and print support out of L'Oreal's budget for new cosmetics products, which includes Glossique, a new gloss product, which is doing well even though no ad dollars have been spent on it.

In 1987, Cosmair integrated its retail fragrance division into L'Oreal's cosmetics division, combining the marketing staff as well.

In Cosmair's designer fragrance division, 2-year-old Drakkar Noir men's cologne increased sales 100% to $40 million in the past 12 months, industry sources say, capturing fourth place in the Goldman-Sachs department and specialty store buyer survey. Total measured media spending for this product was $4 million, three-fourths of it in spot TV, according to BAR/LNA.

Chaps, marketed under the Ralph Lauren name, held onto its 7.5% market share. It drew $2.4 million in measured ad support, mostly on network TV. Cosmair's Polo ranked first in a recent Goldman-Sachs department store survey, aided by $3.1 million in ad expenditures, mostly spot TV, notes BAR/LNA.

But Cosmair's women's fragrances have not been as strong as the men's lines. Cosmair's new women's fragrance, Cacharel's Lulu, is expected to hit strong sales of nearly $20 million in 1988, but its Vanderbilt brand is being slightly cannibalized by the spinoff called Glorious launched in 1987 and backed with $7.1 million in ad spending.

The new women's fragrance from Ralph Lauren, Notorious, will appear finally in the spring of 1989. The fragrance originally had been scheduled for an early 1988 release.

In media spending, magazines showed the largest increase—28.8% to $31 million—and basically represented a budgetal swing from network TV, which drew $28.8 million, down 22.8% from 1986.

Cosmair is a privately-held French company, with 62% of its stock owned by Nestle SA and the remainder held by L'Oreal interests.

CPC International's restructuring program begun in 1986 continued through 1987, aimed at expanding its consumer foods business, increasing the domestic portion of total revenues, realigning its organizational framework and repositioning its corn refining operations. In the process, CPC cut domestic ad spending.

CPC's newest success story is Hellmann's and Best Foods reduced-calorie mayonnaise that rolled out nationwide in January 1987 and ranking among the top five new supermarket products for the year, according to CPC's annual report.

Company officials say the low-calorie products helped CPC's total mayonnaise business gain 7% in volume and three share points. Hellmann's currently holds its highest-ever share, 50%, according to John McMillin, an analyst with Prudential Bache Securities. Following is Kraft at 24%, although Kraft commands 53% of the sandwich spread category and 92% of spoonable salad dressing. Combined with corn oil, CPC mayonnaise had $820 million in sales for 1987, up 11%.

Altogether for CPC, consumer foods sales increased 21%, contributing 82% of worldwide sales from continuing operations, up from 62% before restructuring. The domestic portion of worldwide revenues grew from 37% to 46%.

Corporate reorganization included consolidation of CPC's North American, European, Latin American and Asian food businesses into one entity: Worldwide Consumer Foods. Its creation signals an increased commitment to advertising and marketing and brings sales-leader Knorr, centered mainly in Europe, under U.S. stewardship.

CPC's worldwide corn refining business was substantially reduced through divestiture of European operations that had contributed nearly a billion dollars in sales.

Sales of baking products and pasta doubled to $530 million, and volumes increased 89%. Contributing to the gain were the recent acquisitions of the Arnold and Old London specialty baking businesses and volume growth of 4.4% in Thomas' English muffins. Thomas', the country's No. 1 English muffin, had its greatest growth in a decade, stemming mainly from a three-year geographic expansion, making the brand now available in 70% of U.S. households.

Mueller's, the largest single pasta brand in the U.S., holds a 15% share; approximately the same as last year. CPC brought to market this year its Chef Series, a new pasta main dish offering. Hershey's six brands account for 17% of the market. Borden pushed way ahead of the rest with its purchase of The Prince Co. that increased its share from 9% to 31%.

Mazola Corn Oil dropped from a 17% share of the vegetable oil market to its present 16%. Other leading brands also declined in this competitive market. Last year's No. 1, Procter & Gamble's Crisco, fell from 22% to 18.3%, and Beatrice Cos.' Hunt-Wesson Foods' Wesson oil went from 21% to 18.6%. Mazola Light Spread, a reduced-calorie margarine, was introduced in 1988.

Worldwide volumes of bread spreads were 10% lower, although sales increased 1%. The volume decrease resulted primarily from a 30%-plus rise in peanut costs that led to higher consumer prices and a negative effect on the entire peanut butter category. Skippy increased its share from 22% to 23%, however, P&G's Jif boasts a 29% share and Beatrice's Peter Pan 15%.

Knorr soups, sauces, bouillons and seasonings were the company's largest-selling product group. Worldwide sales rose 23% to approximately $930 million, with new products, broader distribution and changes in product mix all contributing. Volumes increased 7%.

Total measured advertising for CPC in 11 monitored media declined 5.2% to $44.3 million, with magazine expenditures receiving the largest percentage decrease of 38.7% to $6.9 million. Spot TV, however, increased 32.8% to $18.3 million.

The greatest jump in ad expenditures was for Mueller's Salad Bar Pasta Mixes, introduced in 1986, which catapulted from a mere $178,900 to almost $6.4 million. Still-new Hellmann's Light underwent much heavier advertising as well, up from $765,600 to $3.9 million. Spending on Hellmann's regular mayonnaise fell 14.8% to $7.1 million. The Mueller's increase was concentrated on spot TV; Hellmann's Light on network TV. CPC was one of the top 24 spenders on ABC's Winter Olympics, with a $5 million total.

CPC purchased six food companies last year and early 1988: two in the United Kingdom—Napolina (Italian foods) and Garrick Foods (flavors and seasonings); Ubena Co. in Germany (spices and herbs); Nutrial SA in France (beverage powders, desserts and cereals); Sansoned in Colombia (seasonings, spices and food colorings); and San-Co in Brazil (packaged enriched and flavored corn starch).

Additional divestitures included the Peterson/Puritan packaging business, the remainder of Penick Corp. (producer of specialty chemicals). Ajinomoto, CPC's joint venture partner in Japan, became the joint venture partner in wholly-owned subsidiaries in six Asian countries, while 50% equity positions in joint ventures in Japan and Australia were sold.

Mercedes-Benz of North America, the U.S. auto sales and distribution subsidiary of Daimler-Benz AG, fought rising prices, stiffer competition and sagging demand in its key market segment in 1987, as its car sales tumbled for the first time in eight years.

The importer faced increasing competition from the likes of BMW, Jaguar and Cadillac in the ultra-luxury segment which accounts for 80% of its sales just at a time when this segment was contracting and a strong deutschmark was driving up the price of its products.

As a result, its U.S. retail car sales declined by 9.5% in 1987 to 89,918 units.

Officials, pointing to a continued contraction in the ultra-luxury segment in 1988, anticipated a further sales falloff into the 80-85,000 unit range.

In line with declining car demand, net income also fell for Daimler-Benz of North America Holding, New York, including Mercedes-Benz of North America in Montvale, N.J., Mercedes-Benz Credit in Norwalk, Conn., Freightliner in Portland, Ore., and two company-owned retail dealerships, Mercedes-Benz Manhattan and Mercedes Hollywood.

The North American holding company alone reported net income of $41 million, down from $54.1 million in 1986. Worldwide, Daimler-Benz AG fared much better, with production of its Mercedes passenger cars climbing to 598,079 in 1987 from 594,080 the previous year. On the financial side, much of D-B's growth was exchange rate-related. Total growth in revenues of 24.5% was influenced heavily by the deutschmark's 17.3% growth against the dollar. Average annual rates of exchange used in this profile were DM1 = $0.5564 in 1987 and DM1 = $0.4605 in 1986.

Mercedes-Benz successfully completed a major task last year of converting its traditional diesel engine car buyers to the new gasoline engine models that it was forced to shuffle its lineup in order to to comply with stiff federal emissions regulations.

As part of its product revamping, it brought out the 300 SE which marked its return to standard wheelbase models in the S-Class series. This series includes its big sedans. Previously, they were all built on the SEL long wheelbase chassis.

Still, Mercedes faced stiffer competition, particularly from BMW which took a strong run at the Mercedes traditional stronghold market with a new $67,000 750i model and its $53,000 735i.

To fight off such incursions, Mercedes increased its advertising/marketing efforts, most notably with a new dealer marketing support program launched in April of last year.

Under this co-op program, the company and its dealers each contribute $100 per car for local and regional advertising/marketing support.

The program, successful enough to spawn imitation by some competitors, at this point involves mostly newspaper and radio advertising and some TV in the bigger designated marketing areas. Mercedes is now on the verge of expanding the program into direct marketing.

Typically, the dealer marketing groups make the choices and spend the money; but the company, in conjunction with its agency, McCaffrey & McCall, advises them on a course of action designed to provide consistency with its national efforts.

The new co-op effort was all incremental spending. In fact, Mercedes increased its regular national budget as well while introducing the various gasoline engine and other special models, like the 300 SE. The overall effect was a sharp 31.8% increase in the company's ad expenditures to $105 million.

Magazines, where spending jumped to $13 million from a token $1.4 million the previous year, reaped the biggest benefit of this increase, according to BAR/LNA.

However, newspapers, also scoring an extremely strong 21.7% gain, dominated all the company's other media categories with expenditures of $28.4 million, according to Media Records.

Meanwhile, Mercedes trimmed its network TV by a sharp 22.4% and hiked spot by 117.1%.

Newspaper supplements' spending was up 60.5%. Business publication outlays were off 13.2% and outdoor advertising declined precipitously to a negligible level.

Daimler-Benz, which is on a major diversification plan, named Edzard Reuter its new board chairman last year. He was a key figure in the company's successful shift into electronics and aerospace.

He replaced Werner Breitschwerdt who resigned almost two years before his contract was due to expire. Mr. Breitschwerdt, an engineer, provided key leadership during the growth as an auto/truck manufacturer, but was regarded as experienced in the consumer and industrial product markets the company has mapped out for its expansion.

Atlanta-based Delta Air Lines is flying high on a stronger route structure following its December 1986 acquisition of Western Airlines, higher fares, lower costs and disarray at Eastern Air Lines, its principal competitor.

The Western acquisition and internal growth made Delta the nation's third largest air carrier in 1987 in terms of revenue passenger miles (RPM) with a 13.4% share, compared with 17.5% for No. 1 United Airlines and 15.1% for No. 2 American Airlines, according to an analysis by PaineWebber. RPM is a standard measure of the revenue gained by carrying one paying passenger one mile.

The addition of Western accounted for much of the 30% jump in operating revenues to $6.9 billion for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1988, but Delta also cited contributing factors such as the carrier's expanded hub in Cincinnati and the addition of Atlantic and Pacific routes, including Dublin in June 1988, Taipai in the fall 1988, Seoul and Tokyo in the fall 1987. International revenues grew by 78% and accounted for 9.2% of Delta's total operating revenues in 1987.

Delta's measured spending in 1987 rose to $75.6 million, up 3.5% over 1986. Increased spending in 1987 was attributed mainly to promote new markets and programs, not for retail fare-related spending, said Judy Jordan, Delta's director of advertising and sales promotion.

"There is a greater emphasis on brand image and promotion at Delta. We're focusing on the thing that differentiates our product, which is our people," she said.

As part of this brand-oriented strategy, network TV spending jumped 274% in 1987 to $14 million, compared with combined network TV spending for both Western and Delta in 1986. A portion of the network increase in 1987 came from budgets for spot TV, which fell 24% to $12.9 million in 1987. In the spring 1988, Delta launched five new executions of its campaign: "We Love to Fly and it Shows." The campaign, launched in September 1987, replaced "Delta Gets You There With Care."

The $787 million buyout of Los Angeles-based Western gave Delta immediate presence in virtually all sections of the U.S. in which it lacked a substantial presence. Specifically, the April 1, 1987 merger of operations added 44 cities to Delta's route system, including important markets in Alaska, Hawaii, western Canada and Mexico, and gave Delta size and strength in the western and northwestern U.S., in addition to providing new hubs at Salt Lake City and Los Angeles.

The merger positioned Delta for a variety of new marketing thrusts. It enabled Delta to win status as the official carrier of Anaheim, Calif.-based Disneyland in June 1988. Delta also became the official carrier for Orlando, Fla.-based Disney World on July 1, 1987. It is believed to have paid upwards of $40 million for the right to become official carrier of Disney World, replacing Eastern Airlines, which held the contract for 15 years. Such a designation enables Delta to hold joint promotions with Disney, offer travel packages with rooms in Disney hotels and build attractions inside Disney theme parks.

Delta has been gearing up to build market share in Orlando with $7 million in terminal improvements and the addition of flights. In June 1988, Delta began service between Orlando and Frankfurt, West Germany. The carrier is promoting its Disney connection heavily in European gateway markets.

Eastern still is largest in Orlando, the world's No. 1 vacation destination used by 12.3 million passengers in 1987. Eastern had 23% market share in 1987, down from 25% in 1986. Delta was the No. 2 carrier in 1987, with 17%, about even with 1986.

Despite the outlay for Western, Delta is the strongest airline financially in the U.S., according to a June 1988 report by Salomon Brothers, New York.

Other analysts agree. "The amazing thing is that Delta essentially has no outstanding debt," says Paul Karos, airline analyst with First Boston Corp., New York. "It's unbelievable, especially when you consider it made a major acquisition just over a year ago."

With the hit movies "Three Men and a Baby" and "Good Morning, Vietnam" generating more than $100 million in sales, as well as "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" packing in summer movie-goers, Walt Disney Co. is having another record year.

Sales and net income for the company's third quarter and the nine months which ended June 30 are the highest in the company's history. Third quarter sales were $915.7 million, up 21.9% from the previous year, and income was $165 million, a 28.5% increase. Nine-month totals show sales of $2.44 billion, up 15.3%, and income of $385.6 million, up 24.6%.

The company also broke all previous records in 1987, as Disney repositioned itself to concentrate on its three core divisions—theme parks and resorts, filmed entertainment and consumer products.

It sold real estate development division, Florida-based Arvida Disney Corp., to JMB Realty Corp., Chicago, for approximately $400 million, and agreed to purchase its first TV station, KHJ-TV in Los Angeles, for $320 million from RKO General Inc. The FCC approved the sale in July and Disney expects to take over management of the station in December, says Erwin Okun, VP-corporate communications.

In October Disney switched its advertising from Young & Rubicam, New York, to Los Angeles-based Western Media International.

Disney's theme parks and resorts—Disneyland in California, Walt Disney World and Epcot Center in Florida, and Tokyo Disneyland—showed a 20% growth in revenues and a 36% growth in operating income.

Attendance increased 9% at Disney's U.S. theme parks, which matched the industry average, according to the International Association of Amusement Parks and Attractions, Alexandria, Va. Buoyed by a year-long, heavily advertised 15th anniversary celebration, Walt Disney World showed an 11% increase. Attendance rose 7% at Disneyland.

Advertising spending for the theme parks totaled $27.9 million, or 33.2%, of Disney's $83.8 million in seven-media BAR/LNA totals, an increase of 5.7% over 1986. Disney World and Epcot Center garnered $18.4 million and $9.5 million went to Disneyland.

The $2 billion Euro Disneyland a 4,800-acre park located 20 miles east of Paris, is slated for 1992 completion. This summer TV production began at the new Disney-MGM Studios at Disney World; a studio tour is scheduled to open in 1989.

Disney's filmed entertainment division showed a 71% growth in revenues and a whopping 153% increase in operating income. Disney profited from a string of box office successes, including the 50th anniversary re-issue of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," which grossed $46 million, and two Touchstone Pictures releases, "Outrageous Fortune" ($53 million), and "Stakeout" ($64 million as of November 1987). The division's strong performance also was due to higher revenues from domestic television and home video, and growth in subscribers to The Disney Channel.

Disney Productions ranked second in market share, with 14% (behind Paramount's 20%), up from a 10% third place share.

Measured advertising for films totaled $38.4 million, up 64% from 1986, with the heaviest concentration in spot TV, notes BAR/LNA. The jump in spending reflects two more new releases than in 1986, as well as heavier advertising for "Snow White"—$4 million in measured spending—than Disney usually allocates to animated re-releases. Mr. Okun says Disney plans to release 14 to 18 films this year. Disney-Buena Vista ranked second among motion picture companies in North American theatrical film rentals. Paramount led the group with 20%. Warner Bros. kept the heat on Disney with a 13% share.

Disney moved to second in the home video market. A Christmas 1987 campaign, built around "Lady and the Tramp," broke industry records, resulting in seven million unit sales, including three million of "Lady" alone. Measured ad spending for home video totaled $7 million, up 59%.

"The Golden Girls," airing on NBC, continued to be the jewel in Disney's network TV crown, garnering Emmy Awards for best comedy series and best actress in a comedy series for the second straight year. Disney's 1987 network TV offerings also included "The Disney Sunday Movie" on ABC and "The Adventures of the Gummi Bears" on CBS.

Disney's Buena Vista TV, a New York syndication subsidiary, is scoring a hit with its original programming. "DuckTales," an animated children's program, was the highest rated syndicated children's animated series as of November. Buena Vista also syndicates "Win, Lose, or Draw" and "Siskel and Ebert." In the area of existing programming, Buena Vista is distributing "Wonderful World of Disney" and two movie packages, and has announced plans to take "Live with Regis and Kathie Lee," a top talk show on WABC-TV, New York, to a national audience. Buena Vista's $50 million budget for 1988 also will go toward syndicating "The Golden Girls."

The Disney Channel achieved a 25% increase in subscribership to 3.8 million.

Revenues for Disney's third division, Consumer Products, went up 29% and operating income went up 34%. Licensing, which covers 50 countries, jumped from 1,600 licenses making 8,000 products to 3,000 licenses and 14,000 products.

In 1987, Disney took a number of steps to expand its Consumer Products activities. The company opened its first three retail stores (outside of its theme parks) in Glendale, San Francisco and Costa Mesa, all in California and plans to open at least six more this year. Disney signed a wide-ranging alliance with Chicago-based Sears, Roebuck and Co.'s Merchandise Group, including development of Sears/Disney products; and also signed a worldwide licensing agreement with Mattel, Inc.

Some 2.8 million copies of the 24-page, 200-item Walt Disney Family Gift Catalog were mailed in 1987, up 87% from the previous year. Disney plans to mail over eight million copies this year.

Dow Chemical Co. hit record sales and income in 1987 while it simplified corporate structure from four main segments to three, and launched into personal care and crop biotechnical fields.

The company reported total advertising grew 6% in 1987 to $329 million worldwide, which included many forms of sales-related charges Dow attributes to cost of marketing.

AA estimated Dow's advertising for the U.S. only at $135.7 million, a drop of 2.3% from 1986 caused largely by sizable cuts in ad backing from several Dow household brands. At the same time, measured support for Merrell Dow Pharmaceutical group climbed nearly $5 million.

Dow continues to build on its strong financial performance of 1987. In the first half of 1988, sales have grown 28% to $8.23 billion, operating income has leaped 81% to $1.94 billion and net income of $624 million is double that of the prior year.

Dow's big consumer efforts, and hence its heavy advertising, backed products in two segments of its Consumer Specialty division, the combo unit—Merrell Dow and Lakeside Pharmaceuticals—and Consumer Products.

Merrell Dow and Lakeside Pharmaceuticals combined rang up more than $1.1 billion in sales for 1987. Consumer Products (soon to be Dow Brands Inc.) rose 9.3% in sales to $597 million. It includes Ziploc bags and Saran and Handi-Wrap plastic wraps and also the Texize and Dow brands of household cleaners.

At Merrell Dow, Terfenadine, a nonsedating antihistamine sold as Seldane in the U.S., topped U.S. antihistamine sales just four weeks after its 1986 introduction. Its sales rose 60% to $240 million worldwide in 1987. Merrell Dow has high hopes that forthcoming research data will aid sales of another prescription drug, Lorelco, used in treating high cholesterol.

Big changes in ad spending were recorded in pharmaceuticals where 1987 BAR/LNA seven-media expenditures climbed 50%, to $19.3 million. The biggest chunk of this was $17.1 million for the Cincinnati-based Merrell Dow prescription products line, leaving $2.2 million for the Lakeside Pharmaceutical OTC products.

After initial heavy spending of $3.7 million in 1986 for the debut of Merrell Dow's brand new methylcellulose bulk fiber laxative Citrucel, competitor to long-established Metamucil from Procter & Gamble, expenditures in 1987 dropped nearly 30% to $2.6 million in 1987.

In the Consumer Products segment, the adaptation of Ziploc bags to commercial packaging was one of the big successes in 1987. ZipPak has given marketing leverage to a number of brands and renewed spokesman Steve Allen as a familiar household face in America.

To move its Ziploc bags firmly into the commercial packaging field, Dow in November 1986 formed a joint venture, ZIP PAK Inc., Northbrook, Ill., with package engineering specialists, the Signode Co. The resealable bags now are used by General Foods' Post Cereals, Sargento Cheese, Oscar Mayer, Louis Rich and Pilgrim's Pride meats and Saratoga potato chips. Kraft is said to be considering Zip Paks for some of its cheeses.

Among individual household brands, a major change came in support for Dow Tough Act Bathroom Cleaner, where advertising plummetted to just $507,200 in 1987 after reaching $4.2 million in measured spending the year before. HandiWrap measured support also was cut back sharply to less than 20% of its 1986 level, falling to $793,800 from $4.1 million in 1986. At the same time, Saran Wrap spending rose 9% to $4.1 million and Texize Spray'n Wash was up 53% to $3.9 million.

By now widely familiar, the print and electronic corporate advertising, "Dow Lets You Do Great Things" series was at first criticized as sometimes too syrupy. That has changed, said corporate ad manager Richard F. Dalton. "That may have been true for the first ones but now they're well received, and we're continuing them." D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles is the agency.

Much more focused is a print series in industrial coatings trade books for the Dow Resins Products Coatings Group in Plastics Group Services done by Anderson & Lembke of Stamford, Conn. Ads showed how Dow employees met the needs of their customers but failed at other endeavors. The first of the ads, for example, was headlined: "Dave Hill helped to develop seven new epoxy resins for his marine and maintenance customers. Still, he can't get elected mayor of Clute, Texas." According to Marjorie Kaplan, marketing communications manager for polyurethanes and epoxy resins, "We hadn't ever done much in advertising. We were hiding our light under a bushel. Then we built this new lab in Texas, and we needed a new ad approach."

Two acquisitions made in the latter part of 1987 give Dow Chemical access to new marketing areas. In September 1987, Lamaur Inc., St. Paul, Minn., mainly a hair-care products marketer, was purchased for $173.5 million. Lamaur spent an estimated $30 million in 1987 to advertise its shampoo, conditioner and other hair-care brands, including Textra, Perma Soft and Style. Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Minneapolis, continues as agency under Dow ownership.

Another move into a new area was the purchase in late 1987 of United Agri-Seeds Inc., a crop biotechnology company based in Champaign, Ill. Dow paid $45 million for the new subsidiary which has four seed companies in Massachusetts, one in Minnesota and one in France (owned 67% by Dow). This is now part of the third segment of the Consumer Specialty division: Agricultural Products, which recorded sales of $819 million in 1987, up 6%.

President Frank Popoff in December 1987, took on the added responsibilities of CEO, succeeding Paul F. Oreffice who is now chairman of the board. In other management advances, J. Pedro Reinhard, moved up from VP-Dow Europe and general manager of Dow Italy to corporate treasurer and Enrique Falla became CFO after a number of earlier financial positions and presidency of Dow's Latin American unit. Newly elected as a board director in January 1988 was Michael L. Dow, CEO of General Aviation Inc., Lansing, Mich. and a grandson of Dow Chemical founder, Herbert Dow.

The merger of Dr Pepper Co. and Seven-Up Co. brings together two established soft drink franchises to create the nation's third largest soft drink company.

Dallas-based Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Cos. is the new name for the company formed by the Hicks & Haas investment group. Hicks & Haas acquired each company in separate transactions in 1986.

Until the formal merger in spring 1988 in a transaction valued at $1.3 billion, Dr Pepper and Seven-Up had combined certain administrative and manufacturing functions to cut costs. The merger will lead to further economies of scale.

John R. Albers, who served as chairman of both Dr Pepper and Seven-Up, assumed the position of president-CEO of the newly-formed parent company and of each division. Former Seven-Up President James Harford resigned in May.

Sales and marketing for Dr Pepper and Seven-Up however continue to be handled separately.

Young & Rubicam, New York, is agency for Dr Pepper and Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, serves Seven-Up.

Together the two divisions, as they are now called, represent total annual sales of around $525 million.

According to John C. Maxwell, beverage analyst at Wheat First Securities, Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Cos. in 1987 held a 10.1% share of the total soft drink market for an overall third place. By comparison, Coca-Cola led with a 40% share, followed by PepsiCo with a 30.9%.

In April 1987, Dr Pepper abandoned its "Taste for Originality" ad campaign and replaced it with "Dr Pepper—Just what the doctor ordered." The new effort, which carried into 1988, is more brand focused and makes use of well-known songs featuring the word "doctor."

Buoyed by double-digit increases in ad spending, regular Dr Pepper achieved a 4% market share in 1987, an 8% increase over 1986. But Dr Pepper's noticeable success came with Diet Dr Pepper, which posted a 14% volume increase. Still, Diet Dr Pepper holds only a 0.4% share overall. The brand's reformulation in 1986 with 100% NutraSweet is expected to help boost sales.

Diet Dr Pepper is backed by separate advertising which makes use of the "personals column" format with the theme "Throw your diet a curve." Two new executions feature soap opera actress Susan Lucci and actor David Naughton, the original "Be a Pepper" dancer.

"We wanted to bring some star quality to the diet execution," explained John Clarke, Dr Pepper senior VP-marketing.

Mr. Clarke added that in 1987 marketing funds for Dr Pepper were boosted by 18%. The division has experienced three consecutive years of record sales driven by brand Dr Pepper.

Under aggressive new management after its sale by Philip Morris Cos., Seven-Up Co. has turned around declining sales. Also, under Philip Morris Cos., Seven-Up posted a $6 million loss in 1986. At the end of 1987, the company had posted a $40 million profit.

Renewed momentum came from the successful introduction of Cherry 7UP, targeted to teens. The line extension, in both regular and diet versions, achieved a 1.4% share of total soft drink volume after its first year of distribution, making it the most talked-about soft drink in 1987.

Cherry 7UP's ad budget doubled to $25 million to promote the theme "Isn't it cool in pink?"

Meanwhile, brand 7UP continued its "Feels so good comin' down" tagline with the use of rain as a refreshment symbol. Brand 7UP the long-time lemon-lime leader, slipped behind Coca-Cola's Sprite in 1987 in market share, according to Mr. Maxwell's figures. Brand 7UP held a 3.4% share compared to Sprite's 3.6% share.

Committed to maximizing the 7UP trademark among all age groups, the company in early 1988 announced the introduction of 7UP Gold, a spicy citrus flavor amber color soft drink made with caffeine.

Backed by a $15 million ad budget for its gradual rollout, 7UP Gold regular and diet are aimed at cola drinkers between 18 and 34. The company had not targeted cola consumers since the ill-fated, short-lived introduction of Like cola, which is no longer widely available.

Positioned as "The wild side of 7UP," 7UP Gold uses two zany commercials with the oldie song "Wild Thing." So far, sales are slightly below plan but the company expects success as rollout continues.

Another development in spring 1988 focused on separate advertising for Diet 7UP. Commercials for the brand, which had used the umbrella theme "Feels so good comin' down," introduced the tag "Lighten Up with Diet 7UP" to create a more distinct identity for the brand.

Diet 7UP had suffered 30 months of sales declines until March 1988, according to Russ Klein, Seven-Up senior VP-marketing, adding, "Separate advertising was needed to place Diet 7UP back in top of mind. It is still the third largest diet brand but we had been losing share."

Overall, the Dr Pepper/Seven-Up merger has linked up two well-known brands under an aggressive management team committed to gaining market share in the intensely competitive $40 billion soft drink market.

The settlement of a long-standing industrial patent battle with Dutch chemical company, Akzo NV, will open new marketing doors for E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. with its superfiber, Kevlar, which received little advertising support in 1987 out of a total Du Pont budget of $149.8 million, up 35.3%.

The two companies in May 1988 entered into a tentative agreement to suspend their 11-year legal battle over industrial patents for the manufacture of Kevlar fiber by Du Pont, and the product, Twaron, by Akzo. The agreement allows them to compete freely in nearly all world markets, though a U.S. International Trade Commission import ban excludes Twaron.

Analysts say the deal will reduce uncertainty among customers, and could result in a boom for the superfiber, which is five time stronger than steel. Du Pont estimates sales of Kevlar, which it discovered 25 years ago, at almost $300 million and forecasts a 10% annual sales growth in the next five years. Kevlar already is used in Army helmets, bulletproof vests, flak jackets, tennis rackets, skis, golf clubs and racing sails.

It has a variety of potential uses in the automotive, aerospace and defense industries. Because it is resistant to heat and friction, Kevlar may prove to be an acceptable substitute for asbestos.

Apart from its fiber and chemical, Du Pont in 1987 entered the computer-designed workstation business through its Design Technologies unit. The desktop-publishing workstations, to be known as the VASTAR Design & Imaging System, feature "open architecture" to interface with different computer systems. Du Pont's intent is to become the leader in electronic imaging by building on its reputation as a major supplier of chemicals and films to the printing industry.

Nylon, developed by Du Pont in 1938, accounted for one-tenth of company's sales and nearly one-quarter of its earnings in 1987 in its various formulations and uses. The fiber received $3.7 million in measured ad spending, up 12.7% from 1986, according to BAR/LNA. However, advertising for carpet fibers, which are largely nylon-based, reached $22.9 million, up 80% from 1986, notes BAR/LNA. This category did not exist two years ago.

An additional $5.2 million, nearly all in magazines, was spent to build name recognition for Stainmaster carpet, up from $1 million in 1986. The positive reaction to the Du Pont-certified Stainmaster campaign over the last few years has enabled the company to shift its business from lower-valued items to the high-performance brand. The campaign has spurred overall sales growth in carpet fibers for Du Pont, which is the world's leading producer and marketer of carpet fibers.

Spending on Lycra more than doubled to $10 million in 1987, according to BAR/LNA. Lycra is promoted in ads for undergarments, hosiery and bathing suits from manufacturers such as Maidenform, No Nonsense and Gortex. Spending on Antron fibers in carpeting and apparel dropped 50% to $2.2 million. General fibers drew $2.5 million—almost exclusively in magazine—down 20.5%.

Aside from fiber advertising, spending in several categories declined. These include Teflon stain repellent down 19.3% to $4.25 million; Silverstone cookware dropping 41% to $2.6 million and Remington firearms and ammunition down 28% to $473,000. However, general promotion of Du Pont accounted for $11.6 million in spending, up 108%.

During 1987, Du Pont continued to move business from its core agencies into small, regional shops. Among the new agencies are Ackerman, Hood, McQueen, Tulsa, Okla., with the $2 million fishing line products; M.E.D. Communications, Woodbridge, N.J., for diagnostic imaging products and Richardson, Myers & Donofrio for estimated $2 million finishes and fabricated products accounts.

Young & Rubicam's Detroit office, benefiting from proximity to Du Pont's new automotive research lab in Troy, Mich., picked up the automotive products, engineering polymers and industrial fibers assignments worth an estimated $18 million in media advertising, direct marketing, sales promotion and PR.

N W Ayer, New York, which has worked on Du Pont business for 32 years, retained fabricated products but lost the photosystems and chemicals work.

Eastman Kodak Co. spent much of 1987 and early 1988 trying to find the right fit in its vast imaging business before surprising analysts with the purchase for $5.2 billion in cash of Sterling Drug, presenting a new focus to the Rochester, N.Y.-based company.

Already involved in human nutrition, agricultural products and anti-cancer research, Kodak gained a strong pharmaceutical and distribution network and powerful brands in the deal with Sterling. But the Sterling buy also showed the company was preparing for the days when electronic imaging—both motion and still pictures—would supplant the traditional photographic forms, according to Eugene Glazer, analyst with Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

"And Kodak probably won't dominate that (electronic imaging)," he said, pointing out the company's withdrawal in late 1987 from 8mm video photography as one piece of evidence in that direction.

During 1987, lower manufacturing costs, mostly the result of trimming 13,000 from its payroll, and growth of 8% to 10% in the number of pictures taken (5% to 6% is normal) helped stimulate growth. Expansion abroad also contributed heavily. The declining dollar assisted foreign sales even further. Kodak's non-U.S. business accounted for 26% of sales in 1987, up from 22.4% in 1986 and 18.1% in 1985.

Advertising totals for Kodak in this profile include those of Sterling Drug. Sterling is the larger advertiser of the two. In BAR/LNA measured media, for example, Sterling had expenditures of $123.9 million, up 7.5% from 1986. Kodak's measured total was $85.2 million, up 11% in BAR/LNA seven media totals.

Earnings at Kodak remained strong for the first two quarters of 1988, aided by strong growth overseas, and "a tremendous rebound in chemicals," said Mary Meeker, analyst with Salomon Brothers. Sterling results were not included in financial totals for 1987 or first half 1988.

She said the one negative in the period has been poor imaging sales in the U.S., primarily because of a switchover to the Kodacolor Gold line. In the switchover, Kodak offered its older films in discounted multipacks. Consumers thus built up their own inventories of film. Dealers also sold off the older style films before building their inventory for the new Kodacolor line. Kodak backed its films with $30.7 million in measured spending 1987, up 10%, according to BAR/LNA.

Still, picture taking grew and Kodak's processing materials and laboratories flourished. And although photofinishing mini-labs proliferated around the country, analysts said Kodak's photofinishing operations held up because it had a dominant share of the market for providing paper and chemicals to those labs.

However, "Photofinishing News Letter," an industry newsletter, was far less sanguine, pointing out that photofinishing sales in 1987 were $60 million, down substantially from the $200 million in sales it recorded just five years earlier.

Kodak grabbed an even larger share of the photofinishing market in January when the joint venture it announced late in 1987 with Colorcraft Corp., a subsidiary of Fuqua Industries Inc., passed the antitrust review of the FTC, adding to the growing list of major photofinishers using Kodak products exclusively.

The company also decided to acknowledge its mistake with disc cameras and pull out of the market. Kodak indicated it would continue making film for them. U.S. retail sales of disc cameras sold by Kodak and others had deteriorated from about 4.8 million in 1985 to $3 million in 1986 to fewer than 2 million in 1987.

The increasing amateur photographer use of easily operated point-and-shoot 35mm cameras contributed to the decline, which has led Kodak to introduce several new 35mm lines early this year, supporting them with a big campaign launched Academy Awards night.

Kodak continued its push into the highly profitable office equipment industry when it reached an agreement with IBM to take over IBM's copier repair business, a move Mr. Glazer said eventually will lead to Kodak's taking over the entire IBM copier business. Such big-ticket items offer greater profitability," said Mr. Glazer. Kodak can do better in this area than in the highly competitive area of consumer electronics, he said.

Still hanging over Kodek's head is the upcoming settlement portion of the patent infringement suit won by Polaroid Corp. That trial will take place in Federal District Court in Boston in January. Although Ms. Meeker said estimates for the settlement are about $1 billion, she said the case is likely to go to trial rather than be settled ahead of time. "Kodak and Polaroid have different expectations of the trial outcome," she said, noting the range for damages runs between $300 million and $3 billion. The first half of the lawsuit established that Kodak had infringed on Polaroid's instant-photography camera.

Sterling got an inestimable boost early this year when the "New England Journal of Medicine" reported that aspirin taken every other day may sharply reduce the risk of a first heart attack. Sterling produces Bayer aspirin, which holds a 16.5% share in the $800 million aspirin market.

About a month after the journal report, Sterling introduced to the market the "Bayer Calendar Pak," which includes a 28-day supply of Bayer—a dosage based on the every-day recommendation to prevent second heart attacks, a claim approved in 1985 by the FDA. Bayer ads currently tout aspirin's ability to reduce the risk that a heart attack will recur.

Sterling introduced Bayer in caplet form in 1987 and in the process pushed measured spending for the brand to $27 million, up from $15.4 million in 1986. That expenditure helped drive up sales of Bayer by 16% in 1987.

Despite early speculation it would sell off Sterling's household products division, Lehn & Fink, in mid-August, Kodak said it would retain the unit, which makes Lysol disinfectant, D-Con rat poison and other well-known products that accounted for $594 million in sales last year. Analysts speculated that Kodak couldn't get the top-dollar price it had to get for the unit to cover the price it paid and higher expenses caused by 1986 tax law changes, so decided to keep it.

Lysol drew $28.1 million in measured advertising, making it the heaviest brand pushed by Sterling in the nation's media. The expenditure actually dropped 3.8%. Lysol spending has been declining the past two years. It holds a 7% to 8% share of the liquid household cleaner market behind American Cyanamid's Pine-Sol at 17% and Procter & Gamble's Mr. Clean at 10%.

Joining standby Lysol in the household products division was Thompson & Formby Inc.'s line of house-care products, all backed extensively. Formby's furniture products received $4.9 million, up 17%, and Thompson Water Seal waterproof formula drew $6.6 million in measured spending, up 4.3%.

During 1987, Sterling reported net income of $197 million, up from $171.5 million in 1986, on sales of $2.3 billion, up from $1.99 billion in the prior year. Among its divisions, pharmaceutical specialities claimed $369.1 million in sales, up 21%; proprietary products, $354.9 million, up 8%; household and other products, $682.9 million, up 15%, and Sterling International, $920.1 million, up 18%.

Sterling is banking heavily on future sales of its Primacor drug. The FDA approved in 1987 the intravenous dosage form of the drug for use as short-term treatment of congestive heart disease. An advisory committee within the FDA in December 1987 recommended its usage in oral dosage form as well. Sterling bills the drug as the the first medication for chronic use to work directly on the failing heart since digitalis was discovered more than 200 years ago.

The nation's No. 2 automaker in 1987 avoided a crippling strike by negotiating a three-year contract with the United Auto Workers, weathered the stormy days following the Oct. 19 stock market crash, and went on to earn $4.6 billion.

Those earnings were the highest profit ever posted by an automobile company. Ford outearned archrival General Motors Corp. ($3.6 billion) for the second straight year.

For the first half of 1988, Ford's financial success shows no signs of slowing. During this period, it earned $3.28 billion, up 9.9% from the same period a year ago.

During this period of high profits, Ford became tighter with its U.S. ad spending. AA estimates Ford expenditures actually declined 1.7% to $639.2 million in the U.S. in 1987. And it certainly was a year marked with high anxiety for Ford's top ad agency, J. Walter Thompson. In July 1987, Ford shifted $100 million of non-U.S. advertising from JWT. Nine European accounts went to Ogilvy & Mather, and Young & Rubicam got Ford of Canada. Its estimated $260 million in U.S. business, however, remained with JWT.

Ford insisted the moves were not the result of the earlier acquisition of JWT Group by Britain's WPP Group although the buyout was said to have caused trepidation among some advertisers.

The automaker's financial performance last year gave it the cash to make several automotive and non-automotive acquisitions. Ford purchased an 80% equity in the Hertz Corp. vehicle rental company for $1.3 billion in December 1987. The remaining 20% was bought by Hertz management. Ford has since sold a 20% interest in Hertz to Volvo North America Corp. for $100 million, and it plans to reduce its ownership to a minority position.

In the fall of 1987, Ford acquired controlling interest in two British prestige automakers, AC Cars Ltd. and Aston Martin Lagonda Ltd. Ford and AC reportedly plan to produce a sports car with a $42,000 price tag, for which the U.S. would be a likely market. Aston Martin Lagonda already sells five hand-built models, priced at $112,000 to $167,000 in the U.S.

As part of an effort to diversify its business, Ford paid $512.5 million for United States Leasing Inc., a San Francisco-based commercial leasing company.

Ford and six other U.S. corporations formed a trade group, American Trade Consortium, which could lead to the sale of Ford vehicles in the Soviet Union.

Ford's profitability is traced to cost-cutting measures and to the success of its products, especially its two newest models, Probe and Continental. In market share, Ford has risen to 20.36% of the U.S. passenger-car market, up from 18.19% in 1986—this despite a 1% drop in U.S. car sales.

Ford's share of the U.S. truck market in 1987 was 29.1%, up about 1 percentage point from 1986. The company's goal for 1988 is to capture 21% of the U.S. car market and 30% of the truck market, Vice Chairman Harold A. Poling said earlier this year.

Last year, Ford sold 2,060,834 cars overall in the U.S., a decrease of about 1% from the previous year.

Of those, the Ford auto division accounted for 1,416,636, up 1.4%. According to the seven media monitored by BAR/LNA, the company backed its Ford nameplate with $245 million in measured ad spending, down 16.5% from 1986 levels that were pumped up by pricing and warranty wars. The best-selling cars in the U.S. last year were Ford Escort and Taurus, with 329,360 and 354,971 units sold, respectively. Escort got $20.3 million in measured spending, down 32%, according to BAR/LNA, and Taurus, $39.3 million, down 20.8%.

Lincoln-Mercury division moved 629,897 units last year, down about 5.9%. Measured media spending reached $78.5 million for the division, about even with 1986 levels, according to BAR/LNA. Lincoln's venerable Town Car continued to lead the division in sales, with 126,009 sold, although the Town Car received little measured advertising—$4.7 million, about the same as in 1986. On the Mercury side, the top-selling models were Grand Marquis and Cougar, recipients of only $669,000 (down 73%) and $11.6 million (up 26%), respectively, in measured spending in 1987, according to BAR/LNA.

Sales of Merkur models, at 14,301 units, were nearly even with last year—even though a new model, the Scorpio, was added to the lineup. Scorpio got $9.5 million in 1987 in measured spending, virtually all the Merkur expenditure, compared with $11.8 million in 1986, according to BAR/LNA.

Once again, Ford rode the crest of a wave of light-duty truck popularity. It sold a total of 1,435,205 trucks, an increase of about 3.9% over 1986. For the sixth year in a row, Ford's F-series pickup was the best-selling vehicle—car or truck—in the U.S., with 550,125 units sold. Ford backed its trucks with $68.9 million in measured spending, up 3.1% from 1986, according to BAR/LNA.

Ford division's 1988 ad campaign praises such successes under the umbrella theme "Winning the world over." The long-running tagline "Have you driven a Ford . . . lately?" has been retained, but is accompanied by the "winning" theme.

The TV spots are lifestyle- and situation-oriented and show people driving Ford vehicles as voiceover describes their benefits. Print ads are more product-oriented, focusing on vehicle design, engineering and warranty.

Probe sports coupe, the division's newest product whose advertising bears the ad logo, "A performance you won't forget," was designed by Ford and engineered by Japan's Mazda Motor Corp., 25% of which Ford owns. The car is built by Mazda Motor Manufacturing (USA) Corp. in Flat Rock, Mich. By the time the car was introduced in May, Ford had enough advance orders to fill production schedules until October. Ford is hoping to woo buyers who lean toward import models, such as Toyota Celica, and who are more upscale than buyers of comparable domestic cars.

Likewise, Ford's sales projections for the Korean-built Festiva subcompact have been on target. Ford sold 26,750 Festivas during the nine months it was available in 1987, and has sold more than 41,000 in the first seven months of this year. In the first quarter 1988, the Festiva drew $5.5 million in measured spending, according to BAR/LNA.

In 1988 truck advertising, the division retains the "Built Ford tough" theme for its full-size lineup, and the "Built fun tough" theme for smaller trucks, such as Bronco and Ranger.

For its TV ads, L-M dropped pop songs like The Beatles' "Help," and picked up on a newer trend: New Age music. L-M commissioned its own music, so dealer co-op ad groups also can use it to break through the clutter of 60's music used by other auto advertisers.

That also avoids legal problems, such as the pending lawsuit by Bette Midler over a sound-alike ad. In 1985, Ford and ad agency Young & Rubicam used a sound-alike after Ms. Midler refused to record her hit "Do You Want to Dance" for a TV spot. Ms. Midler filed a $10-million lawsuit, but a U.S. district court threw out the case. Earlier sound-alike cases also had failed. This summer, however, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in California overruled that decision and remanded the case for trial.

Print ads for Merkur Scorpio and XR4Ti retain the "Advancing the art of driving" themeline. However, nowhere does the name "Merkur" appear, which has fueled speculation that Ford might drop or change the division's name.

Upcoming intros include a high-performance version of the 1989 Taurus, called SHO (Super High Output). The car's V-6 engine is designed by Yamaha. Ford also will import an inexpensive 2-plus-2 roadster, called Capri, from its Australian subsidiary early next year. Also for the 1989 model year, Ford will introduce an all-new Thunderbird/Cougar. The top-line version of the Thunderbird, called SC or Super Coupe, will be equipped with a supercharged 3.8-liter, V-6 engine and anti-lock brakes.

Looking farther ahead, Ford once again will offer V-8 power in the T-Bird and Cougar in the 1990 model year, after a one-year hiatus. In the 1991 model year, Ford's Escort model is expected to be replaced by a Mazda 323-based vehicle code-named CT-20. The venerable Mustang, which celebrates its 25th birthday next year, will remain in Ford's lineup into the early 1990s. The front-wheel-drive Probe originally was conceived as a replacement for the rear-drive Mustang, but Ford changed its plans and decided instead to pump several million dollars into upgrading the plant where Mustang is made. Ford sold nearly 173,000 Mustangs last year.

Management went through a reorganization in 1987 following the death of then chairman Henry Ford II on Sept. 29. Mr. Ford, grandson of the company's founder, died of complications arising from pneumonia. He was 70. In the realignment the following month, Ford created two new operating groups, Ford Automotive Group and Ford Financial Services Group, which, along with Diversified Products Operations, report to Harold A. Poling, who became vice chairman, a new post, from president. He remains chief operating officer.

The new Automotive Group is headed by Exec VP Philip Benton Jr. He is succeeded as exec VP-international automotive operations by Allan Gilmour, who was exec VP-chief financial officer. Mr. Gilmour's successor is Stanley Seneker, previously VP-treasurer.

There also were swaps among top personnel at Ford and Lincoln-Mercury divisions. Robert L. Rewey moved from vp and general manager of Ford division to VP sales operations. He was succeeded by Thomas J. Wagner, formerly VP and general manager at L-M. Mr. Wagner was succeeded by Ross H. Roberts, former general marketing manager of Ford division.

In January, a fourth generation of Fords was elected to the company's board of directors. Edsel B. Ford II, 39-year-old son of Henry Ford II and Lincoln-Mercury general sales manager, and his cousin, William Clay Ford Jr., 30-year-old managing director of Ford of Switzerland, show promise that one day a Ford may once again lead Ford Motor Co.

Franklin Mint is concentrating on what one company official calls a commitment to "supreme quality and design integrity" and its product line is a far cry from the diffused, cluttered cache often associated with that advertising genre.

The Mint still sells its famed Civil War chess sets, but who would have guessed a few years ago that its customers would be spending far more on fine jewelry from former Cartier designer Alfred Durante or crystal from Perrier-Jouet? This is not to mention the $10,000 Russian sable cape modeled by Carol Alt in Mint advertising or the $4,800 solid gold Dutchess of Windsor panther bracelet with ruby eyes.

The Mint's way of selling this now-upscale line of goods depends on direct response, what Mint public relations director Jack Wilkey calls "image-direct advertising. We are always conscious of direct response," he said. "We have to sell now."

One of the Mint's big ad vehicles is its own Almanac magazine, a slick publication that spotlights the Mint's wares as well as non-competing products from advertisers who can afford its hefty rate of $25,000 for a four-color page. Leading the charge are Stewart and Lynda Resnick, whose American Protection Industries, a security and luxury products company based in Los Angeles, owns the Franklin Mint. Most print ads are done in-house, with the broadcast work handled by Griffin Bacal, New York. The Franklin Mint features an 800 number, the electronic equivalent of the print coupon, in its broadcast ads.

The Mint reports it is spending $160 million worldwide on advertising, some $105 million of it in the U.S. About half of what is spent in magazines is in newspaper supplements. The advertising for such publications as Parade and USA Weekend is bought in bulk and on a long-term basis. The Mint is the largest advertiser in newspaper supplements among AA's 200 leading national advertisers.

BAR/LNA multi-media service figures for 1987 listed $54.5 million for domestic advertising, up 70.3% from the prior year. Most of that—$23.2 million—went for the porcelain collection for which Franklin Mint is well-known. Another $20 million was spent on collections or series put out by the Mint. Some $3.8 million was devoted to books and $6.4 million to jewelry, according to BAR/LNA.

Mr. Wilkey said the Mint is now targeting a younger, more upscale audience, emphasizing its endurable "desirables" rather than its collectible series. Part of this has involved using top fashion models like Ms. Alt and Jerry Hall, who recently modeled the new pyramid cuff watch.

None of the products make it into the retail stores, so Franklin Mint is a company whose entire sales and marketing depend on advertising—advertising that gets a quick, positive and direct response.

E&J Gallo Winery appears to be shifting its marketing weight back to its strong sales and distribution forces, after parting company with Hal Riney & Partners, because its total advertising declined 20% in 1987.

Spending was down for four major brands, with declines expected in 1988 for categories such as image spending. "Ernest (Gallo) has begun to doubt the value of the image campaign," said one source. In particular, measured spending dropped 45.6% to $3.1 million for Andre wines; Carlo Rossi spending declined to $231,000 from $2.4 million; spending for E&J Brandy, for which Gallo and Riney had trouble developing a new campaign, decreased to $127,200 from $6.2 million; and Gallo wines declined 22.3% to $26.2 million, according to BAR/LNA.

Once again, the cooler wars dominated the winery's ad budget, with Gallo spending $33.5 million in 1987, up 10.6%. Gallo continues to keep an eye on hot markets and never give the competition an edge. After Miller Brewing Co.'s Matilda Bay, a clear non-carbonated cooler made from Australian wine and fruit flavors, began picking up some market share, and Seagram's tropical flavor experienced some success, Gallo launched its own tropical flavor.

Overall, Gallo continued its stranglehold on the nation's wine business. Its share increased from 26% in 1986 to 30% in 1987, way ahead of nearest competitor, Vintners International at 10.9%.

Gallo's success is particularly significant when placed in perspective with the rest of the industry performance—wine consumption fell one half point last year.

Gallo, however, does not separate itself from the decline in the champagne and sparkling wines category in which industry totals show a drop of 4% in total gallons to 42.5 million consumed in 1987, breaking the 2.5% in annual growth recorded by the category for several years. Sales of Gallo's low-price Andre champagne, although the No. 1 brand, have been eroded by mid-price brands, such as Guild Wineries & Distilleries' Cook's champagne and Freixenet USA's Cordon Negro Brut. In response, Gallo has introduced Tott's champagne, and reportedly has plans for another brand positioned between Tott's and Andre.

At 122 million gallons, wine coolers represented over one-fifth of all wine sold in the U.S. last year. Cooler sales, however, are stagnant and the various brands are beginning to beat up on each other.

Ernest Gallo, chairman and legendary marketing whiz, held the ad community spotlight during the early months of 1987 in his search for a new ad agency. Dozens of agency visited the winery, located in Modesto, Calif. He quickly signed up John Crawford Creative to continue the Bartles & Jaymes campaign in time for the summer cooler season. But only six agencies remained in the running at mid-year for the overall account. They included Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver/New York, Della Femina, McNamee WCRS/LA, and Dailey & Associates/LA.

General Electric's measured advertising expenditures dropped for the second year in a row as the $40 billion company continues the restructuring begun under chairman Jack Welch.

A major element of that restructuring included the December sale to Thomson S.A. of its $3 billion consumer electronics business, largely gained from the purchase of RCA in 1986. The absence of this unit continues to affect GE revenues this year—down 4% to $17.22 billion in the first half of 1988.

GE's strong earnings performance—up 17% in 1987 and up 16% to $1.56 billion in the first six months of 1988—continues to be fueled by strong results from three of GE's 10 divisions: broadcasting, financial services and plastics.

In this report, GE is not credited with 1987 ad spending for RCA consumer products sold in the Thomson deal. Divested RCA business contributed about $26 million in measured spending in 1986.

GE's restructuring is dictated by Mr. Welch's desire to have dominant market shares in the company's respective businesses. If they are not dominant, he sells them.

The strategy has meant hectic activity in 1988, particularly on the acquisition and divestiture front. This June, GE agreed to buy Borg-Warner's plastics division for $2.3 billion. B-W is the largest producer of ABS resins, which are plastics used for computers, appliances and car interiors. GE did not market this product.

To bolster its growing financial services area, GE in March purchased Montgomery Ward's credit card operation for $1 billion, plus the assumption of $1.8 billion in debt.

Also in a hostile takeover battle against Whirlpool Corp., GE purchased in March for $507.6 million Roper Corp., a Benton Harbor, Mich. manufacturer of kitchen ranges and rider lawn mowers. GE has been in the process of upgrading its appliance business, which contributed 11.4% of the company's revenues in 1987. The business is regarded as a big cash generator, allowing GE to invest in other areas. GE spent $19.9 million on major appliances (GE and Hotpoint lines) in 1987, down 28.2% from 1986, according to BAR/LNA.

There have been a few major divestitures in 1988, but none to rival the giant spin-off of GE's consumer electronic division in December 1987. GE sold its consumer electronics business to Thomson, but in the same transaction acquired Thomson's medical equipment division, CGR, which had sales in 1987 of about $800 million.

In 1988, RCA Global Communications was sold for $160 million to MCI Communications. RCA Globcom, as the business is known, is in international telex and high speed data transmission. The NBC radio network and the NBC-owned-and-operated radio stations also have been sold. Radio had been a poor performer for some time at NBC. The o&o stations, which produced cash flow of $11 million and revenues of $51 million in 1983, had dropped to $261,000 cash flow on revenues of $47 million in 1987.

At midyear 1987, NBC sold its network operations to Westwood One Inc., Los Angeles. Then this February, it sold five o&o stations to Indianapolis-based Emmis Broadcasting for $122 million. Stations included WNBC-AM and WYNY-FM, New York; WJIB-FM, Boston; WKQX-FM, Chicago and KYUU-FM, San Francisco. Later, WKYS-FM, Washington, went to Albimar Communications Limited Partnership, Washington, for $45 million. KNBR-AM, San Francisco, NBC's only remaining radio property, is expected to be sold by year's end.

NBC purchased in late 1987 WTVJ-TV, the CBS Miami affiliate. NBC has seven o&o station.

NBC spent $28.9 million advertising itself in 1987, up 14.2% from 1986. Most NBC advertising is in magazines. During a year when the three major networks lost 9% of their viewers, NBC still turned in a strong showing. NBC had an average prime-time 16.1 rating and a 26 share, down from the year before but still strong enough for a first-place finish for the third year in a row among the three networks. NBC continued to rank third in daytime ratings and evening news ratings. In the news division Larry Grossman, news president, was ousted and replaced by newspaper editor Michael Gartner.

The major networks were stymied by a 23-week-long strike by the Writers Guild of America, which froze TV production from March to August, totally disrupting production for the fall season.

NBC was beneficiary of an extremely strong upfront, or advance, sales buying period this summer. The network took in $1.4 billion in total prime-time sales. The three-network marketplace totaled about $3.2 billion, a record.

NBC also announced the formation of a new cable television unit, NBC Cable, to be headed by Tom Rogers. The first project from NBC Cable will be "CNBC," or Consumer News and Business Channel. The cable network channel is slated to premiere early next year.

In sports, NBC lost the Rose Bowl to ABC. But the big event was the Olympics. NBC had closed roughly $550 million in gross sales by late summer. Unlike ABC's Winter games, NBC expects big profits from the telecast of the Seoul games.

The ultimate paean to the RCA name—the RCA Building in New York—was renamed the "GE Building" this year, capping a long and controversial search for new NBC headquarters. NBC had considered moving to Secaucus, N.J., but remained in New York after securing substantial city real estate tax abatements.

General Mills, the nation's No. 2 marketer of ready-to-eat cereal, increased its ad spending only nominally in 1987 as its pound and dollar shares of the $5.3 billion cereal market dipped five-tenths of 1% to 20.7% and 23.6%, respectively.

In May 1988, the company sold its last specialty retail units—Talbots and Eddie Bauer—for a total of $585 million, to focus on its food and restaurant business. Fiscal 1988 revenues for continuing operations rose 10.2% to $5.18 billion and earnings rose a healthy 27.4% to $265.4 million.

Ten-media measured spending in calendar 1987 totaled $316.5 million, basically even with 1986 levels. Adding estimated unmeasured spending of $256 million, which includes all sales promotion and direct marketing, AA projects total 1987 spending of $572.2 million, up slightly from $550.4 million in 1986.

General Mills reports "media advertising" spending for fiscal 1988, ending May 28, of $345.9 million, up a modest 4.8% from fiscal 1987. General Mills also reported spending $100 million more in advertising and promotion than in fiscal 1987. A company spokesman said the increase was a mix of media and sales promotion, mostly for cereal products.

Spending for network and spot TV rose 5.2% in 1987 to $270.8 million, compared to rival Kellogg Co.'s 40% increase in network and spot TV spending to $301 million, according to BAR/LNA.

Timothy Ramey, a food industry analyst for County Securities, New York, said General Mills lost ground to Kellogg, the nation's No. 1 cereal marketer. Mr. Ramey noted General Mills increased its cereal pound volume by 1.2% for the year ending May 1, compared to Kellogg's volume increase of 4.9%.

According to statistics from Wheat First Securities, Richmond, Va., General Mills placed two cereals among the top 10 selling brands in pound and dollar volume—No. 3 Cheerios with 4.6% and 4.9% of market share, respectively, and No. 9 Honey Nut Cheerios, with 2.9% and 3.2% of the market. Cheerios received the most measured spending of any General Mills cereal—$31.4 million in 1987, down from $32.8 million in 1986. Both Honey Nut and regular Cheerios basically split the measured total.

Wheat First s figures, for calendar 1987, showed a widening gap in pound and dollar share between General Mills and Kellogg. Kellogg holds market shares of 42.5% in pounds and 42% in dollars. It markets five of 1987's top 10 cereals. General Mills claims 20.7% and 23.6%.

Cash rich from the sale of Talbots to Japanese retailer JUSCO Co. Ltd. for $325 million and Eddie Bauer to Spiegel Inc. for $260 million, General Mills has budgeted $1.2 billion for capital projects over the next three years. Of that total, $550 million is earmarked for a new cereal plant in Covington, Ga., and expansion of Red Lobster in the U.S. and Canada; $150 million for flour and baking mix businesses and $500 million for "major growth businesses," including the Olive Garden Italian restaurant chain, Yoplait yogurt and Gorton frozen fish products.

Sales of consumer foods, General Mills' largest unit, grew 9% in fiscal 1988 to $3.75 billion, led by Big G cereals and successful new products, including Raisin Nut Bran and Total Oatmeal. Designed to break Quaker Oats' stranglehold on the $500 hot cereal segment, Total Oatmeal commands a 12% dollar share of the instant oatmeal market after its summer 1987 introduction. Total got $4.3 million in measured spending in its first year on the market, compared with Quaker's $11.1 million expenditure for Quaker Instant Oatmeal.

Overall, Big G introduced several ready-to-eat cereals nationally in 1987. Clusters is General Mills offering in the growing adult breakfast cereals. "General Mills is going right after that same niche where Kellogg is," said Mr. Ramey, noting Kellogg's 1987 introduction of Mueslix, a European-style mixture of grains, fruits and nuts and other cereals catering to health-conscious adults. General Mills spent $4.8 million in measured spending on Clusters while Kellogg was backing Mueslix with $7.1 million. Ice Cream Cone cereal received $9.8 million in measured spending in its introductory year, according to BAR/LNA.

Among other General Mills adult cereal offerings, Raisin Nut Bran, drew $8.2 million, about the same as in 1986; Fiber One pulled $4.8 million, down from $5.1 million in 1986; Total received $14.2 million, up 3.6% from 1986; and for its first year on the market, Oatmeal Raisin Crisp cereal received $7 million.

General Mills held a dominant 75% share of the $140 million add-meat dinner segment with its line of Betty Crocker Helper products; an 80% share in the $115 million baking mix segment with Bisquick; a 42% share of the $190 million family flour market with Gold Medal flour, and a 26% share of the $960 million retail frozen fish segment with Gorton's. Gorton's drew $7.9 million in measured spending in 1987, up from $3.9 million in 1986.

The Betty Crocker line drew $46.3 million in 1987, about the same as 1986, according to BAR/LNA. Getting the biggest year-to-year boost were the Betty Crocker Suddenly Salad Mixes, which received only $346,700 in introductory 1986 but $9.1 million in 1987. Betty Crocker Hamburger Helper Dinners continued to receive heavy measured advertising with $8.3 million in 1987, up 19% from the prior year.

General Mills held solid No. 2 market positions in the $1.1 billion yogurt market with Yoplait brand yogurt (17%), up 1% from 1986 and the $362 million microwave popcorn market with Pop Secret (24%). Pop Secret drew $7.8 million in measured advertising, down 24%. Yoplait received $20.3 million, up from $12.5 million in 1986. The major shift in Yoplait was with its soft frozen dessert, a product that drew $4.7 million in 1987 but little in 1986.

In fiscal 1988, General Mills introduced more than 30 Betty Crocker products including a line of MicroRave cake mixes, which the company claims has taken the lead over Pillsbury in market share. In early 1988, General Mills entered the $400 million single-serving, fruit-drink market with Squeezit, a four-flavor line of fruit drinks in squeezable plastic bottles available in West Coast markets.

Restaurant sales grew to a record $1.43 billion in fiscal 1988, paced by the rapidly-expanding Red Lobster chain of seafood restaurants and rollout of the Olive Garden chain. Red Lobster is heavily advertised. In 1987, it drew $47.5 million in measured spending, mostly network and spot TV, a substantial increase over $36.8 million spent on the chain in 1986.

Restaurant profits fell 4% after disappointing performances by Leeann Chin's Chinese and York restaurants. General Mills sold Leeann Chin's to its former owners in early 1988. The future of York's, a chain of 100 self-service restaurants, is being "reassessed," according to a company spokesman.

Red Lobster plans to open 42 new units in East Coast markets and in revamped Seafood Broiler restaurants in California by mid-1989. By that time, Red Lobster International plans to add 10 restaurants in Canada and 15 in Tokyo. The Olive Garden added 40 restaurants during fiscal 1988 and is in 37 markets in 14 states. Fifty new Olive Gardens are slated for fiscal 1989 in established and new markets, including Minneapolis.

General Mills' temporarily suspended in mid-September 1988 its home-delivery concept under test in Minneapolis, called The Order Inn. Management realignment was given as the reason for the suspension, which came a year after General Mills began the service. The service, covering southwest Minneapolis and nearby suburbs, was backed with monthly direct-mailed menus picturing the Inn's refrigerated, microwaveable entrees, sandwiches and other dishes. This July, a :30 TV spot via Grey, New York, was aired.

After the Talbots sale, General Mills no longer works with Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, Boston. And last November, the company shifted the assignment for Fruit Wrinkles, Roll-Ups and Swirl Bars to Saatchi & Saatchi/DFS Compton, New York, from DDB Needham, Chicago, effective March 1. Measured spending for the line of fruit snacks fell 13% to $17.6 million in 1987 amid heavy competition.

Also in 1987, David Waters, president of General Mills' specialty retailing group, left the company before the sale of Talbots and Eddie Bauer.

General Motors Corp. took its lumps in 1987, as market share dropped significantly and earnings trailed archrival Ford Motor Co. for the second straight year.

The ongoing problems are forcing GM to reassess both its goals and its methods. On the marketing side, the big story is the effort to develop distinct images for the five car divisions, a process that could take several more painstaking years. years.

GM's Saturn Corp. subsidiary made big news in May 1988 when it picked Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco, as its first agency on an account likely to total $130 million. The selection of Riney, known best for its creative work, demonstrated Saturn's determination to break new ground even before its first model debuts in mid-1990.

GM's 1987 U.S. car sales dropped nearly a million units to 3,728,313, a 20.6% decline from the previous year, and its car market share fell from 41% in 1986 to 36.5% in 1987. GM's share of the combined U.S. car-and-light-truck market fell from 39% to 35%. Worldwide vehicle sales of 7,766,000 were down 9% from the previous year.

The decline in U.S. sales was virtually across the board. Chevrolet car sales were off 12.7%, Pontiac fell 17.4%, Oldsmobile dropped 32.6%, Buick plummeted 27.6% and Cadillac fell 14.1%. On the light-truck side, Chevrolet dropped 4.5%, while GMC posted the only gain, going up 2.2%.

GM implemented a number of accounting changes that helped create the improved bottom line in 1987. In addition, GM's non-automotive units provided much of the earnings punch. General Motors Acceptance Corp. contributed $1.5 billion in profit, while Electronic Data Systems added $323 million and GM Hughes Electronics Corp. kicked in $670 million. Those units provided 70% of GM's net earnings in 1987.

To shore up profitability in its core automotive business, GM has signaled it plans to bring inventories under control even if that means accepting market share at roughly its current level.

At a presentation to securities analysts in April 1988, GM officials said they planned to operate plants at 100% capacity by 1992. That would put a cap on market share, since the company wouldn't have the plant capacity to increase production during an upswing.

But in recent years GM has run its plants higher than consumer demand, creating a glut of vehicles on dealer lots and leading to broad consumer lures that have cut into profits. One report estimated GM would spend $3.3 billion on incentives to stimulate sales in 1988, about $600 million more than last year.

Profits did rise in the first half of 1988, to $2.6 billion on sales of $56.34 billion, compared with adjusted 1987 first-half earnings of $2.29 billion on sales of $52.8 billion. Analysts attributed the rise more to the surprisingly robust market than to better profit margins. Domestic makers also did particularly well in early 1988, because the declining dollar drove up prices for imported cars. Worldwide vehicle factory sales during this same half-year period were 4,234,000, up 2% from the same period the year before. In the U.S., GM's total vehicle sales grew 10.3% to 2,914,067 in the first half, and its share of the combined car-and-light-truck market grew from 34.9% to 35.4%.

GM's biggest marketing problem has been its look-alike models, the result of several divisions selling cars with similar styling built on the same platforms. Thus, the mandate to establish distinct marketing brands involves not only advertising changes, but also closer internal ties between marketing and product development teams.

GM's big increase in ad spending in 1987 is attributable to its attempt to stop its market share slide and to establish divisional identities. Spot TV was the biggest single beneficiary, with GM increasing its spending in that medium 110% as divisions became more active in targeting different models for different geographic regions.

Perhaps the most distinct of the GM divisions is Pontiac, which lived up to its "performance" tag in 1988 when its mid-size Grand Prix coupe took Motor Trend's "Domestic Car of the Year" award. Performance plays big in its advertising.

Chevrolet's brand mission is to deliver more-than-expected, up-level features for entry-level buyers. GM's largest division has been given the assignment of wooing more women, more young people and more first-time car buyers.

For the 1988 model year, Chevy continued its award-winning "Heartbeat of America" campaign from the year before for both cars and trucks. The division tried to pump more meaning into "Heartbeat" with more emphasis on product information.

A heated Chevrolet-Ford ad battle over pickup trucks led to a series of look-alike TV spots during the 1988 model year. First, Chevy ads showed a Ford truck, sitting on its tailgate alongside its Chevy competitor, toppling over when the Chevy advantages were listed. A retort from Ford showed the Chevy sinking into a hole in the ground, "proving" that "Ford's standing taller than ever." Others followed as Chevy soared from the hole like a rocket.

Buick's mission is to re-establish itself as the "premium American motorcar," with the emphasis on evoking the sort of contemporary classic image that Brooks Brothers has in clothing.

Buick rolled out two new products, with heavy ad backing, for the 1988 model year. First was the mid-size Regal coupe, which was backed by about $25 million in ad spending in the last quarter of 1987, when it was introduced. The two-seater Reatta was introduced in early 1988 with an estimated $10 million campaign, a significant budget for a low-volume car.

Oldsmobile is attempting to position itself as the inheritor of a reputation for technological innovation. The division kept the theme line, "Oldsmobile quality. Feel it," but at the start of the 1988 model year added the secondary theme, "From the engineers at Oldsmobile," in product-oriented ads that departed from the lifestyle orientation of previous years.

The first new product to fit the new Olds positioning was the Cutlass Supreme, and Olds backed the futuristically-styled, mid-size coupe with an estimated $50 million ad sendoff, beginning in February 1988. The campaign stressed the expressive styling and leading-edge engineering.

Cadillac has been given the mission of re-establishing its mark as "an American standard for the world." For the 1988 model year, TV spots showed confident, middle-aged people pursuing activities such as aerobics, polo, sailing and tennis to battle a perception that Cadillac made cars for sedate, older persons.

Cadillac used a comparative approach to tout its new 4.5-liter, V-8 engine, after United States Auto Club tests showed Cadillac models with the engine outperformed U.S. and European luxury car competitors.

GMC Truck continued its ad theme line, "It's not just a truck any more," in an effort to differentiate its trucks from Chevrolet's models by appealing to a more upscale audience.

Two GM divisions tried co-promotions with other major advertisers in bids to attract new prospects to dealerships.

In the spring of 1987, Chevrolet used a promotion with Procter & Gamble Co. to introduce its Corsica and Beretta compact cars and its new full-size pickup truck, a merchandising program touted as the biggest cross-promotional event ever. Chevrolet gave away 750 vehicles worth $9 million in the game, in which paper keys were placed inside 200 million boxes of seven P&G products. The keys had to be taken to a dealership to determine if they were winners.

Oldsmobile gave away 600 new Cutlass Supreme coupes as part of McDonald's Corp. Monopoly game in the second quarter of 1988. Potential winners also had to visit a dealership. Dealers gave mixed reviews to both promotions, saying that the vast majority of people drawn to showrooms were not legitimate buying prospects.

On the personnel front, Robert Stempel succeeded retiring F. James McDonald as president-COO in September 1987. Mr. Stempel, whose background is in engineering, received generally high marks for his activist style in both controlling costs and developing new products.

In other major moves, John Middlebrook moved from VP-sales, service and marketing for Saturn Corp. to become GM's VP in charge of marketing and product planning in January 1988. Shirley Young, formerly president of Grey Advertising's Grey Strategic Marketing, took on the new post of VP-consumer market development at GM on June 1, 1988.

Gillette's most talked-about ad this past year was not anything it ran for a product, but an ad it ran touting management's side in a hotly-contested proxy battle.

In early July, a court ruled that Gillette ran a false and misleading ad during the proxy takeover fight with the Coniston Group, a New York investment group. Shareholders this spring voted 52% of Gillette shares to back management against the Coniston bid.

The Coniston Group's effort was the latest is a seemingly endless string of takeover attempts of Gillette over the past two years. In each case, Gillette management successfully fought off the takeover effort, but it has paid a high price in terms of money and effort. The takeover battles, analysts fear, have distracted Gillette from building its product lines by diverting human and financial resources.

Gillette and Coniston settled their dispute out of court in a surprise move early in August. Gillette agreed to pay Coniston $720 million to buy back its stock. In 1986, Gillette cut a similar deal with Ronald Perelman, paying $549 million to buy back his shares. At that time, Gillette management was accused of succumbing to greenmail. This time the $45 per share price which Coniston is receiving is being made available to all shareholders for a limited time.

"Day-to-day operations haven't been affected, nor has the takeover thing affected the advertising," insists Michael Nadelberg, VP/advertising services. He concedes, however, that there have been some strategic changes in the company's advertising and marketing strategy as a result of a reorganization of Gillette which was spurred by the Perelman takeover attempt.

The reorganization, announced in December 1986 and implemented throughout 1987, resulted in the layoff of several thousand employees and a drastic cost-cutting effort.

Advertising budgets have absorbed their share of the cost cutting. Total advertising spending dropped 21% in 1987 to $103.8 million. Measured media spending, as tracked by BAR/LNA, dropped 20.7% to $55.8 million. This is a U.S. figure only.

According to Gillette, its worldwide spending on advertising, including sampling, was $284 million. It also spent $236 million worldwide on sales promotion in 1987, for a total of $520 million. This compares to $263 million in advertising and $211 million in sales promotion in 1986, for a total increase in worldwide advertising and sales expenditures of $46 million. The combined 1987 figure represents 16.4% of sales, a drop of 0.4% from 1986.

Mr. Nadelberg calls the drop in U.S. media advertising "a short-term" phenomenon that can be attributed to a falloff in brand performance, on which spending is based. He expects media spending to increase in 1988.

Network TV absorbed the [illegible]t drop, 24% to $29.9 million in 19[illegible]tinuing a steady downward trend. M[illegible]zines, which enjoyed a boost in 1986, [illegible]l back 21% to $10.6 million. Cable T[illegible], heavily used by Gillette, increased 2.2% to $7.9 million. Mr. Nadelberg warns about reading too much into yearly shifts in spending. "Most media have been affected by the reduction in spending," he said. For a long-term trend, he said, "there is a basic shift to cable" because the company has recognized the value of CATV in reaching its audience.

As part of the reorganization, Gillette established two operating units, Gillette North Atlantic and Gillette International/Diversified Operations, to replace its three existing units. Gillette North Atlantic includes the company's blade and razor, personal care and stationery products businesses in Europe and North America. Gillette International/Diversified Operations is responsible for the same product lines outside Europe and North America and for Braun, Oral-B and Jarfa.

Gillette's North Atlantic group will focus on the company's traditional product development and marketing in what the company regards as mature, slow growth markets. The International/Diversified group will concentrate on expanding the market for Gillette's traditional products into less-developed geographic areas and capitalizing on the growth potential of Gillette's newer, non-traditional business lines.

In line with the reorganization, Gillette sold the S.T. Dupont group which included luxury writing instruments, and the Misco mail-order computer supplies operation. The company is not abandoning the writing instrument business, though, because it picked up Waterman S.A., a French writing instrument company. The company's Paper Mate division has been bolstered by the performance of two new products, the Flexgrip stick pen and the Metal Roller pen.

Gillette also acquired UNISA, a Chilean manufacturer and marketer of cosmetics and skincare products. In early 1988, the company purchased Antica Erboristeria, an Italian toiletries line.

New personal-care products include Right Guard Sport and Dry Idea for Men, two aerosol and stick deodorant/antiperspirants, and Daisy Plus, a disposable razor for women. The company continues to expand the Plus line of shaving products, which feature a lubricating strip above the blade. The Good News disposable razor is the latest product to add the feature.

The company went through a major agency realignment in 1986 with N W Ayer and BBDO Worldwide coming up the big winners. McCann-Erickson, Chiat Day and Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos also have pieces of the Gillette account. Since the agency realignment, Griffin Bacal, New York, picked up Oral-B Muppets Toothpaste and McCann-Erickson picked up the Waterman account and some additional overseas toiletries assignments. No agency reviews or further account realignment currently are planned, said Mr. Nadelberg.

HHCC, which handles some Paper Mate products and Liquid Paper, lost the Good News new product toiletries line, which was canned following poor results after two years of tests on the West Coast.

Gillette ended its relationship with Major League Baseball two years ago and continues to sit out most of the baseball season, but the company will be involved in the playoffs and World Series. Gillette also has turned to professional football and professional and collegiate basketball, including the NCAA Final Four and the NBA championships.

Analysts agree that the wave of takeover attempts probably have subsided and the company can concentrate on its product lines again. Certainly middle and top managers are relieved and no longer are qualifying remarks by adding "if I'm here next year."

Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.'s ad expenditures decreased in 1987 as part of a corporate-wide restructuring program, a move precipitated by a 1986 hostile takeover attempt by Sir James Goldsmith. Fighting off that attempt cost Goodyear more than $620 million.

The animus resulting from its own takeover battle led Goodyear to threaten the removal of its $25 million domestic tire account from J. Walter Thompson if the British-based WPP Group succeeded in its unfriendly takeover of JWT Group, parent of the agency. When WPP succeeded early this year, the bulk of the account was moved to Young & Rubicam.

Goodyear kept only its high-performance tire account with J. Walter Thompson, Detroit. In April, JWT was dealt a further blow when Toronto-based Goodyear Canada shifted its $10 million tire account from JWT to Foster Advertising.

Despite the account switch, Goodyear retained its international "Goodyear, Take Me Home" theme, citing its beneficial impact on passenger car tire sales. At year's end, Goodyear controlled 33% of the domestic tire market.

As part of the restructuring, Goodyear sold its motor wheel division, its aerospace unit and its Arizona resort properties in late 1986 and early 1987, for a combined total of $984 million.

By the end of 1987, Goodyear had further divested Celeron energy subsidiary, selling 6.5% of Celeron's oil and gas reserves to IP Petroleum Co., a subsidiary of International Paper Co., for $70 million, and the remainder of the reserves, as well as all of Celeron's stock, to Exxon for $615 million. The sale of Celeron came hard on the heels of the energy company's completion of a $1 billion California-to-Texas crude oil pipeline.

While selling off those holdings, Goodyear stepped up efforts to increase its share of the auto service market (projected to top $80 billion this year). By offering computer-enhanced services in all of its company-owned locations throughout the U.S. and Canada, as well as at nearly 1,000 dealerships, Goodyear intended to improve both the quality of service and the quantity of repeat business.

With increased emphasis on auto service, Goodyear probably will increase ad expenditures for its service centers this year. Due to cost containment measures, last year's figures dropped sharply, down from $9.5 million in 1986 to $4.3 million. To promote its Certified Auto Service program, Goodyear and Akron-based Malone Advertising developed a new print, broadcast and direct-marketing campaign featuring the work of The New Yorker cartoonist George Booth.

Overall Goodyear's spending in ten measured media declined from $50 million in 1986 to $38 million, mostly from belt-tightening. The only media in which spending increased appreciably in 1987 was spot TV, up 80% to $14.8 million. The biggest decline was in magazines which plummeted from nearly $11 million in 1986 to $3.8 million in 1987.

However, reduced advertising didn't hurt Goodyear's bottom line. According to Dun & Bradstreet reports on the tire industry, domestic sales rose 8.3% in 1987, while foreign sales rose 4.1%. Those industry-wide increases were reflected in Goodyear's end-of-the-year figures: In total, the company's tire sales increased 9.2%, topping $9.9 billion.

Earlier this year company officials announced plans to build new tire plants in Ontario and South Korea with an eye towards improving radial tire production ca[illegible]. Such moves are in keeping with [illegible]ear chairman Robert E. Mercer's [illegible] that, to compete effectively in the tire [illegible]try, a company has to be a global player. Forced to revamp its diversification plans, Goodyear is now looking to flex its corporate muscles in areas where it has long been a force to reckon with.

Grand Metropolitan continues to hone its portfolio of U.S. holdings, while making strategic acquisitions like the $1.3 billion acquisition in 1987 of Heublein and Almaden from RJR Nabisco, and two smaller ones relating to its spirits and pet foods businesses.

At the same time, Grand Met sold its lagging child care, home healthcare and fitness products divisions. Then this year, it announced the sale of its soft drink bottling businesses and proposed the sale of the U.S. based Inter-Continental Hotels.

The U.S. operations of the London conglomerate now include wine and spirits businesses, pet foods and retail eyecare. In fiscal year 1987, ended September 30, 1987, these businesses accounted for $2.7 billion in worldwide sales, or 31.1%, up from 30.5% in 1986. Net income generated from U.S. operations of $292 million, contributed 32.4% of the worldwide total, up from 30% in fiscal 1986.

Grand Metropolitan Inc., Montvale, N.J., includes Alpo Petfoods and Pearle Health Services. Dollar profits of these continuing businesses increased by 23% with Pearle showing a 40% profit growth. Overall profit of the division climbed 15.3% to $107 million, including figures from businesses which have been sold.

International Distillers and Vintners, the international wine and spirits operation of Grand Metropolitan, with offices in Fort Lee, N.J., includes the operations of Paddington Corp., Carillon Importers, Heublein, Almaden Wines and Traditional Beer Importing Co. in the U.S. Worldwide, IDV had sales of close to $2.8 billion. Of that total, Heublein Inc. contributed $845 million in sales and $94 million in profit for the six months it was part of IDV.

The acquisition of Heublein and Almaden adds considerable force to IDV's U.S. marketing effort. The move brings such top-selling brands as Smirnoff, Popov and Finlandia vodka, Black Velvet whiskey and Jose Cuervo tequila. In late 1987, IDV also acquired 16.8% equity interest in Martell. It continues in a battle with Seagram's for the distribution and marketing rights to the cognac.

IDV now markets six of the 33 liquor brands with more than one million cases in U.S. sales, according to market analyst John C. Maxwell Jr. of Wheat First Securities, Richmond, Va.

Two brands, Absolut vodka and Jose Cuervo tequila, showed the largest percentages of growth of the top brands tracked by Mr. Maxwell. What's more, IDV now has a strong position in the few segments of the liquor market which have shown growth—vodka and brandy imports. Its leader is Smirnoff, the No. 2 liquor in the country, with 4.05 million case depletion, up 3.2%. Absolut vodka increased depletions to 1.4 million cases, up 27.3%; Finlandia showed growth of 7.1%. Heublein's Jose Cuervo tequila, possibly spurred on by the popularity of Mexican food, had a 14.9% increase to 1.59 million cases.

Other top-selling IDV brands include Heublein's Black Velvet with 2.075 million cases depleted, up 3% and Paddington's J&B Rare, up 5% to 1.995 million cases.

Heublein's wine business is the fourth largest in the U.S. by sales volume with 28.4 million gallons for a 4.9% market share. It trails E&J Gallo, Vintners International and Canandaigua in that order. Heublein showed a dramatic 39.9% increase over 1986 numbers, and moved up from sixth place. Almaden is ranked sixth with 22.4 million gallons in consumption, and a 3.9% market share. This represents a 7.8% decrease from 1986 levels of 24.3 million gallons and a 4.2% market share.

The biggest spender of the IDV brands was Heublein's Smirnoff vodka with $8.2 million in measured spending as charted by BAR/LNA. This is 16.4% above RJR's spending in 1986. Paddington's J&B scotch was second with $7.6 million, up 44%; following by Carillon's Absolut vodka with $6 million, up 30.7% and Grand Marnier up 36% to $5.1 million.

Tequila was promoted with $4.1 million in spending for Cuervo Especial, up 80%, and $4.2 million for Jose Cuervo, up 14%. Spending declined 16.6% on Baileys Irish Cream to $4.1 million.

Wine spending was topped by Almaden with $1.7 million in measured media; followed by Lancers with $1.2 million and Inglenook with $633,000.

In 1987, Paddington spread its advertising accounts among a stable of small shops. The big winner was Berenter, Greenhouse & Webster, which was awarded Baileys Original Irish Cream and Malibu rum liqueur. Rumple Minz peppermint schnapps went to Geer, Dubois.

Alpo, the share leader in canned dog food, showed strong increases in 1986, according to figures from Mr. Maxwell. Alpo canned dog food outdistanced the competition with $245 million in sales, up 6.5%, ahead of second place Kal Kan with $140 million. Alpo canned puppy food was 14th in sales with $8.2 million followed by the newly-acquired Blue Mountain with $8 million. Alpo's dry dog food is 4th in sales with $102 million, far behind leader Ralston-Purina's Dog Chow at $250 million and Puppy Chow and Gaines' Gravy Train.

The 1987 measured ad spending for all Alpo brands dropped by 30.6% to a total of $16.8 million. Spending increased slightly for Alpo canned food up 3% to $6.7 million, while spending for canned & dry puppy food dropped 40% to $3.1 million.

To help boost Alpo's national support, Grand Metropolitan purchased Jim Dandy, a popular brand of dog food in the Southeastern U.S., for $25 million from Savannah Foods & Industries.

Spending in support of Pearle Vision Centers rose 9% to $18 million. Further ad hikes were expected for 1988, bringing the division's media spending to $25 million. Pearle holds 4.4% of the $11.2 billion optical market, and 16% share of the chain-store category.

In July 1988, Grand Metropolitan announced that it had sold its soft drink bottling businesses, Pepsi-Cola San Joaquin Bottling Co. of Fresno, Calif. and Atlantic Soft Drink Co., Columbia, S.C. because it did not own the brand and could not direct its place in the market. One month later, it said that negotiations were under way to sell its 100-hotel Inter-Continental Hotels Corp. which has increased dramatically in value in the last few years, according to Grand Metropolitan. The chain was recently valued at $1.96 billion. Offers from several buyers were being considered as the company said it wanted to use proceeds from the sale to pursue core businesses of drinks, food and retailing.

Hallmark Cards continues to broaden its traditional product lines to include more gifts, and to build its interests in Spanish-language television.

The privately-held company is the world's largest greeting card maker, with a market share of more than 40% of the $3.6 billion industry through its Hallmark and Ambassador card lines. American Greetings, Cleveland, follows with around 30%, and Gibson Greetings, Cincinnati, has about 10%.

Hallmark now reaches 83% of all U.S. Hispanic households through its 1988 acquisition of 10 Hispanic TV stations from Univision, the largest domestic Spanish-language TV network.

Ranked 38th on the Fortune 500 list of privately-held companies, Hallmark continues to extend its product lines and distribution channels, including its growing relationship with Sanrio, Japan's leading producer of greeting cards and gift wrap.

Hallmark serves more than 21,000 retail outlets in the U.S., including department and specialty stores, with 150 of its own outlets.

Hallmark increased its advertising spending in 1987, boosting its budget 33%. The company spent $45.5 million in measured advertising, more than $25 million of that backing its cards, according to BAR/LNA.

Hallmark's fight with competitor Blue Mountain Arts, Boulder, Colo., has picked up steam. Blue Mountain, maker of the Susan Polis Schultz line of poetic greeting cards, in 1986 gained an injunction against Hallmark, preventing it from copying its cards. Hallmark appealed, but the injunction was upheld in May 1988 by the U.S. Court of Appeals. In August, Hallmark petitioned the U.S. Supreme Court to review the injunction.

In order to enhance sales of its Ambassador greeting cards line, which is sold mainly through grocery store and mass merchandising chains, Hallmark in 1988 rolled out a new display system called Colorscan, which groups cards according to color codes.

Hallmark sold its jewelry subsidiary, Trifari, Krussman & Fishel, based in East Providence, R.I., to Crystal Brands Inc., of Southport, Conn., but it extended several other lines.

Hallmark widened its line of cards called "The Best Years," to national distribution in 1988, targeting people over 55 years old.

It also expanded its line of school supplies and accessories called Color Gear, aimed at teenagers and bought a 6.2% stake in Stuart Hall Co., Kansas City, Mo., in the same category.

In 1988, Hallmark introduced the first miniature versions of its popular line of Keepsake Collectors Christmas tree ornaments, with 30 designs.

Hasbro Inc. kept squeezing out profits in 1987 from its long list of standby toys and a few new winners during a major drought in the toy industry that has been void of any megahits.

Across the board, toy sales in the $13 billion industry remained flat for the second year in a row. And several companies that were riding high during the toy boom of the early 1980s—including West Hartford, Conn.-based Coleco and Worlds of Wonder, Fremont, Calif.—are fighting off bankruptcy.

Hasbro has survived the sluggish period by avoiding the risky promotional and electronic toys that crippled many of its competitors, and relying largely on proven basics and board games.

Hasbro's earnings suffered early in 1987, and as a result, the company underwent some minor restructuring in which a few top executives received additional assignments within the company. Some factories that were gained in earlier acquisitions also were shut down.

In early 1988 Hasbro Toys consolidated its advertising at Griffin Bacal, New York, ending a two-year relationship with DDB Needham, Chicago, which had handled $20 million of billings for Hasbro and Milton Bradley. Hasbro's measured spending has not changed much in the past two years, and the company expects the same for 1988.

The company, which consists of the Hasbro Toys and Playskool Inc. divisions, both based in Pawtucket, R.I., and the Springfield, Mass.-based Milton Bradley division, moved decisively in 1988 to discontinue certain lines that weren't selling well.

Getting axed was Jem, the pink-haired fashion rock star doll Hasbro launched in 1986 with an $8 million ad budget, along with her own animated TV show. The company updated Jem in 1987, spending $4.5 million to advertise her, but eventually decided to dump her in 1988 in favor of a new doll named Maxie, modeled after a blonde California teenager.

Maxie is the same size as competitor Mattel's Barbie doll, which continues to lead the doll market by a wide margin. Hasbro is spending $8 million to advertise Maxie in 1988, along with her three friends, her boyfriend Rob and dozens of accessories.

Hasbro also pulled away from its Air Raiders line in 1988, which it advertised with $2.5 million, and it backed off from the Moondreamers doll line, which it had promoted with $3.5 million in measured spending in 1987.

In general, Hasbro played it safe in 1987, by only spending heavily on its proven winners.

While other new entries stagnated, Hasbro's G.I. Joe was once again one of the country's top-selling toys in 1987, supported by more than $9 million in measured advertising. Hasbro also put $7.8 million toward Transformers and $7.7 toward My Little Pony.

Pogo Bal, which Hasbro spent $4.4 million advertising, turned out to be a surprisingly strong toy throughout 1987 and 1988.

Other new products from Hasbro in 1988 include a new line of boys' action figures called C.O.P.S., which is accompanied by an animated TV show; Fazz jewelry and makeup; the Body Rap portable sound and rhythm system and a line of plush toys tied to the movie "Who Framed Roger Rabbit?" that sold briskly.

Hasbro is expected to introduce an interactive video game in 1989, codenamed NEMO by the industry, and expected to retail for around $200.

Both Playskool and Milton Bradley turned in the strongest sales results for the company in 1987, with Milton Bradley leading all other game and puzzle makers with a 29% increase in domestic sales volume.

Milton Bradley's measured ad total in 1987 was $30 million, with just over $1 million allocated toward most board games.

For "A Question of Scruples," its adult board game, Milton Bradley spent $4.2 million in 1987 and launched a children's version of the game in 1988.

Other new games from Milton Bradley in 1988 include Tuba Ruba, a skill and action game slightly resembling Twister; Groove Tube action game and Liars Dice, a family game.

Banking on the solid sales of video games, Milton Bradley also joined other toy makers in licensing three games for the Nintendo Entertainment System, which proved successful.

Playskool received $29 million in measured media, of which $4 million went toward its Pipeworks building system for preschoolers, and $3 million was spent promoting its popular Definitely Dinosaurs line. The Playskool division also put more effort into its child development products in 1987, introducing the Nursa disposable baby bottle system, which received little advertising.

Other new products from Playskool in 1988 include the Nosy Bears plush line; Dolly Surprise, whose hair grows; the Playsounds Sink & Stove Kitchen Set and the Sleepy Sounds baby monitoring system.

The Playskool division has profited from overall growth in the market for infant and preschool toys and products, placing it in direct competition with Quaker Oats' Fisher-Price unit, which dominates that market.

H.J. Heinz's bought instant market share in the canned dog-food market in 1987 with the acquisition of three pet-food producers.

Acquisitions during 1987 included Campbell Soup Co.'s Champion Valley Farms (Recipe dog food), California Home Brands (Skippy, Sturdy and Vets dog food, plus Petuna cat food) and Mavar Products Co. (Kozy Kritter and Kozy Kitten).

Already the market leader in cat foods, the acquisitions helped Heinz's Star-Kist division leap to No. 3 in the $800 million canned dog-food market, going from nil to 15% share, according to John McMillin, an analyst with Prudential Bache Securities. Alpo Pet Foods is the canned dog-food market leader with a 23% share; Mars Inc.'s Kal Kan holds 19%.

Heinz plans to concentrate on premium and super-premium canned dog food with no designs on dominating the dry dog food segment. Case in point is the $25 million media budget scheduled to support the new Reward superpremium canned dog food brand which was in test in July 1988.

Not all the company's recent acquisitions worked out as well as its pet-food maneuvers. Heinz' purchase of Bumble Bee Seafoods in February for an estimated $200 million was challenged by the U.S. Justice Department on anti-trust grounds and Heinz terminated the agreement in July through a sale to Pillsbury. Bumble Bee, with a 20% share, would have given Heinz virtual dominance in the market where its Star-Kist brand already holds a 36% share.

A novel acquisition for the company was McLean, Va.-based Friteco Inc., (renamed Ore Ida Vended Products Inc.) a research company developing a french fry vending machine. The device, undergoing a two- to three-year test, cooks fries in 35 seconds and is equipped with a dispenser for single-serve Heinz Ketchup.

Meanwhile, Heinz Ketchup (regular and light combined) holds 56% of the retail ketchup market, Mr. McMillin said, compared to 55% for last year. Hunt's claims 16% and Del Monte, 10%. Heinz also owns 55% of the food service segment. Heinz spent $11.2 million on ketchup in 1987, the most for any single product.

New products for Heinz USA include room service-size ketchup, a 2¼-ounce glass bottle designed for hoteliers; Horseradish Sauce (a revitalization of Henry J. Heinz' first product 119 years ago); three new varieties of Heinz relish (which hit the No. 1 spot for the first time); an eight-variety line of Old Fashioned Pickles; tartar sauce and five strained yogurts for babies.

Weight Watchers, ranking second in profitability only to ketchup at the company, added a nine-flavor line of a la Francais yogurt, two frozen novelties (Chocolate Mousse on a Stick and Chocolate Dip Bar), an eight-flavor Grand Collection of ice milk, Mexican frozen entrees and 12 products to the Central Location Line. New products generated nearly 15% of Weight Watchers frozen foods sales. Its frozen dishes hold an 8% share of that market and frozen sweet goods, 10%, Mr. McMillin said.

In the low-calorie prepared frozen dinner category, Weight Watchers holds an estimated 30% market share, compared with 40% for market leader, Lean Cuisine, from Nestle's Stouffers Corp. The market, however, is heating up with new entries from ConAgra and Kraft.

Weight Watchers pulled $30.9 million in measured ad spending in 1987, Heinz's largest ad category, according to BAR/LNA. This was down from $33.7 million in 1986, however.

Weight Watchers International replaced its popular Quick Start program with the Quick Success Program, featuring faster weight loss and simplified program materials. Enrollments are 30% higher than last year; North American meetings increased 11% and European locations rose 4%. Cardio-Fitness Corp. opened three new centers, including one in a Chicago hotel.

Inspired by the success of 1987's Toaster Hash Browns, Ore-Ida expanded distribution to the entire U.S. and added onion and Western-flavored varieties. The foodservice area introduced Crispy Bakes, fried potatoes designed for oven preparation in schools. Ore-Ida boasts a 56% market share of frozen potatoes, and a nationwide decline of sales in that arena seems to be reversing; Aunt Jemima follows with 2%.

Heinz spent $9.3 million on the Ore-Ida line, up from $5.5 million in 1986. The difference between the two years largely related to the geographic expansion and ''initial'' media spending for: Hash Browns ($2.2 million in 1987); microwaveable fries ($1.2 million) and frozen tater tots ($2.3 million).

Even though dogs dominated the headlines, felines were not forgotten as Star-Kist's 9 Lives developed Finicky Bits treats, which company officials may took 21% of the $32 million cat treats category; Quaker Oats' Puss & Boots Pounce pulls in 64%, and Beatrice's Bonkers 27%. Additional varieties and sizes of Jerky Treats and Meaty Bone arrived for dogs.

The 9 Lives and Amore brands combined for a 30% share of the canned cat food market (up from 28% last year); Kozy Kitten and Petuna add another 3%. Kal Kan has 19% of the wet category; Nestles' Carnation's Friskies, 14%. Nine Lives semi-moist product rates a 15% share of that segment; Ralston Purina's Tender Vittles takes 47% and its Happy Cat 25%. Nine Lives dry manages only 8% of that market.

Total measured advertising in 11 monitored media was up 12.2% to $98.3 million, with almost half that amount—$46.5 million—budgeted for network TV; that was up 9.7% from 1986. Spot TV garnered over a fourth of the total—$25.5 million, approximately the same figure as last year. Cable TV spending more than tripled, to $2.1 million, and newspaper expenditures were almost three times as much at $1.3 million. Magazine advertising rose 14% to $18.4 million.

Heinz Ketchup amassed the largest allotment of advertising dollars, $11.2 million, up $27.2%. Total spending for Weight Watchers fell 8.4%, with Weight Watchers Frozen meals, the largest single expenditure in that brand, dropping 20.9% to $9 million. Spending on Weight Watchers International, however, increased 12.8% to $8.3 million.

Nine Lives canned cat food advertising was up 17.6% to $6.1 million, and the advent of the presidential elections brought Morris the Cat into the national limelight with advertising based on his candidacy for the country's highest office. His finicky image is being reworked, with a new TV spot due out by year's end. Spending on Amore was down 26.4% to $4.6 million.

Chico-San rice cakes, an exception to the TV advertising dominance rule, had its largest expenditure going to magazines—$1.6 million; spending for Chico-San, acquired in 1984, increased 81.5%. Frozen Tater Tots' got the most ad support for the Ore-Ida group, $2.3 million, while expenditures on microwave fries fell from $2.1 million to $1.2 million. Output for Ore-Ida Hash Browns was $2.2 million.

National and international recognition of advertising came for two products: A Swedish spot for Heinz Ketchup earned an award at the 34th International Advertising Film Festival in Cannes, and a TV spot on Home-Style Gravy was named one of AA's ''Best'' from he first quarter of '87.

Geographic expansion continued with the purchase of a majority share of Win-Chance Foods Co. Ltd. (baby cereal and flavored milk powder) through a joint venture in Thailand; Kgalagadi Soap Industries, the sole producer of toilet and laundry soaps in Botswana; S. Orlando S.A. (Spanish producer of tomato-based condiments) and Judice Fialho (Portuguese producer of canned sardines). Heinz also purchased Pro Pastries Inc. and Pro Bakers Ltd. (frozen unbaked pastries). Stanley Wine Co., an Australian producer of wine and wine cooler products, was sold.

Anthony J. O'Reilly became Heinz chairman in 1987 following the death of H.J. Heinz III (O'Reilly was already president and CEO), and the company is undergoing intensive internal scrutiny, such as seeking to integrate the making of ketchup worldwide through a universal system of buying ingredients.

Hershey Foods Corp. this summer called a halt to its nine-year effort to diversify beyond its confectionery and consumer food products, preferring instead to acquire the U.S. candy works of Cadbury Schweppes PLC in an effort to put it ahead of Mars Inc. as the largest U.S. candy marketers.

In August, a month after the candy purchase, Hershey sold Friendly Ice Cream Corp., a chain of 840 informal restaurants, for $375 million to Tennessee Restaurant Co. of Chicago. Friendly contributed 23% to Hershey sales in 1987, compared with 76.4% for consumer foods (which includes confectionery products). Hershey had acquired Friendly for $164 million in 1979.

The Friendly sale was seen by analysts as a move to offset the cost of the Cadbury operation for $270 million in cash and $30 million in assumed debt.

"From Hershey's point of view, the return on management time is going to be greater in the chocolate and confectionery business than restaurants," said Leonard Teitelbaum, an analyst who follows Hershey for Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc.

Cadbury, with 1987 U.S. sales of $300 million from brands including Peter Paul Mounds and Almond Joy, York Peppermint Pattie and Cadbury-label items including Dairy Milk, Fruit & Nut, Caramello and Creme Eggs, had an estimated 4% share of the estimated $7.4 billion U.S. confectionery market. The buyout is believed to inch Hershey past Mars, both with 24% shares.

Hershey, in particular, benefited in the candy bar market from the addition of Cadbury brands. That market, which accounts for about 65% of total U.S. confectionery sales, now shows Hershey with a 43% share thanks to Cadbury's 8%. Mars holds 37% of the market.

Mars still holds individual candy bar honors, as Snickers remains the No. 1 seller. Hershey's Reese's peanut butter cups rank second. Other Hershey's products among the top ten best sellers include Kisses, Kit Kat and Hershey milk chocolate bars, with and without nuts.

In 1987, Hershey cast its competition with Mars in an international light by purchasing the the asset and trademark rights to Nabisco Brands Ltd.'s Canadian confectionery and snack nut business for $135.9 million plus approximately $26.7 million for net working capital. The acquisition helped boost Hershey's share in the Canadian confectionery market from 6% to 21%, ahead of Mars' 14% share.

Hershey also has been engaged in a strong new product development push. Capitalizing on stable, low cocoa prices and supply surpluses, the company has developed "real chocolately" candy bars.

In 1987, Bar None, a chocolate bar which combines chocolate wafers, chocolate cream and peanuts covered in chocolate, was introduced nationally. It is now testing another chocolate concoction, Symphony, which is described as a milk chocolate bar with more milk. It is targeted to upscale consumers.

Some 82% of Hershey's total measured ad spending was devoted to confectionery items, according to BAR/LNA. The spending leader was Reese's Peanut Butter Cups, up 56% to $9.8 million. Spending rose dramatically for Kit Kat to $6.9 million from $438,000. Other major categories were Hershey's Kisses, up 56.2% to $9.6 million; Hershey's miniatures at $2.5 million, up from $920,000 and Skor, at $2.8 million, down 32%. Spending also dropped 31.6% for Hershey Candy Bars, to $12.1 million.

Hershey spent $5.1 million on Friendly during 1987. Before the sale, in March 1988, Friendly's long-standing agency, Boston-based Ingalls, Quinn & Johnson was replaced by Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver, New York.

Hershey's other consumer products, Hershey Pasta Group, contributed about 10% of Hershey's revenues in 1987 when Hershey held a 17.5% market share at the consumer level. On the wholesale level, dry pasta had 1987 sales of approximately $934 million.

Hershey's brands, which include American Beauty, San Giorgio, Skinner, Delmonico, P&R, Perfection, Light 'N Fluffy and Pastamania, are concentrated east of the Mississippi. Pasta traditionally has been a local/regional business.

In the past few years, acquisitions by major food companies including CPC International, General Foods, Borden and Hershey have changed the nature of the market. While there is no true national brand, national market shares have become worth fighting for. Borden and Hershey battled for the top share through 1986 with Borden claiming 17% and Hershey 16.8% by the end of that year. Borden's acquisition of Prince in 1987, however, gave it an additional 10% share.

Pasta received about $2.4 million in measured spending, up 4.3%. A large part of the unmeasured ad spending for this category comes from slotting allowances, the payment for shelf space that some retailers expect from manufacturers. These fees have more than doubled in the past year. By one account, American Beauty had to pay as much as $19,500 per store to a West Coast chain to stock its pasta products.

NOTE: *Honda changed its fiscal closing from the end of February to March 31. Figures for 1988 cover 13 months from Feb. 28, 1987 to March 31, 1988 at Y136.7 = U.S.$1; figures for 1987 cover 12 months ended Feb. 28, 1987 at Y161 = U.S.$1.

American Honda Motor Co., a subsidiary of Honda Motor Co. Ltd., Tokyo, the largest foreign-based auto marketer in this country, saw its share of the U.S. market dip in 1987 as it neared "domestic automaker" status in the U.S.

Sales of imported Honda cars in the U.S. in 1987 totaled 421,688 units (312,218 of the Honda nameplate and 109,470 of the newly-introduced Acura Legends and Integras), down 7.9% from 1986. This represented a 13.4% share of the import car market, down slightly from 14.1% in 1986.

But sales of U.S.-built Accords and Civics grew 25.7% to 316,618 units, giving Honda total car sales of 738,306, up 6%. This represents a 7.2% share of the total U.S. market, making Honda last year's leader among foreign-based automakers. Toyota ranked second with a 6.14% overall share and Nissan third at 6.11%.

The Tokyo-based parent, also a manufacturer of motorcycles, ATVs, scooters and power equipment, for the six month period ended March 31, 1988 of its fiscal 1988 posted net earnings of $453 million, up 51.7%, on worldwide sales of $12.6 billion, up 11.3%. Figures for both six-month periods were converted at the current exchange rate of Y125 = U.S.$1.

Nearly 70% of the revenues of the parent is generated from overseas sales or production activities, and nearly 50% of its business comes from North America.

Worldwide unit sales of Honda autos for the six-month period totaled 890,000 units, up 8.8% over the prior-year period.

Honda, the first Japanese automaker to assemble cars in the U.S., plans to increase its auto sales in this country to one million annually by 1990. Nearly all of the increase will come from added U.S. production, not imports, which face quotas self-imposed by the Japanese.

The company plans to export cars from the U.S. to Asia-Pacific markets and even Europe. A total of 50,000 cars will go to Japan each year. Honda's first U.S.-made Accord coupe arrived in Japan in April 1988, one of 4,000 carrying a $20,800 price tag, about $5,800 more than the average price in the U.S.

To expand production and worldwide distribution from the U.S., Honda is building a new plant in East Liberty, Ohio, near its first facility in Marysville. Production is scheduled to begin in 1989 with a capacity of 150,000 units and to bring annual American production to 510,000 cars.

The new Ohio factory will produce several models, including the Acura division's two high-performance luxury cars, the $20,000 Legend and the $15,000 Integra. But the first car to come out of the East Liberty plant in August 1989 will be a Honda Civic, costing between $8,000 to $12,000 retail. Civics and Accords are produced in Marysville and also are imported to the U.S.

Honda's expanding upscale Acura division is expected to sell about 150,000 cars in 1988 after finishing 1987 with 109,470 units (54,713 Legends and 54,757 Integras). The upscale cars were first marketed in the U.S. in 1986. Toyota and Nissan won't have their own upscale units until late 1989.

Expansion of the Acura dealer outlets was supported by a doubling of media spending for the new division to over $40 million for 1987. Measured expenditures for 1987 hit $44.7 million, with the ad budget split 50/50 for Legend/Integra. Network TV accounted for the biggest media outlay at $23.6 million. Acura will add two cars in the 1990 and 1991 model years, including a Legend with its first V-8 engine.

The upscale division gained marketing points when the Acura Legend coupe was named Motor Trend magazine's 1987 Import Car of the Year (Integra came in second). Three Honda models swept the top three places in MT's Import Car of the Year award in early 1988, prompting a 48-hour blitz on network TV. This included TV spots set to the themes of "Who says it's lonely at the top?" and "Good news travels fast."

The Honda models for 1988 featured a bigger, more powerful generation of Civic/CRX models, along with the redesigned Prelude coupes with a new engine and optional four-wheel steering that Honda introduced last summer. Only the Accord was a carryover for 1988, although it is more powerful and has other refinements.

(134,719 units sold from $6,285 to $10,720) accounted for the major slice of the budget with media spending measured at $31 million, half network TV.

Spending in support of the Honda Accords, which accounted for sales of 104,791 units at prices ranging from $11,040 for a two-door hatchback to $15,650 for the four-door LXi sedan, was measured at $23.3 million, 65% in network TV.

Measured ad spending for the top-of-the-line Prelude models ($18,125 for the Si coupe with 4-wheel steering) reached $14 million in 1987.

Honda also broke the 1988 model-year barrier with the introduction in mid-July of an all-new line of Preludes, which included the hot new option of four-wheel steering. This second Prelude campaign began in September.

Honda's ad spending for introduction of the new '88 models took a 30% jump to $78 million during the last quarter of calendar 1987 to meet the stiffer competition expected at the entry-level segment of the auto market. This quarterly ad push started in late September during ABC-TV's college football coverage. Another 10% to 12% spending boost was slated for calendar 1988, with reduced summer expenditures helping to make up for the big introductory outlays.

Total ad spending, excluding the budget for Honda's upscale Acura cars, remained steady at about $130 million.

Honda extended its lead in the U.S. motorcycle market with a 50.8% share, up from 45% a year earlier. Yamaha followed at 19.8% (up from 17.8%), Suzuki at 11.6% (down from 12.2%), Kawasaki at 10.2% (down from 14.9%) and Harley-Davidson at 6.3% (down from 9.6%).

Honda's motorcycle division underwent major reorganization on the ad front during 1987, with the $10 million motor scooter account going from Weiden & Kennedy to Dailey & Associates, both of Los Angeles. Dailey also handles Honda's $25 million motorcycle and all-terrain vehicles account.

Motorcycles and ATVs accounted for $10.1 million in measured media expenditures in 1987, while scooters were measured at the $6.3 million level.

Responding to a U.S. Justice Department ruling regarding ATV safety early this year, Honda and Yamaha Motor Corp. agreed to spend $8 million in a print and TV campaign, scheduled to break this September, to warn consumers of the dangers of riding ATVs.

The motorcycle division also produced a 75-minute home video called "Marvelous Marvin Hagler vs. Sugar Ray Leonard: The SuperFight." The videotape carried one :30 spot at the opening and one :60 at the end.

Hyundai Motor America Inc., a U.S. auto sales arm of South Korea-based Hyundai Group, establishing itself as the No. 4 auto importer into the U.S. in 1987, is in just its second year of operation in this country.

Hyundai posted a record 12-month U.S. sales total of 263,610 units last year, up 35.9% over 1986, when its sales covering only 10 months set a record for an import's first year on the market.

Hyundai supported its sales push with ad expenditures estimated at $143.7 million in 1987, up 43%.

U.S. unit sales represented nearly 45% of Hyundai's worldwide total of 591,368, up 168,624 units or 28.5% over the previous year.

Established in 1967, Seoul-based Hyundai Motor Co. (HMC) is a tiny division of a giant Asian construction conglomerate. The company has manufacturing facilities in nearby Ulsan and developed and produced the first Korean compact passenger car "Pony" in 1974.

Hyundai has expanded in the U.S. from the Excel (a version of the Pony), a subcompact, front-wheel-drive, four-cylinder economy car, to include a 1988 lineup of 16 models, with prices ranging from the low-end, three-door four-speed manual shift hatchback at $5,295 to the top-of-the-line GLS four-door automatic shift sedan at $7,895. A full load of factory-installed options can add $2,500, giving the flagship model a $10,400 price tag upon leaving the showroom. Dealers estimate that their average sticker price falls in the $6,500 to $7,000 range. Two newly-announced additions to the '88 line are a sporty Excel GS three-door hatchback and a base Excel four-door sedan.

For the upcoming 1989 model year, Hyundai will introduce toward the end of this year the front-wheel-drive Sonata to compete directly with the more pricey Honda Accord and Toyota Camry. The medium-priced Sonata will be priced $10,000 to $13,000.

Hyundai's U.S. market share in 1987 came to 8.3% of the import market and 2.5% of the total U.S. market, placing it behind Toyota with an 18.5% import share and 5.7% share of the U.S.; Honda/Acura with a 13.4%/4.1% and Nissan, 12.9%/3.9%.

Hyundai is expected to add 45 new dealers this year, giving it a total of 280 U.S. dealerships before the start of the 1989 model year. It has challenged its dealerships to sell 300,000 vehicles in the coming year.

Hyundai dealership investments have been costing dealers an average of about $2.9 million per outlet. Helping to return dealers full value on their investments, Hyundai promises them a minimum of 100 cars per month and the backing of heavy advertising and promotion.

AA's advertising estimates for Hyundai in this issue exclude $11.4 million spending by local dealers but do include the corporate co-op portion of $36 million spent by the Hyundai dealers association. Both expenditures were in spot TV, according to BAR/LNA.

Spot TV claimed $76.4 million in measured media, up 65.8% and network TV more than tripled to $13.2 million. Magazine totals of $8.1 million, were up 71.2%, while $14 million in newspapers represented a 34.5% growth over 1986.

For the introduction of the new 1988 models last fall, Hyundai called on Fats Domino and his "Blueberry Hill" music for TV spots. This was Hyundai's first use of a high-priced spokesman. Called "Lover's Lane," the showcase spot began as a single-model ad, but was broadened to cover all Excel models in Hyundai's primary market, the so-called entry-level cars. Ten other spots for 1988 models centered on a "family of cars" theme, but focused on specific models. They stressed the $5,295 price of the base model and the value of many standard features.

Beginning with regional network spots last fall, Hyundai began its first national network TV in the spring of 1988. The "family" campaign, which included print ads, retained the "Cars that make sense" theme used a year earlier, once again using actor Fred Gwynne to perform all voiceovers. Print ads in magazines and newspapers were keyed in with the TV effort and emphasized product quality and customer satisfaction.

Ads stressed youth, because the average Hyundai buyer is 29 years old with a $28,000 household income; 55% are female and 35% are college graduates. Main competitors, according to Hyundai marketers, are the Nissan Sentra, Honda Civic, Ford Escort and used cars. Average transaction price for Hyundai is $7,300 compared to the $5,700 average price of a used car.

Last fall Hyundai took its first steps into the Midwest with 11 dealers lined up in the Chicago area and others in Kansas, Missouri, Indiana, Minnesota and Ohio, adding 20 more markets this year. By mid-August 1988, the total number of dealers stood at 293, with Hyundai promising to have dealers in 48 states by the end of the year.

At first primarily a regional advertiser, in regional editions of consumer magazines and mostly spot TV, the company aired its first national network TV spots in early 1988. National emphasis came upon entering several new markets in the central states, a geographical expansion that made national advertising worthwhile. In the first half of 1988, according to the Television Bureau of Advertising, Hyundai spent $33.7 million on TV advertising, nearly triple the $12 million spent in the year-ago period. Hyundai expects continental coverage for its dealerships by late 1988 or early 1989.

Hyundai also took aim at Hispanics with a price-value approach that appeals to this market segment. Spot TV and other promotions began in Miami during the third quarter of 1987 and are expected to continue into the future, with ad budgets growing in line with overall ad expenditures. The thrust into the Hispanic market is strictly on a dealer-level, representing Hyundai's factory and four dealer associations. The company began targeting Los Angeles Hispanics in 1988.

Industry analysts estimate Hyundai's 1987 share of the Hispanic car market at 8.2%—a percentage representing $5.6 billion worth of 1987 cars and trucks, up 7.7% from the 1986 model year.

Hyundai is the official sponsor and supplier of vehicles for the Olympic Games in Korea, a distinction that can be expected to raise buyer awareness, along with a special TV ad package Hyundai will offer dealers during the Games. In a collaboration between a car maker and its dealers, Hyundai will share with its four regional dealer associations the cost of the sponsorship, estimated to be as high as $15 million. The company will be running its TV spots with a multimillion budget on NBC-TV, flying dealers to the Games, and giving the Games prime position in its new car introductions this fall.

Hyundai also plans to put about 430 vehicles at the disposal of the Seoul Olympic Organizing Committee. Hyundai was the official sponsor and supplier of motor vehicles to the 1986 Asian Games that were held in Seoul.

THIS IS MEDIA MONITOR WITH REED IRVINE AND CLIFF KINCAID

HATS OFF TO MARS

Over the years we at Accuracy in Media have often urged the readers of our newsletter, the AIM Report, to write to companies that have advertised on television programs that are seriously inaccurate or otherwise flawed. All too often the companies write back letters explaining that they can't control the content of the programs they have supported with their expensive commercials. Sometimes they suggest that it would be inappropriate for them to tell a network that they found a program objectionable. We are happy to say that this is changing. Some companies are now willing to speak up.

One that has recently done so most forcefully is Mars Incorporated, the maker of M & M's and Mars candy bars. One of their ads appeared on the CBS Mighty Mouse cartoon in which Mighty Mouse was shown snorting a powdery substance which most viewers perceived as being cocaine. When the top people at Mars heard about this, they were very upset. They asked CBS to supply them with a tape of the program and had it viewed by several members of their staff. Their conclusion was that it depicted "harmful and socially reprehensible conduct."

Edward J. Stegemann, vice president, secretary and general counsel of Mars, wrote a stinging letter to Laurence Tisch in which he said he was writing to express the company's outrage at both the "coke-snorting Mighty Mouse episode" and the way CBS had handled the matter. He said: "This appears to be one of the most irresponsible and unprofessional examples of network programming we have ever heard about." Mr. Stegemann said that as a major advertiser on CBS, Mars had the right to assume that the CBS staff would screen programs before they aired and would "exercise common sense and apply standards of decency" in approving the programs.

Mr. Stegemann said: "We first learned of this outrageous episode when a deluge of consumer and internal complaints suddenly emerged. We. . .were dumbfounded that something like this could have taken place. . .We believe that CBS owes the public an apology for airing so reprehensible an episode. The fact that it appeared during 'children's time' on Saturday morning (and reportedly more than once) just magnifies the misconduct."

We don't know how Laurence Tisch reacted to this letter, but on July 27, CBS announced that it was abolishing the position held by George Dessart, the man who was responsible for keeping objectionable material off the air. CBS did not explain why they were giving Mr. Dessart the axe, but it is reasonable to assume that this was the price he paid for letting the cocaine-snorting episode get on the air and then insisting that there was nothing wrong with it.

CBS had already announced on July 14 that it was editing the Mighty Mouse cartoon to remove the objectionable scene. They still insisted at that time that it depicted Mighty Mouse smelling crushed flowers, not cocaine, but that explanation wouldn't wash. The executives at Mars, like others who saw the videotape, believed their eyes, not CBS lies. We salute Mars for mincing no words in telling CBS that it owed the public an apology. They have set an example that other companies should follow.

IC Industries, which spun off its Illinois Central Gulf Railroad in 1987, has entered a new era as a consumer goods and services company. At the same time, it has built up its Pet Inc. unit through heavy acquisition.

Pet, the big specialty foods unit with operating income of $198.2 million (up 58.1%) on sales of $1.35 billion (up 39.5%) in 1987, during the year acquired a production facility of Country Queen Foods for additional capacity for Downyflake breakfast products, and bought Oronoque Inc., which produces and distributes a line of frozen pie shells in the eastern U.S.

It also acquired Facchin Foods Co. Ltd., a pasta manufacturer, and Miloni Foods Ltd., a sales and distribution company, both in western Canada.

Pet, through its Old El Paso brand has 31.6% of Mexican dry grocery market and 11.3% of the frozen Mexican food market. The El Paso line drew $8.3 million in measured spending in 1987, down 11% from the prior year.

Pet's large Progresso brand, which includes authentic sauces, bread crumbs, frozen entrees, sauces and soups, got the lion's share of Pet's spending with $14.6 million in measured media, according to BAR/LNA, compared to $8.4 million in 1986. Progresso has a 28.4% share of the ready-to-serve market, the company claims.

The group's other big ad ticket item, Ac'cent Flavoring, received $4.1 million in measured media, down 32% from the prior year. Ac'cent holds a 50.4% share of its market.

Pet spending was modest to nil for such leading products as Downyflake and Roman Meal, which hold a 26% share of the frozen waffle market when including their private label manufacturing. Pet also does little media advertising for its Oronoque and Pet-Ritz frozen pie shells, which hold a 68% share of the frozen pie shell market.

Early 1988, Pet's Whitman's Chocolates division introduced nationally a Lite version of its boxed chocolate sampler. The brand has one-third fewer calories than Whitman's regular line. The Haworth Group, Minnetonka, Minn., does media placement.

Pet continued to expand in foreign markets, including Canada, Australia, the United Kingdom and Venezuela.

Pet early this year agreed to change the label and the shape of its Old El Paso picante sauce hourglass bottle which Pace Foods found to be similar to its own packaged product. After more than a year of litigation, it was settled out of court.

On the service side of IC's new direction, Midas International Corp. continued its strong performance, returning operating earnings of $51.2 million, up 14.3%, on sales of $350.7 million, up 0.7%. Midas in 1987 held a 22% share of the U.S. exhaust system service market, 10% of the brake market and 4% of the overall shock absorber, strut and front-end replacement market.

Midas Muffler Shops received $34 million in measured media, down 5.8% from 1986 as its network of stores grew 2% to 2,144. In addition to adding new shops in the U.S. in 1988, Midas plans to expand overseas with an emphasis on France, Canada and Australia. Midas sold its chain of 1-2-3 Auto Service shops in Germany.

IC's Pepsi-Cola General Bottlers became the nation's second-largest Pepsi bottling operation after No. 1 PepsiCo, through the addition to its business of RKO Bottling Inc., covering principal markets in Indiana and Ohio, Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. of Bloomington, Ill. and Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. of Milwaukee.

IC now holds its Pepsi unit in joint venture with PepsiCo, although retaining 80% of the expanded operation, compared with 20% for PepsiCo.

The joint venture arrangement emerged in late 1987 as IC attempted to buy RKO Bottling Inc. from GenCorp. PepsiCo, which must approve the exchange of any franchises, turned down the purchase wanting to increase its own bottling operations. The out-of-court compromise allowed both to expand.

PepsiCo got a proportionate share of profits and representation on the 10-member Pepsi-Cola General Bottlers board, and IC got a much larger operation that encompassed the Bloomington franchise bought by PepsiCo in November 1987, and the Milwaukee franchise, which had been part of PepsiCo's company-owned bottling system.

The bottling operation at IC for the third consecutive year showed an increase in operating income of $65.9 million, up 19.8%. The bottler, which had owned Dad's Root Beer Co. and Bubble Up Co., sold those units on Dec. 14, 1987 to Monarch Co. for an undisclosed price.

In 1987, the bottling division introduced Diet Mountain Dew in Des Moines, Iowa.

In addition to spinning off Illinois Central Railroad, IC sold off Pneumo Abex, its aerospace, industrial and fluid power concern, to a consortium of the Henley Group and the investment banking firm of Wasserstein, Perella & Co. for $1.29 billion in mid-1988.

International Business Machines positioned itself in 1987 for a comeback from three consecutive years of disappointing earnings. It introduced key new products, trimmed 10,000 from the payroll and redeployed some 15,000 employees. Now some experts wonder if another shoe is about to drop.

Complicating matters for the computer maker was a sideshow distraction in the form of a highly-publicized court battle concerning London-based WPP Group, parent of Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, New York, IBM's agency for corporate and information systems accounts, and a breakaway agency formed by six key LGFE executives: Lord, Einstein, O'Neill & Partners, New York.

The two agencies were among six finalists in an agency review for the lion's share of $138 million media account at IBM in 1988 which was awarded in early September to Lintas:Worldwide and Wells, Rich, Greene, both of New York. Lintas will handle desktop products while WRG is assigned to corporate advertising.

1988, IBM faces enormous hurdles in returning to the level of growth attained in the early 1980s, analysts say.

In the $20.3 billion market for personal computers, IBM continues to lose market share to Asian and domestic competitors. IBM's unit share of systems priced up to $10,000 fell to 17.8% in 1987 from 19.2% in 1986 on industrywide shipments of 8.6 million and 7 million units for the respective years, according to San Jose, Calif.-based Dataquest, a division of Dun & Bradstreet.

By comparison, No. 2 Apple Computer's unit share grew to 14.2% in 1987 from 12.5% in 1986, and the share of No. 3 Commodore Business Machines, West Chester, Pa., grew to 7.8% of units shipped in 1987 from 6.1% in 1986.

IBM's seven-media measured spending for personal computers fell 9% in 1987 to $42.5 million, led by $37.9 million in measured totals for the IBM Personal System/2, according to BAR/LNA.

Analysts said one reason why IBM's PS/2 is not taking the industry by storm is that its advertising fails to communicate why PS/2 is better than competing products. PS/2, which was introduced in April 1987, is based on 16- and 32-bit microprocessors, but its most powerful models contain an IBM innovation called Micro Channel.

Micro Channel is a set of communication lines that shuttle information back and forth among the computer's memory, disk drive and processor, providing greater convenience and speed. IBM has applied for patents and copyrights on Micro Channel, which will help it to defend its proprietary system against the onslaught of clones.

The problem is that IBM has not yet released the Operating System/2 Extended version of the applications software needed to make use of PS/2's Micro Channel architecture. OS/2 Extended is not expected until November 1988.

Not surprisingly, IBM de-emphasized advertising in 1987 for PC software, cutting back 83% on measured seven-media totals to $665,000.

"Until IBM releases OS/2, it really hasn't provided people with a real difference," said Stephen Cohen, analyst with Gartner Group, Stamford, Conn. "A (marketing) difference is what IBM needs to be successful with PS/2, and it is clearly what Apple has done (with Apple's MacIntosh line of personal computers)."

The problems in communicating IBM's point of difference also extend into corporate themes, said analyst Brian Jeffery, managing director of International Technology Group, Los Altos, Calif.

IBM's measured total for corporate advertising, the largest category of 1987 spending, was $39.6 million, mostly in network TV, according to BAR/LNA, which monitors seven media. The tally was up 42% over 1986.

In April 1987, IBM began changing the focus of personal computer and corporate advertising from spotlighting a single user accomplishing business and personal objectives to showing a group of users accomplishing inter-related tasks. In changing its approach, IBM shelved the popular Charlie Chaplin character, who symbolized the single user, in favor of the group, represented by the main characters from the CBS TV series "M*A*S*H."

Mr. Jeffery believes the "M*A*S*H" unit is not effective in getting across such corporate themes as group computing, connectivity, communication and integration of systems. "I think the whole concept is wrong. It basically says the PC revolution is over, and now we should be connected to the mainframe," Mr. Jeffery said. "The average PC user still looks at (the computer) as an individual tool," he said. "Besides, would you buy a corporate network from Radar O'Reilly?"

Part of IBM's problem today stems from its emphasis over the past few years on boosting lackluster revenues by any means. The computer giant's strategy of selling more mid-range units by discounting—to support a cost structure geared to high volume sales—worked so well it is choking off today's market, Mr. Jeffery said.

This may have an effect on sales of an important new mid-range series, the Application System 400, introduced in June 1988. IBM has six AS/400 models priced from $19,000 to $229,500, which are expected to significantly boost IBM's sales beginning late in 1988.

IBM began in March 1988 shipping its 9370 Information System, a larger mid-range computer introduced in October 1986, dubbed "the VAX killer." IBM hopes communications capabilities of the AS/400 and 9370 will help stem the flow of customers to fast-rising Digital Equipment Corp.'s VAX minicomputers. DEC's VAX system features interconnectivity between all VAX products, an advantage DEC uses in winning corporate users.

The transition in IBM's product line from such stand-alone workhorses as the IBM System 36 and System 38 to the AS/400 and 9370 also is causing a significant shift in IBM's media spending. In 1986, IBM had a measured seven-media total for Systems 36 and 38 of more than $6 million, including $2.5 million in network TV. In 1987, Systems 36 and 38 received less than $1 million, all in network radio.

AS/400 and the 9370 are expected to provide IBM with a much-needed boost in sales. IBM could use the help. In the $3.1 billion market for minicomputers priced between $25,000 and $75,000, IBM's unit share dropped to 33.6% in 1987 from 41.9% in 1986 while DEC's share jumped to 17.1% from 7.3%, respectively, according to Dataquest.

In the $3 billion market for systems priced $75,000 to $250,000, IBM's unit share fell to 26.1% in 1987 from 38.6% in 1986. Unisys' share grew to 12.8% in 1987 from 9.6% in 1986, and Hewlett-Packard's share jumped to 10.2% from 2.3% in the same period.

In the $3 billion market for systems priced from $250,000 to $1.5 million, IBM's unit share fell to 24.7% in 1987 from 33.2% in 1986. Meanwhile, Unisys' unit share jumped to 20.3% in 1987 from 11.47% for Burroughs Corp., which merged in February 1986 with Sperry Corp. to form Detroit-based Unisys.

The good news for IBM is that its share of the $7.1 billion market for systems priced $1.5 million and above grew to 63.1% in 1987, from 55.8% in 1986. In this category, IBM distanced itself from Unisys, which had 13.8% in 1987, down from a combined share of Burroughs, with 11.4% in 1986, and Sperry, with 6.7% in 1986, according to Dataquest.

Management changes at IBM also may have had an effect on IBM's selection of a new agency. Among the changes, IBM Senior VP George H. Conrades was moved to general manager of U.S. marketing and services from general manager of IBM's personal computer business. IBM VP William O. Grabe takes the new post of assistant general manager-marketing for U.S. marketing and services from assistant general manager-marketing for IBM's midrange computers. Because neither Mr. Conrades nor Mr. Grabe has had any major involvement with IBM corporate advertising, their voices in agency selection virtually eliminated whatever advantages of personal contacts that either Lord, Einstein & O'Neill or LGFE may have had in fighting to keep all or part of IBM's business. Jim Garrity, former marketing communications director, was named to the new post of director of advertising and promotion while David McGovern, former director of advertising, became director of recognition and marketing events in August 1988.

Don't sell Tokyo short

World finance is banking on Japan, and for more than a century Japan has been banking on Tokyo. The greater metropolitan area now accounts for two-thirds of the value of stock sales in Japan. Of the 2,000 companies listed on the Tokyo Exchange, more than half have their head offices in and around the capital.

Little wonder that every tier of Japanese business looks to the Asahi Shimbun's Tokyo edition for what it needs to know. With a circulation of 3,318,000 and an impressive 59.6%* of our readers management, executive, and professional decision makers, advertisers get a powerhouse media market at regional rates.

Another factor to consider. If you want to concentrate on Tokyo buyers, you can do exactly that by placing your message in Asahi Shimbun's Tokyo morning edition. You'll get Tokyo and Tokyo alone. If, however, you place that same ad in the morning edition of another paper that has national circulation only, 40% of your money will be wasted.

For the most cost-effective way to give your target audience complete exposure to Tokyo, contact your local Asahi Shimbun representative.
You won't be sold short.

ITT Corp., whose far-flung interests include high technology, insurance, hotels and timber, increased its 1987 ad expenditures by 21% after turning the corner and producing strong gains in all but one of its nine major business segments.

Although company officials say improved manufacturing techniques, financial controls and focus on its core businesses are more important to the future success of the company than marketing, it ordered a $150 million worldwide ad review in early 1987 that included a review of all of the company's agencies.

That review resulted in ITT hiring Wells, Rich, Greene of New York to create a new corporate ad campaign. Steven Erenburg, company spokesman, said the campaign is designed to let the world know what business ITT is in. ITT spent $5.5 million on general promotion, up 14.6%, according to BAR/LNA.

Mr. Erenburg explained that many still identify ITT with communications. The company operates a long distance telephone company and it paid $2 billion for a 37% interest in Alcatel, the largest communications company in the world. "We won't let the world forget that," Erenburg said. The problem is that the public does not identify with some of ITT's manufacturing operations such as automobiles and fluid technology.

The TV campaign, which has been running since last year, largely in spot TV, features examples of all the ITT businesses. The ads ask the rhetorical question "What is it?" Then it answers, "It is ITT."

The total in ad expenditures of $151.3 million in 1987 included $101 million in unmeasured spending, up 21.7% from 1986. ITT spends heavily in business periodicals, evidenced by a $6.9 million measured total in 1987, up 17%. However, many of business publications in which it advertises are not monitored by Rome Reports. AA folds that spending into unmeasured totals.

ITT continues to fine tune itself. Chairman Rand Araskog has spent much of the last few years divesting the company of acquisitions made by his predecessor, Harold Geneen.

In 1987, that meant the sale of ITT's remaining 24% share of STC, a British telecommunications company. The $730 million STC sale, which was completed in the fourth quarter of 1987, created a $250 million gain for ITT.

ITT World Communications telex operations was sold off in the U.S. and Latin America. At the same time, ITT sold Virgin Island Telephone Corp., its last full-service telephone company. The telex and telephone company sales netted the company a total of $220 million.

Regarding the divestment programs, Mr. Erenburg said, "It's pretty close to being finished—I can't say it's ever going to be done."

ITT's Hartford Insurance Group stayed strong despite an industrywide softening in the domestic property and casualty market. Hartford Life had $50 billion of insurance in force in 1987 and the company touted that as a major milestone reached by only seven other companies.

Flush with its success, Hartford Insurance returned to TV after several years absence. The campaign features its familiar elk trademark. Ad spending for Hartford grew by 60.3% to $10.9 million in 1987, according to BAR/LNA.

Sheraton Corp. posted a turnaround in hotel operations in 1987 and expanded its foreign operations with new properties in the People's Republic of China, Australia and Bulgaria. The company spent $10.4 million on advertising, up slightly from 1986.

The automotive products division strengthened its position as an original equipment manufacturer, and ITT Automotive announced plans for a new engineering center and world headquarters in Detroit.

The company also made strides in electronic components. ITT Cannon reached a 1987 agreement with Toppan Printing Co. of Tokyo to jointly develop an alternative to floppy disks that is about 1,000 times faster than existing technology and the size of a credit card.

ITT consolidated its 36 fluid manufacturing facilities and more than 100 fluid product sales operations under ITT Fluid Technology.

ITT's pulp and timber mills operated at near capacity last year, and the company launched an off-shore marketing campaign directed at the People's Republic of China, Japan and England.

Introduced last year into the fast growing ibuprofen market for those of us who "haven't got the time for the pain," Johnson & Johnson's Medipren hasn't received the national attention its producers believe it deserves.

Despite backing Medipren with $32.9 million in ad dollars, up from $11.3 million in 1986, J&J remains dissatisfied with Medipren's 13% market share which is far behind the leading 50% share accorded American Home Products' Advil, introduced in 1985, and Bristol-Myers' No. 2 Nuprin with a 25% share among ibuprofens.

AHP backed Advil with $48.4 million in measured support, while Bristol-Myers put $32.2 million behind Nuprin during 1987, according to BAR/LNA.

J&J has the financial strength and is likely to use it to support greater ad spending for Medipren and its feminine sanitary protection products since there continues to be growth in these markets, believes Joseph Riccardo of Bear Stearns.

Johnson & Johnson's Stayfree line, consisting of Stayfree Maxi and Silhouette Maxi-Pads, Assure & Natural, Carefree Panty Shields and Sure & Natural, continues to be the leader in $1.5 billion external feminine protection category, although market shares are declining.

The Stayfree line holds a 34.6% market share, down four share points from the spring 1987.

Measured advertising for the Stayfree line totaled $20.2 million in 1987, down 5%. Measured ad spending decreased by 88% in 1987 for Stayfree Maxi-Pads and fell 35% for Stayfree Silhouette Maxi-Pads. J&J refunneled spending behind Sure & Natural Maxishields, which received $9.3 million in measured advertising, up from $3 million in 1986.

Procter & Gamble's Always line, introduced in 1984, has gained the No. 2 position in external feminine protection with a 24% market share this year, compared with a 26.5% share in the spring 1987. Always is backed by more than $20 million in promotions.

Kimberly-Clark's Kotex currently holds a market share of 15.2%, a gain of 4.2 share points from the spring of 1987. K-C's New Freedom brand claims an 8.5% share. K-C proved the aggressor in the market in 1987 when it launched Kotex profile, an hour-glass-shaped maxi-pad. Then in April 1987, K-C began individually wrapping Kotex pads with a reusable plastic bag and combining them in drawstring poly bags, similar to those used for disposable baby diapers. This led to mimic products from J&J and P&G for Stayfree and Always lines, respectively.

In February 1988, Johnson & Johnson announced the acquisition of the Playtex Family Products part of Playtex for $726 million and three months later withdrew its bid.

Although execs from Johnson & Johnson have been silent about the withdrawal, Samuel Isaly of S.G. Warburg & Co., Inc. speculates that due to the association of tampons with toxic shock syndrome, J&J wanted to leave the liability aspect with Playtex, and Playtex did not accept.

"Difficulties in structuring and completing the definitive agreements for the transaction," was the reason given to AA by a J&J spokesman when the merger did not occur. J&J obviously eyed Playtex for its tampon line that could give it a greater market force with its own 'o.b.' brand against Tambrand's Tampax, which has a commanding 60% share of the tampon segment.

In June 1988, o.b. remained third in the internal feminine protection market with 8% of the market, Playtex held on to second with 24.4% and Tampax led with 62.4%. According to Andy Shore of Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc., o.b. is a dead product in a price-elastic market in the States, but is now popular in France.

Although the Tylenol scare of 1986 and a $130 million recall loss is behind them, J&J decreased its total ad dollars for the brand. In 1987, the Tylenol line ad spending was $55.7 million, down 8.5%.

Within the brand spending, advertising has shifted to Tylenol tamper-proof caplets which J&J developed to replace capsules.

Earlier this year, Tylenol had a 30% market share of the $2.2 billion analgesic market, but analysts expect new studies on aspirin's ability to fight heart attacks to affect market shares.

According to Mr. Riccardo, by June 1988, J&J held 33% of the analgesic market, while American Home Products claimed 18%, Bristol-Myers 13% and Sterling 11%.

Tylenol Extra Strength Liquid, a new product this past year, was advertised only briefly on spot TV, according to BAR/LNA.

During 1987, Imodium-AD, an antidiarrheal drug, was introduced with a $5 million ad drive. Sesame Street Vitamins for Children was introduced with modest ad spending.

In 1988, Acuvue, the highly publicized disposable contact lens product, was introduced in July 1988 and created another division in the $500 million lens market. Bausch & Lomb and SeeQuence are soon to follow with disposable lenses of their own. The disposable lenses combat build-up and irritations in the eyes.

Also introduced were Johnson's Baby Oil Mousse, body oil; Tylenol Gelcaps, oval-shaped pills coated with gelatin designed to be easier to ingest and more tamperproof than capsules; and introduced in 1987, Johnson's Baby Sunblock.

Johnson & Johnson's Sundown Sunscreen is tied for third in the suncare market with Westwood's PreSun. The total market share of all suncare products is led by Schering-Plough, maker of Coppertone QT, with 38% of the market.

In other news, Retin-A, a 16-year-old anti-acne drug, may be reintroduced to the public as an anti-wrinkle cream, if approved by the FDA. It would become the only prescription anti-wrinkle cream on the market. Other OTC anti-wrinkle creams are being heavily scrutinized by the FDA. Sales are taking off without a formal reintroduction, said Mr. Isaly, who said initial control studies released in 1988 prove that Retin-A reduces photo aging, sometimes caused by sun exposure. Studies also show the cream does not reduce intrinsic aging, he said.

J&J was among the biggest spenders during ABC's 1988 Winter Olympics. The company's network TV spending for the first quarter 1988 totaled $41 million, according to BAR/LNA.

J&J was among the Reggie winners chosen by AA for best sales-promotion campaigns in 1987. J&J produced sales increases for several products with Shelter Aid, a cause-related marketing program to combat domestic violence. This October 1987 promotion for the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence resulted in a 6% point share increase for participating Johnson & Johnson's Personal Products brands.

S.C. Johnson & Son spent 1987 addressing stagnant sales by focusing on strengthening its core businesses of cleaning products and insecticides for both the consumer and the professional markets.

While the company remains committed to pursuing the lucrative and growing personal-care markets, the majority of the company's advertising and marketing activity in 1987 centered on its successful Raid insecticide line.

Except for Raid, which experienced a modest 3% gain, measured media support declined for all Johnson products. The privately-held company, whose sales have been static since 1984, pushed through a number of agency changes, and at least one of its major products, the Agree haircare line, was without an agency for virtually all of 1987.

Yet observers believe Johnson's severe advertising drought in retrospect will be viewed as an aberration. Johnson's strategy is to build sales through both internal new-product development and acquisitions that fit with its intent to be a larger player in personal care. The company focused on line extensions of established brands this year, but Johnson is expected to enter a new-product cycle that is certain to boost ad expenditures.

Johnson, which continues to dominate the insecticide category with a 47% share of the estimated $400 million (manufacturer's dollars) category, in mid-1988 revived Captain Raid, its bottle-shaped, bug-killing hero, after a 15-year hiatus from TV advertising.

The estimated $10 million image campaign was the first in years that didn't focus on the familiar animated Raid bugs. Raid agency Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, gave Captain Raid a snazzy image that included the ability to "laserize" bugs, not just zap them from existence.

Johnson, which spent $13.4 million in measured media spending on Raid, has maintained its 45% market share from 1986 to 1987, well ahead of Black Flag (American Home Products) and Combat (American Cyanamid) which are fighting for the No. 2 share at 18%.

Although measured media support for OFF! personal insect repellent dropped 26% to $1.7 million, the brand continued to lead the estimated $65 million category with more than a 50% market share. Cutters insect-repellent from Miles, a division of Bayer AG, is the second-leading brand.

with $4.3 million, down 40%. Pledge commands an estimated 35% share, leading the $140 million (manufacturer's level) furniture wax and polish category. This summer the company introduced new packaging for Pledge and a new fragrance to the line, Spring Fresh. Favor, another Johnson polishing aid, posted an 8% share of the category, although it had no measured media support.

Johnson's wax-free dusting aid and cleaner, Duster Plus, has an estimated 5% share of the $32 million dusting-aid segment, compared to 80% for segment leading Drackett Co.'s Endust. Duster Plus, which added a lemon-scented variety, drew $2 million in measured media in 1986, but none in 1987.

Between Future and Brite, Johnson holds a 60% share of the $100 million (manufacturer's level) floor-care category. Although the brands gained an estimated nine share points during the year, the category dropped from $160 million in sales in 1986. Future and Brite drew $2.3 million in measured media, a 71% decline from 1986.

Glade, Johnson's air freshener line, received $140,000 in measured media spending in 1987, a sharp contrast to 1986 when the company rolled out Glade II, a honey-combed, continuous-acting air freshener, with nearly $4 million in measured media support. Glade holds an estimated 14% of the $295 million (manufacturer's level) air freshener category, down four percentage points from 1986.

Glade Litterfresh, a powdered cat box deodorizer which is sprinkled onto cat litter, received $2.5 million in measured media support.

Shout prewash laundry soil and stain remover, which has a 32% share of the $160 million (manufacturer's level) category, received $2.1 million in measured media spending, down 50%. Johnson in mid-1988 introduced nationally a reformulated Shout liquid with improved stain-fighting ingredients. Shout is second to Dow Chemical's Texize division's Spray 'n Wash, which holds a 40% share of the category.

Rydelle Laboratories, Johnson's OTC drug division, signed an agreement in August 1988 to sell its Fiberall bulk-laxative line to Ciba-Geigy Corp., Summit, N.J. The line, supported with $2.1 million in measured media spending in 1987, holds a 6% share of the $170 million bulk-laxative segment. P&G's Metamucil is the leading bulk-laxative with more than a 60% market share.

Industry observers believe Rydelle wants to focus more on its skincare and oral-care product lines, and may make further acquisitions in those product categories. One new skincare effort is the West Coast test of 9-1-1 , a line of first-aid creams and sprays. Rydelle supported the Aveeno line of products for sensitive skin with $1.8 million, halving measured media support for the line.

Rydelle supported its Check-Up and Zact specialty toothpastes with $4 million in measured media. Check-Up, the first toothpaste marketed as a plaque-fighter, got an line extension in mid-1988 with Check-Up Gingival, designed to combat gingivitis, an inflammation of the gums. At the same time, the company began a magazine campaign to introduce Zact HP, a stain-remover with fluoride toothpaste. The line extensions are viewed as a market-share building effort, since the two brands did not gain share during the year. Both brands each hold less than a 1% share of the $1 billion category. By contrast, Procter & Gamble Co.'s Crest holds more than a 40% share of the category.

In the haircare market, which grew 6% to $3.96 billion in 1987, Johnson slipped to a 5.2% share in shampoos and an 8.1% conditioner share. L'Envie shampoo has dwindled to a negligible 0.8% share of the shampoo segment and a 1.6% conditioner share and the Halsa brand also is declining.

Agree shampoo posted a 1.9% share, virtually unchanged from the previous year, and its companion Agree conditioner remained at a 3% share. The line, backed by $2.5 million in measured media support, has been reformulated to include keratin and will be reintroduced this fall with a TV, radio, print and couponing campaign via new agency Lotas Minard Patton McIver, New York. The new generation of Agree includes regular, extra body and moisture rich shampoo and conditioner formulas.

Johnson, the No. 3 hand-lotion marketer in the $550 million category, slipped to an 11.6% share for its Curel and Soft Sense brands, down from 12.3% in 1986. Diana Temple, a Salomon Bros. analyst, believes Johnson will have to launch an aggressive marketing effort to sustain Curel, as sales of the brand dropped 10% in 1987. Curel holds a 6.3% share, she said, down from a 7.2% share the previous year. Johnson, which supported Curel with $2.4 million in measured spending, added a fragrance-free version of Curel early in 1988.

At the same time, Johnson launched the first body mousse for the mass market under the Soft Sense label, which appears to have strengthened sales. In July 1988, the company introduced Soft Sense Aloe Formula with Vitamin A for Sensitive Skin. The new formulation replaced the Soft Sense Extra Protection variety. Soft Sense's market share in 1987 remained 6%. The brand was supported with $2.6 million in measured media, a 13% drop from 1986.

The expiration of a patent covering Johnson's Edge shaving gel means stiffer competition for the leading brand in the $250 million shaving preparation category. Edge, supported with $1.4 million in measured media, holds a 26.5% dollar share, up slightly from a 25% share the previous year.

In the fourth-quarter of 1987, Johnson broke a new campaign featuring basketball stars Magic Johnson and Slick Watts using the Edge theme, "Not your ordinary shave," and emphasizing the brand's six-lubricant defense against razor irritation. In mid-1988, Johnson added natural aloe to its Edge sensitive skin formula.

In November 1987, Johnson pulled three haircare brands, worth about $15 million in billings, from J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago. The Halsa Swedish Botanical Formula haircare account went to Lotas Minard Patton McIver, New York. Johnson called the split a "mutual decision," reflecting JWT's concerns about conflicts at other offices. Thompson still handles Edge shaving gel and Soft Sense lotion. The Agree and L'Envie haircare lines were unassigned until mid-1988, when Johnson assigned the brands to Lotas Minard Patton McIver.

In August 1988, Johnson dropped HDM Dawson, Johns & Black, Chicago, as the agency for Pledge and Glade, in a move widely viewed as part of the company's agency consolidation plan. Johnson executives have been talking about consolidating U.S. agency assignments since earlier in the year, when the company made a similiar move in Europe where Johnson divided $60 million in billings primarily between DDB Needham Worldwide and Foote, Cone & Belding Communications. HDM was a Johnson agency only for about 20 months.

Kellogg Co., the nation's No. 1 marketer of ready-to-eat cereals, boosted total U.S. advertising a substantial 41.3% in 1987 to retain its lock on the $5.3 billion market, represented by its 42.5% share in pound volume and 42% share in dollars.

Such a heavy expenditure for such little share movement (Kellogg's poundage share actually slipped from 42.6% while dollars remained the same from 1986) might not seem justified if only existing products were backed, but half of the new ad dollars pushed new products.

Measured ad spending in 1987 grew by $90.5 million over the prior year, with $43.2 million of that backing five new cereals—Kellogg's Mueslix, Nutrific, Strawberry Squares, Pro Grain and Nutri-Grain Nuggets.

In fact, the host of new product rollouts and aggressive marketing by Kellogg and No. 2 cereal marketer General Mills, which finished 1987 with slightly lower pound and dollar market shares, in the long run could force other marketers from the segment, said Timothy Ramey, food industry analyst for County Securities, New York. He sees Kellogg after a 50% share of the ready-to-eat cereal market.

Kellogg in December consolidated its U.S. subsidiaries into Kellogg North America, which includes the U.S. Food Products division and Kellogg Canada Inc. Horst Schroeder, president of the U.S. food division, was named president of Kellogg North America and group exec VP of Kellogg Co.

The other organizational change in 1987 took place when Fearn International, Kellogg's foodservice arm, bought St. Louis Park, Minn.-based Now Foods Corp., a marketer of frozen soups, entrees and sauces—marking Kellogg Co.'s foray into the frozen foodservice foods market.

In June 1988, Kellogg sold Salada Foods to New York-based Redco Foods, and changed the name of its Canadian unit from Kellogg Salada Canada to Kellogg Canada Inc. In February 1988, Whitney's Foods was merged into Mrs. Smith's Frozen Foods Co.

In 1988, the company has continued its new-product momentum established in 1987, introducing five cereals: Nutri-Grain Biscuits, bite-sized Frosted Mini-Wheats, Nut & Honey Crunch Biscuits, two varieties of S.W. Graham Shredded Biscuits and Common Sense Oat Bran in two varieties.

Record capital spending of $478.4 million in 1987—45.3% higher than 1986 spending of $329.2 million—underscored Kellogg's intent to increase cereal production capacity and sales worldwide. In the U.S., Kellogg's Battle Creek cereal plant received a new addition in 1987 and this year Kellogg is building a new cereal plant in Memphis, Tenn.

According to figures from Wheat First Securities, Richmond, Va., Kellogg marketed five of the nation's top 10 cereals in 1987, equal with 1986. No. 1 Kellogg's Corn Flakes slipped from 6.6% to 6.3% in pound share, and from 4.5% to 4.2% in dollar share over No. 2-rated Kellogg's Sugar Frosted Flakes, which rated 5.9% and 5.5% in pound and dollar share, respectively. Corn Flakes got $21.7 million in measured spending, up 34%, and Sugar Frosted Flakes received $22.8 million, up 40%, according to BAR/LNA.

Other Kellogg's top 10 brands in pound and dollar shares were No. 4 Raisin Bran, 4.3% and 3.7%; No. 7 Rice Krispies, 3.6% and 3.8% and No. 8 Kellogg bran products, 3.5% and 2.8%. Raisin Bran received $23 million, up 33.7%, and Rice Krispies pulled $19.7 million, up 20.9%.

Kellogg's chief competitor, Minneapolis-based General Mills, placed two cereals in the top 10 while losing an overall 0.5 share points in 1987 pound and dollar market shares to 20.7% and 23.6%, respectively, according to Wheat First.

Among successful 1987 introductions was Mueslix, a European-style cereal in five grain and bran varieties. Mr. Ramey said Mueslix has garnered a 1% pound share of the market just 11 months after its October 1987 rollout. Mueslix received $7.1 million in measured spending in 1987, virtually all in network TV, according to BAR/LNA.

In other segments, Kellogg held the No. 1 position in the $263.6 million frozen waffle segment, taking a 44% total share with its Eggo frozen waffles in Nutri-Grain and Buttermilk varieties. Mrs. Smith's frozen pies command a top 56% share of the pie segment and Kellogg's Pop Tarts tops all competitors with a dominant 74% share of the $243 million toaster pastry segment.

In the $1 billion refrigerated yogurt market, one of the few product categories Kellogg doesn't dominate, Whitney's yogurt dropped to between 2% and 3%, from 4% in 1986—ranking well behind market leaders Dannon and Yoplait.

The past year K mart Corp. elected a new chairman, launched key image-building marketing programs and adopted a new diversification strategy that called for ventures in grocery and warehouse-style retail operations.

Increasingly intense competition is the driving force behind K mart's new strategies. Although Sears, Roebuck & Co., Chicago, remains the nation's top retailer, No. 2 K mart has been closing the gap and is trailing by only $2.5 billion in sales. But analysts say K mart needs to keep a wary eye on competitors sneaking up behind it, particularly Bentonville, Ark.-based Wal-Mart Stores, a regional discount chain that has gained the reputation of being the fastest-growing retailer in the U.S.

But Joseph Antonini, who stepped in last October as K mart's chairman, president and CEO following the September retirement of Bernard Fauber, came prepared for the fight. Although he's been K mart's chief for less than a year, he is widely acknowledged to have played a crucial role as the strategist in boosting K mart's sales and upgrading its image the past few years.

Last year K mart continued its strategy of updating the image of its 2,200-plus K mart stores from a no-frills discount store to a retailer of quality, brand-name merchandise. At the same time, it isn't forsaking its discount image. Last year it cut the prices of 2,[illegible]00 items and plans to cut more this year.

Mr. Antonini, who, as chief of K mart Apparel spearheaded its first celebrity promotion with the Jaclyn Smith Signature collection, established a marketing department to better coordinate merchandising, marketing and advertising in less than three weeks after taking his current post. He placed Michael Wellman, VP-marketing, at the head of the department.

The marketing department is helping K mart buyers create distinct programs for their departments. The goal behind each is to sell an entire lifestyle-oriented concept to consumers, making goods complementary so shoppers will want to buy several interrelated products rather than just one item.

The retailer's most notable effort in that direction is the Martha Stewart program for K mart's home fashion division, launched in August 1987. Ms. Stewart, author of several books and nationally syndicated newspaper columns on food and entertainment, is K mart's ad spokeswoman and lifestyle consultant. She also writes K mart Kornerstones, store-distributed brochures that give tips on such things as cooking and table decor.

The Martha Stewart program is part of K mart's effort to stay in tune with the typical K mart shopper, who has the same buying power he had 15 years ago, but is better educated, more sophisticated and has been exposed to "the good life." Ms. Stewart, who has an upscale following, is considered a guide to gracious, but affordable, living.

This year K mart cut back on its in-house newspaper inserts, which have touted individual sale items and prices, and is increasing its use of TV to build image. In February, K mart dropped one of its two weekly inserts, cutting about $50 million from that budget. Some of those funds were shifted to other media, primarily TV, increasing the billings of K mart agency Ross Roy Inc., Bloomfield Hills, Mich. and its New York subsidiary, Calet, Hirsch & Spector, to more than $[illegible]0 million from about $65 million in 1987.

Next year K mart will chop another $25 million from its budget as part of a cost-reduction strategy and a move for more efficient advertising. But the scaling back of ad budgets doesn't mean K mart is becoming a less aggressive marketer. In the past year it has launched a slew of new programs.

K mart sponsored the Winter Olympics and will do the same with the 1988 Summer Olympics. It also is backing the Professional Golfers' Association's Greater Greensboro Open.

K mart launched the K mart Gym Kids Club as part of its three-year sponsorship of the U.S. Gymnastics Federation and Summer Olympic Games.

This year K mart signed on pro golfer Fuzzy Zoeller as ad spokesman. He promoted golf equipment sold at K mart in TV and print advertising during the PGA tournament in early April. K mart also is co-sponsoring the car driven by Mario Andretti, who races in the Championship Auto Racing Teams' Indy series, and is doing local promotions with Mr. Andretti.

To improve customer service, K mart added in-store greeters and toll-free consumer response numbers. It also is making headway on its $1 billion retail automation program, which eventually will be used to centrally merchandise all K mart stores. At the end of 1987, new point-of-sale systems were installed in 759 stores. K mart plans for all stores to be hooked to the system by 1991.

This summer K mart joined Working Woman/McCalls in a new marketing effort. The publisher launched a magazine called Betsy McCall, aimed at girls ages 6 to 12. K mart is the sole retail advertiser and is distributing 1 million copies free in stores. The magazine also is inserted in McCall's, adding another 5 million to its circulation. K mart plans to develop programs with other magazines to target certain market segments, such as men and boys, it hasn't been as successful in reaching.

This summer, actress Jaclyn Smith signed a contract with K mart agreeing to act as ad spokeswoman for another three years. Also this summer K mart said it would begin testing Vanna White's dress collection in 200 stores, beginning around Christmas.

K mart has stepped up experimentation with convenience-related services in K mart stores. In the next few months it will start testing grocery departments in two stores.

The company also leases space in stores to various financial institutions as tests. About 385 insurance and financial boutiques in K mart stores scattered across the U.S. offer convenience services such as discount brokering, via Detroit-based Olde Discount Corp., and banking. It also has leased space in three Detroit-area stores to InsurUSA, an insurance distributor that sells American Automobile Association Michigan memberships and AAA's full line of insurance.

While K mart's growth strategies revolve primarily around K mart stores, its core business, the company also is looking at specialty retail operations for further growth. In late 1987 K mart announced plans to open a chain of hypermarkets in a joint venture with Bruno's, a Birmingham, Ala.-based supermarket chain. The first American Fare opens this fall in Atlanta. DiIorio, Wergeles, a New York-based subsidiary of Ross Roy, handles.

Last spring K mart acquired 51% of Makro Inc., a Cincinnati-based subsidiary of SHV Holdings, a Dutch company, that operates four membership warehouse-style stores in the U.S. K mart expects to have 20 Makro stores, each with annual sales of $75 million, by 1990.

K mart projected that American Fare and Makro, along with Walden Book Co., Pay Less Drug Stores Northwest and Builders Square, will account for 20% to 25% of K mart's total sales by 1990. Last year K mart opened 258 new specialty stores, and plans call for the opening of another 172 units in 1988.

Meanwhile, Builders Square is developing two subsidiaries, both warehouse-style store operations. This fall Builders Square will open two Office Square stores, which will sell office supplies, furniture and office equipment, in the Chicago area. Two Sports Giant sporting goods stores will open in the Detroit area next spring.

After spending much of the early 1980s growing—upping ad budgets, acquiring companies at a fast pace and aggressively introducing products—Kraft has changed its tune.

A primary focus now is a corporate-wide productivity program that Chairman John Richman said could add a total of $100 million to pretax profits by 1990; 1987 pretax profits were up 10.4%, to $435 million. Mr. Richman said Kraft traditionally has rotated between focusing on growth to focusing on returns; the company "now needs to make a consistent effort for full productivity in everything we do. That means taking a fresh look at everything, including advertising and sales costs."

Still, President and CEO Michael Miles said the company will end 1988 with a 10% increase in its worldwide ad spending, to about $500 million; excluding the $30 million budget of Duracell, sold in May, that amounts to an 18% increase over 1987. AA estimates its U.S. advertising portion to be $387.1 million, down 14.3%.

Part of the 1988 budget will be devoted to a new corporate ad campaign set to debut this fall via Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, carrying the theme "good food and good food ideas." The money budgeted for media—estimated at $10 million on an annualized basis—is being rechanneled from Kraft's decades-old sponsorship of network TV programs, which was discontinued this year.

At the same time, Kraft is battling the FTC over a deceptive advertising charge leveled at a 1984-85 campaign for Kraft Singles American cheese. One of the only major complaints filed by the FTC under the deregulation-minded Reagan Administration, the case currently is being heard before an FTC judge. Measured spending on Kraft Singles declined 40% to $9.6 million, according to BAR/LNA.

With the sale of its Duracell battery and Celestial Seasonings tea businesses, Kraft this year became a 100% food company for the first time in 30 years. This month, Kraft agreed to sell Celestial Seasonings to Vestar Capital Partners, New York, with current management participating in ownership. The company announced May 5, 1988, the sale of Duracell to Duracell Holdings Corp., an affiliate of Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. for $1.8 billion in cash. Duracell, with 1987 sales up 18% to $1.1 billion, represented 11% of the Kraft total.

Kraft is particularly keen on establishing a leadership position in frozen foods. Through its purchases of Lender's Bagel Bakery (1984), Tombstone Pizza (1985) and All-American Gourmet (1987), Kraft has reached what Chairman Richman calls a "critical mass" in frozen foods, with projected 1988 sales of $600 million. This places Kraft fifth with a 7.5% share of the prepared frozen-foods market worth $8 billion (entrees to desserts). Market leader is Campbell Soup Co. with a 15% share, followed by ConAgra 13.8%, Pillsbury 11% and Stouffer Foods (Nestle) 9.4%, and Kraft, according to Find/SVP.

Ernest Townsend, who came to Kraft in the All-American Gourmet deal, this year took over the reorganized frozen foods group. As president of All-American Gourmet, Mr. Townsend during 1987 oversaw the expansion of the company's successful Budget Gourmet frozen entree line into Slim Line reduced-calorie dinners, side dishes (a 20-item line) and three-dish dinners. The Budget Gourmet is the No. 2 brand of frozen single-dish entrees in the U.S., behind Stouffer's red box entrees. Measured spending on the line fell 35% to $8.7 million in 1987.

AAG last month began testing its second brand name, Eating Right, a line of 14 low-calorie, upscale frozen entrees. Eating Right will compete directly with Stouffer's Lean Cuisine and H.J. Heinz' Weight Watchers, which together control about 70% of the $1.5 billion market for low-calorie entrees. HDM, Los Angeles, is handling an estimated $10 million introductory TV and print campaign; DiIorio, Wergeles, New York, continues as agency for Budget Gourmet.

Tombstone Pizza sales were up 11% in 1987, as the store-delivered pizza expanded its distribution to 23 states representing about 30% of the U.S. marketplace. Tombstone claims a 13% share of the $1.5 billion U.S. frozen pizza business, behind Pillsbury Co.'s Jeno's, Pillsbury and Totino's brands. In 1987, Tombstone began testing individual microwaveable frozen pizzas in four varieties. Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Minneapolis, handles the account which drew $5.4 million in measured spending in 1987, up 45%.

Lender's sales rose 15% in 1987, boosted by a Burger King promotion in which 22 million Lender's bagels were sold in BK restaurants. The division introduced a Big'n Crusty bagel in early 1988.

Kraft's refrigerated products group experienced an 8% increase in sales to $2.37 billion in 1987, with volume gains in all three cheese categories: cream, natural and processed. Kraft added a number of new products under the 75-year-old Velveeta brand name—Velveeta shreds, cheese sauce and extra-thick slices—although it sliced Velveeta measured ad spending from 20.9 million to $9.7 million. The company also is testing 100% Natural String Cheese in Seattle, with TV ads from Leo Burnett USA, Chicago.

An intriguing development in refrigerated foods is Kraft's Chillery line of fresh refrigerated foods. Currently in Kansas test markets are Chillery salads; under development are entrees and desserts. Ads from Burnett support. With Chillery, Kraft goes head-to-head with Orval Kent Food Co., Wheeling, Ill. and Carnation Co., which this year introduced a line of Pasta & Cheese pastas and sauces.

Kraft also is testing Delissio All-in-One Pizza Kits and Marquessa chilled chocolates. FCB is handling the test campaign for Delissio.

Mixed results in Kraft's grocery and dairy groups have been addressed in 1987-88. In its grocery segment, sales were flat at $1.09 billion. Kraft boosted its market share in the $2 billion margarine category to 19.5%, but at a significant cost to profits. Its viscous dressings—including Kraft mayonnaise and Miracle Whip—suffered from a maturing market and new low-calorie entries from CPC International. Measured spending on the Kraft products also dropped 29.4% to $12.6 million.

Kraft also experienced flat sales for Thick 'N Spicy barbecue sauce which the company backed with $2.5 million in measured spending.

A bright spot was salad dressings, where Kraft's market-leading position was bolstered by the 1987 purchase of Anderson Clayton Foods from Quaker Oats Co. Earlier this year, Kraft began testing Seven Seas Light dressings and began an ad campaign for its Bull's-Eye barbecue sauce.

The Kraft dairy group, which has grown extensively through acquisition in the 1980s, posted sales of $749 million, up 20%.

This spring, Breyers, the country's top-selling ice cream, began testing Breyers Natural Light, a reduced calorie, low-fat frozen dessert, in Kansas and New England markets. Breyers Marble Classics, a premium-priced, seven-item line, has been expanded into 45% of the country. The Breyers line attracted $14.1 million in measured spending in 1987, up 55% from the prior year, according to BAR/LNA.

In April, the dairy group launched a new print and TV campaign for the Breyers line, tagged "Made the Breyers way. Naturally." Breyers is marketed in approximately 80% of the country; sales were up 10% in 1987.

Kraft markets Sealtest, the nation's No. 2 ice cream, and through its Light n'Lively and Breyers brands, is the No. 2 marketer of refrigerated yogurt.

Devoting most of 1987 to shoring up its operations after restructuring in 1986, Kroger Co. now faces a tough battle to remain independent in 1988 because of a takeover attempt expected from the Haft family (Dart Group).

Kroger announced in mid-September that it was looking into a $3.77 billion defensive restructuring that would result in/ pushed up debt and force the sale of assets. This came after the Haft family won government approval to acquire at least $15 million in Kroger stock.

During 1987, the nation's largest retail grocer boosted sales by 3.1% and rebuilt earnings which had been encumbered by an $82.3 million after-tax charge from the closure of unprofitable food stores in 1986. It also reduced corporate costs and sold a drug store division.

Advertising kept pace with rising sales and income as Kroger spent $225.1 million on advertising in 1987, up 6.9%, according to the company's 1987 10-K filing.

A company spokesman said the high 10-K figure includes spending for local newspaper ads, which is not monitored for this issue, the costs of toll-free lines to answer questions about meat preparation and a "meat excellence" merchandising program and heavy "co-op" ad programs with manufacturers who sell their goods through Kroger stores. AA's 1987 estimate of $115.3 million for Kroger is for national ad spending only.

Operationally, Kroger concentrated on local merchandising during 1987, trying to respond to consumers on a market-by-market and sometimes even store-by-store basis. The company also continued to experiment with newer retail formats during the year, opening five new Welcome warehouse-style stores and six new Price Savers Wholesale Warehouse units.

Kroger also launched an aggressive store growth plan for the Detroit area in 1987 after winning a favorable labor agreement there. Kroger acquired eight former Safeway stores in Dallas and reduced its administrative costs in the wake of a 1986 merger between its Dallas and Houston divisions. Texas has 150 of Kroger's 1,300 food stores. In July 1988, the company put its 46-unit Florida Choice division on the market, noting that the food stores in Florida were unprofitable.

More underproductive units and noncore assets are likely to be sold if the Haft buy-in materializes into a takeover attempt, because Kroger's potential anti-takeover game plan could include cash payments to shareholders to keep them loyal. The resulting debt from such payments could be covered through divesting such properties.

The Haft family has tried but failed to gain control of Safeway, Supermarkets General and Stop & Shop, although it has walked away from such attempts with huge profits from reselling the accumulated stock back to the companies.

Loews Corp. counted insurance and cigarettes as mainstays of its continued growth and profits again in 1987, backing these divisions with ad expenditures estimated at $115 million, down 21.2% from the previous year.

Income from the hotels division and other investments also showed hefty gains, including $17.7 million derived from Loews' 24.8% interest in CBS Inc. This was the equity position that helped pave the way for the election of Laurence A. Tisch, Loews chairman co-CEO (with his brother, Preston), as president-CEO of CBS in early 1987.

The company's Lorillard division, the nation's fourth largest cigarette marketer, weathered a year marked by cancer-related litigation and adverse court rulings for the tobacco industry, but still posted gains.

Early this year a federal court jury in Newark, N.J., found against Liggett Group, awarding $400,000 damages to the husband of a smoker who died of lung cancer in 1984. The plaintiff's lawyers, however, were unable to prove conspiracy between Liggett and co-defendants Philip Morris Inc. and Lorillard to keep the physical dangers of smoking from the public before 1966.

Lorillard's measured spending dropped 19% to $47.2 million in 1987, according to BAR/LNA, which monitors seven media. Lorillard also accounted for most of the $4 million in newspaper spending, which is not included in BAR/LNA totals for 1987. Loews' newspaper spending in 1986 was considerably higher at $8.1 million.

Despite a continuing annual decline and a 2.1% drop in industry-wide cigarette unit sales volume last year, Lorillard's unit sales declined only 1% which gave the company an 8.2% market share, up from 8.1% a year earlier. Lorillard ranks fourth behind Philip Morris with a 37.9% share, R.J. Reynolds at 32.6%, Brown & Williamson at 10.8%, and is followed by American Brands, 6.9%, and Liggett, 3.6%.

Lorillard also posted record dollar sales and its 12th straight year of record profits. Analysts point out that Lorillard's performance in a declining market was possible because industry-wide unit costs have risen only slightly, if at all, while consumer prices have been rising at nearly double-digit rates.

Lorillard posted a big 9.2% gain in sales of its full-price brands. It is the only cigarette manufacturer not involved in the generic and price/value category.

Newport remained the company's best-selling cigarette. The brand achieved a 4.2% market share in 1987 to place it sixth among cigarette brands in the U.S., according to the Maxwell report. The ten different Newport packings accounted for 50% of Lorillard's cigarette sales in 1987.

It trails the 23.6% share of Philip Morris' Marlboro; the 11.1% and 7.7% shares of the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s Winston and Salem, respectively, the 6.0% share of Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp.'s Kool and the 4.3% share held by P-M's Benson & Hedges in 1987. Only Newport and Philip Morris' Marlboro were among the full-price cigarettes to gain share points last year. Lorillard's Newport menthol cigarette is one of the fastest-growing within the brand, because of its popularity among young black smokers.

Promoted with the "Alive with pleasure" theme, Newport had the support of an estimated $33.2 million in measured media expenditures, primarily in magazines and outdoor, down slightly from 1986, according to BAR/LNA. In fact, spending in outdoor, the other major cigarette ad medium, also declined slightly.

Measured media spending for Kent, once Lorillard's leading brand, dropped to $8.7 million, down 21.8% from 1986. The former flagship brand recorded a 2.4% share of market and remains the 12th largest selling brand in the industry.

The True cigarette line in 1987 accounted for $4.3 million in measured media expenditures, down 69% from the previous year. In spite of a reduced ad budget, the True line maintained its 1.1% share of the market for the third consecutive year.

The main ad thrust in the True line supported True Gold brands introduced in 1985. That support came early in the calendar year because the brand was discontinued during the year. While halting manufacture of True Gold products, Lorillard changed the packaging on the original four True products from white to a contemporary silver package. A new ad campaign was launched in support of the repackaged True Silvers in the first quarter of 1988.

New Lorillard products which received introductory ad support in 1987 included Harley-Davidson cigarettes. The name was licensed from Milwaukee-based Harley-Davidson Motor Co. to brand a product geared to male smokers. This market segment is dominated by Philip Morris USA's Marlboro, the world's best-selling cigarette and R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s Winston.

The Harley-Davidson campaign received newspaper and outdoor advertising, along with free-standing inserts designed to reach 97% of men ages 25 to 47. With an eye on female smokers, last summer Lorillard introduced Newport Stripes, a 100mm cigarette with a white-tipped filter. The Stripes ad theme was "The latest in pleasure," building on Newport's long-running "Alive with pleasure" theme.

CNA Financial Corp., the Loews financial unit, also produced record growth and earnings in 1987. Advertising for the year totaled $5.9 million, down 9% from 1986.

"Bulova—It's America's Time" remained the umbrella theme for Loews' Bulova Watch division advertising, that drew $2.1 million in measured spending, up 16.6%. Major merchandising emphasis was given the Caravelle line to help it secure a strong position in the under-$100 market.

Bulova became the official supplier to the U.S. Olympic team, distributing watches to athletes in both Winter and Summer games. Special Olympic watches and clocks licensed by the U.S. Olympic Committee also were merchandised to the public.

In the Loews Hotels division, the Le Concorde hotel in Quebec City was purchased and extensive renovation at The Regency in New York and Loews Monte-Carlo in Monaco was completed. Comprehensive renewal work also was begun at other Loews hotel facilities. The hotels only receive minimal national ad spending.

The hotels group also marked the return of one of its most effective marketers, Preston R. Tisch, who resumed duties as president and co-CEO of Loews Corp., following a 19-month stint as U.S. Postmaster General.

Marriott Corp. cranked up its ad spending in 1987 as it consolidated acquisitions and expanded its hotel business to create a product for virtually every market segment.

Marriott, whose both sales and earnings have doubled in the past four years, in 1987 boosted measured spending for Marriott Hotels by 74% to $7.5 million; funneled $13.4 million into Roy Rogers Restaurants, up 34% and backed Bob's Big Boy family restaurants with $4 million, up 54%.

During the year, Marriott continued to move strongly into moderate and economy-priced hotels. It opened 14 full-service hotels and 40 moderate-priced Courtyard by Marriott hotels. And then earlier this year, disclosed plans to introduce Courtyard hotels in Great Britain. The company expects to have 110 Courtyard hotels on line by the end of the year.

In 1987, Marriott redoubled its attack on the moderate-priced segment with its acquisition of Residence Inn, which it promptly renamed Residence Inn by Marriott. The $260 million purchase added 12,300 suites to the Marriott chain.

Designed for customers who stay weeks or months in a hotel room, Residence does not compete directly with Courtyard. Marriott plans to double the more than 100 present units by the early 1990s, and to sell the company-owned Residence Inns to investors by the end of 1988.

In late 1987, Marriott also made a break for the economy segment of the market by opening its first Fairfield Inns. The first such hotels opened in Atlanta, Birmingham, Ala. and Detroit. TBWA Advertising of New York handled the advertising for the new hotels. The company plans to open another 20 Fairfield Inns by the end of 1988 and continue that expansion pace for several years.

This year, Marriott reported that it will continue to chase business in the economy market by spending $500 million over the next five years to develop a new line of economy motels.

The company also opened its first Marriott Suites hotel in 1987, which will compete for market share in the growing all-suites segment of the hotel business.

Although Marriott has a presence in every major U.S. market, the company is rolling out a smaller full-service hotel concept aimed at smaller, emerging markets.

Marriott's traditional full-service hotels led the industry for occupancy and profitability last year. Those results came after Marriott spent $100 million to refurbish a record 17,000 guest rooms. It plans to redo another 8,200 rooms in 1988.

The company also kicked off several promotional campaigns including an affinity credit card that is available as either a Visa or MasterCard. The card is designed for participants of the Honored Guests program, which offers bonus points for using Marriott hotels or other establishments.

By year-end 1987, Marriott had more than 100,000 hotel rooms in 361 properties worldwide—more than triple the 1980 number. By 1990, the company plans to add another 100,000 rooms.

In related businesses, Marriott began construction of two lifecare facilities in 1987, which it markets as "senior living services."

Marriott acquired Quornden Co. in July 1987. Quornden is a national leader in facilities management and plant operations.

After consolidating the 1986 acquisition of Saga Corp., the largest acquisition ever for Marriott, the company hoped to boost its food service market share, currently ranked second behind McDonald's. According to a report published in Nation's Business, Marriott held a 9.69% share as a result of $5.3 billion in 1987 sales, compared to McDonald's 10.4% share with $5.5 billion sales in food service management. In 1987, the division posted modest gains.

Airport operations and airline catering continued to lead the industry in 1987. Host International introduced food courts and expanded its fast food facilities in airports. However, Marriott's in-flight catering faced strong cost-cutting pressure from the airlines. Overall, the contract services segment of the business was not a strong performer in 1987.

More problems for Marriott surfaced in its restaurant operations. Big Boy rolled out several new dinners for its food bar in 1987, and added 96 new units to increase its market presence. But it still posted disappointing results. Eliot Benson, director of research for the Washington securities firm of Ferris & Co., said, "Bob's (Big Boy) has not lived up to expectations, and it is changing over to a new Marriott concept."

Marriott made an unsuccessful bid to acquire Denny's restaurants in 1987. It also juggled some of its other operations while selling more than 570 restaurants that it acquired when it bought Howard Johnson's and Saga Corp. It also sold off the Saga headquarters building and cut costs by consolidating Saga operations into existing Marriott facilities.

JB's Restaurants pulled its 110 JB's Big Boy restaurants out of the 900-unit chain after Marriott decided to sell the franchise rights for the family-style restaurants to Elias Bros. Restaurants.

As part of its agreement with Elias Bros., Marriott plans to convert its 200 some Big Boy restaurants into Allie's now being tested in California. Allie's is an updated and upgraded family dining version of the Big Boy restaurant offering a greater variety of menu selections including such things as breakfast tacos. Three Allies have opened, and when 10 conversions are completed, an Earle Palmer Brown TV campaign will kick in.

The Roy Rogers chain reported increased sales and profits in 1987, but it continues to suffer from weak customer awareness. Roy Rogers successfully introduced a new 69¢ cinnamon roll product in 1987, which helped build the breakfast and snack business. The product was introduced at the 150 outlets in Washington and Baltimore with a promotional campaign by Earle Palmer Brown.

Despite problems in the restaurant group, Benson said the company will continue to expand at or close to the company's stated objective of 20% a year. He pointed out that, while the most recent earnings are not on target, they still show strong growth.

"As they start cashing in on expansion, they will be able to get back to the 15% to 18% level," he said.

Mars Inc. hiked its 1987 ad budget 19.3% to finance an aggressive ad strategy for new products ranging from rice mixes to chocolate ice cream nuggets.

Mars' pet food division, Kal Kan Foods, rolled national this summer with a heavy TV and print schedule for Sheba, a premium cat food, which has enjoyed success in Europe. Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, handles.

The candy division, M&M/Mars, is testing new products, including an ice cream version of 3 Musketeers; Balisto, a chocolate-covered grain-based bar and PB Max, a peanut butter chocolate bar. And Mars' Uncle Ben's division has introduced Country Recipe Garden Pasta Salads and Suzi Wan rice dinner dishes.

M&M/Mars, by far the largest division of this secretive, privately-held company, has been through the most turmoil in the past year.

In December, Mars fired Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, and in January reassigned more than $30 million in assignments between remaining domestic Mars agencies Backer Spielvogel Bates and D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles.

Mars corporate executives insisted on firing Burnett because Burnett client H.J. Heinz Co. had become a stronger contender in pet foods with the purchase of new brands such as Campbell Soup Co.'s Champion Valley Farms, maker of Recipe dog food. While Burnett handled only candy and ice cream brands for Mars in the U.S., Mars prefers its agencies to handle both candy and pet food here and overseas. Burnett, then, could never have become an international agency for Mars, the corporate executives believed.

At the same time, Mars top executives, in a show of displeasure, yanked about $10 million in billing for the Milky Way brand from Backer Spielvogel Bates. Mars found distasteful BSB parent Saatchi & Saatchi's double-page newspaper ad trumpeting hefty 1987 profits for the mega-agency.

Its point made, Mars rewarded BSB with several Burnett assignments, including 3 Musketeers and PB Max, the new candy bar still in test in Illinois. BSB's new assignments in recent months include the 3 Musketeers ice cream bar, available this summer in Washington, D.C., Baltimore, Chicago and several midwestern markets. BSB continues to handle Kudos, Snickers, Starburst fruit chews and M&Ms, chocolate and peanut.

For Snickers, Mars in July agreed to join with MGM/UA Home Video, to promote the video release of the movie "Moonstruck." The video will begin with a 60-second spot for Snickers, and Mars also will contribute to advertising the cassette movie. Mars has participated in similar tie-ins with video cassettes in Europe.

DMB&B, New York, another longtime Mars agency, won Mars Bar from Burnett, as well as Milky Way from BSB. DMB&B, St. Louis, also picked up Twix and Balisto, a new product in test in small Western markets. Balisto is a chocolate-covered, grain-based bar which Mars already markets in Europe. DMB&B St. Louis continues to handle Skittles and Combos.

This summer, Grey Advertising, New York, was handed its first Mars domestic assignments, DoveBar and Rondos, with combined billing of about $10 million. DoveBar was with Burnett; Rondos with Tatham-Laird & Kudner, Chicago.

Grey has been a Mars agency since 1985, when Grey International signed on for pet food and candy assignments in Europe. Grey handles Sheba overseas.

M&M/Mars had bittersweet news in July, when archrival Hershey Foods purchased Cadbury's U.S. operations, which include Peter Paul Almond Joy, Mounds and Cadbury chocolate bars. In the U.S., Mars has a 37% share of the candy market, giving it a slim, 1% lead over Hershey. Now, with the Cadbury purchase, Hershey commands 39%. Analysts predict Mars will retaliate next year with even more new products.

Mars has not been successful, however, in the salty snacks category, where it has killed several of its brands during the last two years. Cornquistos, available in the West, were pulled last year, leaving Mars only with Combos, present in about 80% of the country. Mars is likely to turn instead to ice cream novelties to expand its product mix, rather than salty snacks.

M&M/Mars candy measured media spending rose 9% in 1987 to $111.2 million. Snack food advertising fell 14% to $4.6 million. According to BAR/LNA, which measures spending in seven media, monitored spending for the candy and snack brands included: 3 Musketeers, $5.2 million, up 44%; Kudos, $15.9 million, up 253%; M&M Candies, $23.9 million, down 10%; Mars Bar, $5.5 million, down 6%; Milky Way, $10 million, up 8%; Royal's (a discontinued brand), $200,000, down 83%; Skittles, $7.9 million, up 9%; Snickers, $25.4 million, down 7%; Starburst, $7.1 million, up 22%; Twix, $9.9 million, up 1%; Combos, $4.3 million, up 10%; Cornquistos, $300,000, down 50%.

Personnel changes at M&M/Mars in the past year saw Bill Hellegas, president of Uncle Ben's, move to president of M&M/Mars. He replaced Howard Walker, who retired. At Uncle Ben's, Al Aragona, the former VP-marketing and sales, was promoted to president to replace Mr. Hellegas. Bob Black replaced Mr. Aragona in marketing.

Uncle Ben's spent $30.7 million in measured media last year, an increase of 12% from 1986, according to BAR/LNA. Most of the increase came from the 1987 introduction of Suzi Wan dinner recipes, available in four flavors and backed with a $6.9 million campaign. Significantly less was spent behind Uncle Ben's Country Inn rice mixes, a two-year-old product available in 11 flavors. Advertising for 1987 was $5.6 million, according to BAR/LNA, down 57% from the previous year.

Uncle Ben's also continues to cut spending on its Uncle Ben's Side Dishes, down 91% to $100,000. A new product in 1987, Uncle Ben's Stuffing Blend rice mixes, was backed with a $4.7 million campaign. Backer Spielvogel Bates handles all Uncle Ben's brands. For the main brand, Uncle Ben's Rice, spending increased 3% to $13.3 million in 1987.

This year, Uncle Ben's introduced pasta salad mixes with garden vegetables, available in four flavors under the Country Recipe label.

The news at Kal Kan Foods was its introduction this summer of Sheba, a premium cat food available in four flavors and sold in easily opened foil packages. Total measured spending for Kal Kan increased 35% to $47.3 million. Measured spending for individual products includes: Crave Cat Food, $12.6 million, up 15%; Kal Kan Canned Cat Food, $17.6 million, up 114%; Kal Kan Pedigree Canned Dog Food, $16 million, up 64%; Mealtime Dry Dog Food, $4.7 million, down 2%, according to BAR/LNA. Another $1.1 million was spent for general promotion of Kal Kan pet foods.

The DoveBar International division, based in Chicago, and purchased by Mars in August 1986, saw advertising soar from $1.6 million in 1986 to $9.7 million in 1987. Spending includes $5.3 million for the DoveBar, the chocolate-covered ice cream bar, up 200% in 1987. DoveBar in the past year introduced a smaller-sized version of the bar, sold in multipacks.

The division also attempted several new products, including Forever Yours Sundaes, which had about $2.3 million in measured media in 1987; and Rondos Ice Cream Treats, with $2 million. Reportedly, Forever Yours has not proven successful and will be pulled, allowing DoveBar to concentrate on its original products, as well as Rondos, which are bite-sized DoveBar morsels.

In the coming year, other ice cream versions of popular Mars candy bars, like the 3 Musketeers Ice Cream Bar now in test, may be produced. Grey Advertising, New York, will handle most of the ice cream assignments, although BSB has 3 Musketeers.

Consolidation of three U.S. import/distributorships into a single corporate entity named Mazda Motor of America Inc. is expected to give focus and market responsiveness to Mazda in the U.S., after another year of declining worldwide sales and profits for the Japanese automaker.

Mazda's ad expenditures in this country also dipped slightly to $152.1 million, down 3.1% from a year earlier, despite several new introductions. Car and truck sales in the U.S. showed a corresponding decline, helping to set the stage for the reorganization of the U.S. operation.

Parent Mazda Motors Corp., Hiroshima, Japan, again felt the impact of the declining dollar. The strengthened yen undercut earnings severely despite corporate-wide, cost-cutting and shoring up of the company's worldwide marketing organization.

Sales and earnings of the parent company, Mazda Motor Corp., Hiroshima, Japan, which appear in the accompanying box for fiscal years ending Oct. 31, were converted from yen to dollars at a rate of Y161 = U.S.$1 for both years.

At the same time, worldwide unit shipments in fiscal 1987 ended Oct. 31, including knockdown sets, were up 5.8% over the previous year, to 1,486,157. Sales of passenger cars were up 14.4%, to 1,026,894 units, and sales of commercial vehicles declined 9.6% to 459,263 units.

The continuing slump in sales and earnings triggered the resignation late last year of Kenichi Yamamoto, president of the parent company.

Then in July 1988, the Japanese automaker merged its U.S. operations and became Mazda Motor of America Inc., with headquarters in Irvine, Calif. The new company now controls all importing, marketing and distribution of Mazda vehicles in the U.S. Those functions were previously handled by three regional groups with their own managements and business strategies. Mazda Motors of America (Central) served 31 Western and Midwestern states; Mazda Motors of America (East) was responsible for 18 Eastern states and Shelly Motors, an independent distributor, served Hawaii. Yoshinori Taura, formerly head of MMA (Central), was named president of the newly-formed Mazda Motor of America Inc.

Key objective of the streamlined Mazda group has been the setting up of a single national ad department. Marching orders are to tighten the ad focus, establish a stronger brand image and increase visibility and consumer awareness. The centralized operation should allow faster response in devising ad strategies and media plans, and reduce the number of people involved in decision-making, which hindered client/agency action in the past.

Mazda took a big step in 1987 when it began its first U.S. production run from its Flat Rock, Mich. plant operated by Mazda Motor Mfg.(USA) Corp. (MMUC). The plant's 1987 output consisted of the Mazda MX-6 luxury sports coupe and the Ford Probe, a compact front-wheel-drive car originally planned to replace the Mustang. About 60% of the plant's output, now rated at 240,000 units per year, consists of Ford Probes. Ford advertising does not mention Probe's Japanese roots. Ford owns 25% of Mazda.

With domestic production ensuring a supply of autos beyond import quotas, Mazda expanded its dealerships to 812 in 1988 from 703 at the close last year.

Sales of imported Mazdas totaled 330,053 units in the U.S.—206,354 cars, down 7.3% from a year earlier, and 123,699 trucks, down 21.2% from 1986. Mazda took a 6.5% share of the total import car market, down from 6.8% in 1986. Mazda auto sales represented 2% of the total U.S. market, behind Honda at 3%, Toyota's 5.7%, and Nissan's 3.9%.

Best selling models were in the popular 323 series (priced $5,999-$12,999), which accounted for 76,212 units, followed by the 626 models (priced $10,799-$17,599) at 74,439 units and the top-of-the-line RX-7s (priced $15,880-$22,340) at 38,345 units.

The four-wheel-steering system (4ws) from Mazda arrived in the U.S. last summer. Unlike the 4ws models introduced earlier by Honda, as a high-tech option on the sporty Prelude, Mazda introduced it on the 626 family cars. It promoted 4ws as a safety feature.

With truck sales of 123,699 units, down 21.2% from 1986, Mazda ranked third among the Japanese importers in the U.S. truck market, with a 2.49% share of the total market, after Toyota's 6.1%, Nissan's 4.3%, but ahead of Isuzu's 1.7% and Mitsubishi's 1%.

The company continued to market its compact pickup trucks the same way it sells cars: Homing in on the wealthy, urban customers. Despite the dismal truck picture last year, Mazda was able to report a 10% increase in sales for the first half of its 1988 fiscal year. The company reportedly is considering U.S. truck production through its Ford partner to counter the decrease in sales from exchange-rate-driven price increases and the 25% duty on the imported units.

Ford also plans to share production of its new 4-door Bronco II to give Mazda a sport-utility unit to be sold under the Mazda nameplate by U.S. dealers. The vehicle will be built at Ford's assembly plant in Louisville, Ky. and be sold through both franchises in the 1990 model year.

Corporate ads that rolled out in the fall of 1987 for the 1988 line featured actor James Garner emphasizing Mazda's commitment to customer satisfaction. (Mazda gave a 3 year/50,000 mile warranty to customers on all its vehicles.) Ads featured the new 929 luxury sedan, an updated 626 sedan and the MX-6 sports coupe produced by the Flat Rock, Mich., plant.

In mid-summer 1988, health problems of Mr. Garner and the arrival of a new marketing team at Mazda also prompted personnel changes at Foote, Cone & Belding, as well as the advertising approach being taken by the agency.

There was speculation that Mr. Garner's heart surgery problems could keep him off screen in some upcoming spots for the introduction of models in the 1989 line. If he doesn't appear in the 1989 campaign this fall, he may be used for voice-overs to retain continuity.

During calendar 1987, the restyled 323 and 626 models accounted for $36.2 million in measured media, most of it spot and network TV and magazines. Small truck advertising represented another $13.6 million in measured media.

Mazda expanded its sponsorship of NFL football, NCAA basketball and other sporting events. The "Mazda Sportslook" series of sports journalism programs on cable's ESPN continued for the eighth year. As the exclusive automotive sponsor, the company gave its name to the Mazda Gator Bowl in the post-college season football games. It also continued sponsorship of women's professional and senior professional golfing events.

MCA's toy products division, its big money loser in 1987, has continued to sap the company's income this year with overall ad spending adversely affected.

In the second quarter of 1988, MCA reported a 79.5% drop in net income to $8.1 million, resulting from a $35 million loss on defective Gotcha! guns, a now-discontinued product of MCA's LJN Toys. MCA also took a writedown on its investment in West Hartford, Conn.-based toymaker Coleco, which filed for bankruptcy protection in July.

In spite of the net income plunge, MCA showed higher revenues for the quarter, up 5.3% to $643.6 million. Operating income for filmed entertainment, the company's largest division, rose 19%, due to television syndication revenues and videocassette sales.

During 1987, MCA had record-high revenues but ailing net income. Operating income went up for the company's film, music and book divisions, but retail and mail order income decreased and toy products suffered a hefty loss. Measured advertising for the company dropped 13% to $54.4 million.

Its filmed entertainment division, which includes theatrical film and television products from Universal Studios, home video and pay TV and Universal Studios Tour, contributed 51.4% of MCA's revenues and 71.3% of its operating income. Operating income jumped 89.4%, largely because a weak TV syndication market resulted in a $50 million charge against operating income in 1986.

Although MCA films fared better in 1987 than in 1986, when box office sales for "Howard the Duck" totaled less than half of the reported $40 million the film cost, the company has yet to approach the success of its 1982 blockbuster, "E.T." Top performers were "Dragnet" and "The Secret of My Success." The former drew $30.1 million from theater rentals, while the latter pulled $29.5 million, according to Variety.

Although Universal released 15 films last year, compared to 12 in 1986, its market share slipped to 8% based on North American theatrical film rentals, according to Variety. This ranked Universal sixth among motion picture companies; Paramount leads with 20%. Universal ranked fourth in 1986 at 9%, and second in 1985, at 16%.

Measured advertising for theatrical films dropped 11.8% to $33.6 million, with the majority going to network TV, according to BAR/LNA. The levels of spending for new releases varied greatly, with "Dragnet," "The Secret of My Success," and "Harry and the Hendersons" receiving over $4 million each, and disappointing performers such as "Amazon Women on the Moon," "Hail, Hail Rock 'n' Roll," and "Walker" showing under $200,000.

The soft television syndication market for hour-length programs hit MCA-TV relatively hard. The company couldn't find buyers for "Miami Vice" and instead licensed it to the USA Network cable service, of which it owns 50%. MCA did better with its half-hour programs, obtaining renewals for "Charles in Charge," "Bustin' Loose" and "Puttin' on the Hits." This year it also will start to receive syndication revenues from "Kate and Allie."

In pay TV, MCA picked up revenues from "Back to the Future," "Out of Africa" and "Legal Eagles," and signed major licensing agreements, covering over 200 library titles, with Showtime and American Movie Classics.

MCA Home Video added almost 100 first-time releases, including "An American Tail," which became a 1 million-seller, as well as "Legal Eagles," "The Secret of My Success," "Howard The Duck," "Harry and the Hendersons" and "Psycho III." Measured ad spending went up 14.6% to $2.4 million with 45.8% going to magazines.

Universal Studios Tour reported record attendance of over 4 million, up 4%, a 12% increase in revenues, and 14% increase in operating income. Measured advertising for the tour increased 26% to $2.5 million, primarily on spot TV.

MCA is in the midst of a major expansion of its tourist attractions, which also has proved to be in competition with the Disney Co. In Orlando, home of Walt Disney World, Universal Studios Florida will begin production late this year and will offer its studio tour at the end of 1989. The attraction is a joint venture with Cineplex Odeon, a Toronto theater chain of which MCA owns 50%.

MCA's music division showed a 21.1% increase in operating income. Among MCA Records releases, the debut album by 16-year-old Tiffany scored triple platinum status (3 million in sales), and platinums went to albums by Belinda Carlisle, Jody Watley, George Strait, the late Patsy Cline and the soundtrack from "Beverly Hills Cop II."

Because of a significant drop in sales of 14 karat gold jewelry at its Spencer gift stores and Intrigue jewelry stores and kiosks, income for the retail and mail order division fell 38.2%. The division also includes A2Z-The Best of Everything stores.

Publishing Group) increased 9.3% to $18.1 million.

The company's toy products division, acquired in 1985, registered an operating loss of $36.4 million. The company attributes the dramatic loss to a significant downturn in the toy market, which coincided with aggressive expansion at MCA's LJN Toys, late delivery of several product lines and the costs of the expansion. Measured advertising for toys totaled $7.6 million, down 27.6%.

This was the first year in which MCA received income from its broadcasting division, formed in 1986 when the company agreed to acquire WWOR-TV in Secaucus, N.J.; the acquisition was completed in April 1987.

McDonald's Corp. early in 1988 opened its 10,000th store in a small Virginia town outside Washington. That milestone is a testament to the world's largest restaurant chain's ability to continue its growth despite the continual warnings that the fast-food business has reached its "saturation point" and in the face of sluggish growth by many of its competitors.

But McDonald's steady growth has been maintained by flexibility and change as well as by the protection afforded by its mass. Critics and competitors who suggested that McDonald's had run out of new ideas and would run out of steam were confounded by what the company and its franchisees achieved in 1987.

For one thing, McDonald's continued to grow faster than any other major fast-food chain. U.S. sales by company- and franchisee-owned restaurants rose 11% to $10.58 billion. The total fast-food industry grew at less than half that rate to $56 billion, giving Big Mac a 19% share.

Overseas McDonald's sales grew at an even more impressive rate, rising 30% to $3.75 billion (for company and franchised stores). At the end of 1987, there were 9,911 McDonald's restaurants open throughout the world, 7,567 of them in the U.S. The chain opened its first stores in Macau and Scotland.

This year McDonald's opened its first restaurant in a communist nation, Yugoslavia. It also achieved a goal it has pursued for more than a decade, signing an agreement to open restaurants in the Soviet Union.

Sales from company-owned and franchised restaurants grew to $4.89 billion worldwide in 1987, up 15.4%, while net income grew 24% to $596.5 million.

Total sales can be misleading, because of the number of stores opened and, in the case of overseas operations, by currency exchange-rate fluctuations. As a result, a more-telling industry benchmark is annual per-store sales. The average McDonald's restaurant open at least one year, had sales in 1987 of $1.5 million, up nearly 10% from $1.37 million in 1986. Neither Burger King nor Wendy's have been able yet to crack the $1 million mark.

As with most franchised systems, McDonald's advertising is funded by a combination of contributions from franchisees' sales and corporate monies. Since McDonald's has the most stores and the highest per-store sales average, it also is, and has been for many years, the biggest spender on advertising in its business.

According to its annual report, McDonald's Corp., its franchisees and its joint-venture partners spent a total of $918 million on advertising and promotion worldwide in 1987. That works out to 6.4% of global sales. In 1986, the McDonald's empire spent $789 million or 6.3% of worldwide sales.

An estimated $680 million of that total was spent on U.S. marketing by the company and its franchisees. That is 74% of the total, corresponding to the percentage of global sales accounted for by U.S. McDonald's restaurants.

McDonald's spent $366.5 million on measured media in 1986, up 9.8% from 1986. Once again, the vast majority (94%) of that media budget went to TV advertising. McDonald's $345 million TV (network and spot) budget represented 27% of the $1.3 million spent through that medium by the total U.S. restaurant industry in 1987.

But McDonald's heavy presence as a TV advertiser no longer is news. Its clout is something competitors have learned to live with and have stopped dreaming of someday matching.

What was news in 1987 was McDonald's embrace of print advertising. Beginning in January, it began running a series of page ads in a wide range of publications, touting the nutritiousness of its food. That effort ran throughout the year and has continued into 1988. In 1987, the chain spent $7.2 million on magazine advertising, compared with only $609,000 in 1986.

As the largest fast-food marketer, McDonald's also is the most visible and most closely monitored such company, and its nutrition print campaign drew some criticism.

The attorneys general of California, New York and Texas jointly sent a letter to the corporate headquarters in April 1987 asking that McDonald's pull the ads. They charged that the ads did not mention some menu items to which stated nutrition claims (such as lowered sodium content) did not apply and that the ad claims for low cholesterol levels in some items ignored the potential dangers in those products' levels of saturated fats.

McDonald's refused to withdraw its ads, although those to which critics had objected eventually were replaced. The chain said the changes were due simply to the normal cycling in of new executions rather than a response to criticisms.

What separates McDonald's from other marketers in the restaurant industry is the variety of its advertising messages, styles and strategies.

One of its most successful efforts was the late-1987 appearance of "Mac Tonight," a character with a crescent moon-shaped head used to promote special evening price discounts.

The character had been created and successfully used first by Davis, Johnson, Mogul & Colombatto, Los Angeles, agency for the Southern California operators co-op.

National agency Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, created commercials with the character, set to the song "Mack the Knife," and "Mac" became a national hit. McDonald's plans to air a second round of "Mac Tonight" commercials in 1988's fourth quarter and to license the character to apparel makers.

To keep its advertising messages fresh, McDonald's airs an enormous number (more than 200 annually) of different commercials each year. It also continually makes subtle adjustments in its advertising.

One of those changes was the introduction of a new song early in 1988. While the musical score was completely new, the theme changed only slightly, with "The good time great taste of McDonald's" replacing "It's a good time for the great taste of McDonald's."

McDonald's has found that it can reprise successful promotions as well as well-received advertising. In 1987 it ran a game-card promotion thematically tied to the popular board game Monopoly. That promotion was the most successful in its history, so it was run again in 1988. The second version of the Monopoly game involved prizes from General Motors' Oldsmobile division and giant retailer Sears, Roebuck & Co.

McDonald's and Sears have become partners in other ventures. The retailer in 1986 began offering an exclusive line of children's clothing called "McKids" and incorporating McDonald's distinctive Golden Arches logo. This year Sears is opening stand-alone McKids stores.

Another cooperative venture involves children's meals. Toy figurines representing characters in Walt Disney Co. animated films (such as "Bambi" in 1988) have been offered in McDonald's Happy Meals for children. Packaging directs parents' attention to Sears, where additional toys based on those films are sold.

McDonald's also has discovered that menu items can be used as promotional vehicles. Rather than permanently add new items to its menu, the chain has cycled several products in as limited-time features. These have included a Cheddar Melt sandwich (a hamburger with onions and cheese sauce on a rye bun), and variations on its Chicken McNuggets. In 1987, McDonald's offered Oriental dipping sauces for the chicken chunks; in 1988 it was Mexican salsas (coupled with a free Latin American coin offer).

Still in test are a reformulated McChicken chicken patty sandwich, a chicken version of its McD.L.T. sandwich and McPizza, a single-serving pizza product. New products are expected to bolster McDonald's breakfast menu in the next year as well.

Mobil Corp., in a move to reverse its unprofitable efforts to diversify, sold off Chicago-based retailer Montgomery Wards for $1.6 billion to an investment group headed by MW management.

The sale, finalized in June 1988, will significantly reduce Mobil's 1988 ad budget. In 1987, the retailer accounted for 15% of measured spending at Mobil, according to BAR/LNA totals.

A large chunk of Mobil's ad spending is attributed to Mobil Corp.'s sponsorship of various events including the Williams racing team in the Grand Prix Drivers Championship, the Mobil Track & Field Championship and Public Television's Masterpiece Theater. Mobil Corp. also continues as a corporate voice on national issues that affect the industry through advocacy advertisements. DDB Needham, New York, handles.

Mobil now has only two divisions that advertise consumer products. Mobil Oil's Marketing & Refining division, Stamford, Conn., markets gasolines and motor oils, and Mobil Chemical Co., also in Stamford, markets consumer chemical products including Hefty, Kordite and Baggies.

Mobil gasoline had another successful year as U.S. sales increased to 865,000 bbls. per day in 1987 from 841,000 bbls. in 1986. Leading in this climb was Mobil's Super Unleaded Plus with sales up 27%. Mobil Oil, in keeping up with its competitors, introduced its 93-octane Super Unleaded Plus in Chicago, St. Louis, Madison, Milwaukee and Green Bay, Wis. The new gasoline, according to the company, is designed to meet the needs of consumers wanting higher-quality and better performance fuels for their automobiles.

BAR/LNA does not break out spending for each gasoline but the entire line received $7.4 million in measured ad support, virtually unchanged from 1986. Mobil currently holds a 6.9% share of the auto gasoline market putting it in fifth place. Shell leads the market with a 9.4% share, followed by Chevron at 8.1%, Texaco at 7.6% and Amoco at 7%. Mobil expects further growth as it continues to modernize its service stations presently located in 32 markets spanning 16 states.

Mobil 1 synthetic lubricant was supported by $6.5 million in measured media, up 3.6% from 1986. DDB Needham, New York, demonstrated Mobil 1's ability to withstand extreme temperatures in a TV spot that used the talents of special-effects supervisor George Gibbs of "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom."

Mobil ranks fourth in the lubricants market with a 6.4% share behind Exxon (21.7%), Sun (10.8%) and Chevron (10.5%).

Mobil Chemical had record sales in 1987. Hefty, its offering in the plastic bag market, continued to fight First Brand's Glad bags for market leadership. The line currently holds a 31.6% share compared with Glad bags 32.5%. Hefty Cinch Sak led the brand's charge in 1987 with a 22% increase in sales. In a line extension, the company introduced a Super Cinch drawstring bag in 1988. For the year, measured ad support for the Hefty line grew 9.3% to $11.8 million.

Introduced in 1987 by Mobil Chemical was Lustra premium gift wrap made with Mobil's OPPalyte film. The product was supported by $404,000 in spot TV and initial supplies have sold out.

Results for the first-half of 1988 show earnings at $992 million, up 78% from the first half 1987. The increase comes mainly from record income for Mobil Chemical Co. In addition, auto gasoline sales grew by 2% and lubricants by 17%.

Monsanto, whose acquisition of G.D. Searle Co. in 1985 touched off a sweeping strategic repositioning within the company to free it from highly-cyclical commodity-type businesses, may discover that pivotal move to have been its bugbear.

Searle overnight made Monsanto the world's No. 1 marketer of aspartame. It also housed a potentially strong pharmaceutical unit that produced and marketed the Copper-7 intrauterine device. But Copper-7 figured into an $8.75 million judgment against Searle (Monsanto) this month in a St. Paul federal court.

The case could touch off a flood of lawsuits against Monsanto, shades of the Dalkon shield and A.H. Robins, because the woman involved in the case claimed the IUD led to sterility. The court found that Searle had failed to issue warnings about risks connected with the birth-control device and that the company had intentionally misrepresented the IUD. More than 10 million women used the device between 1974 and 1986.

The judgment comes at a time when the Searle drug unit seemed about to turn around its operations. Although it has not posted operating gains since the Monsanto buyout, it has a list of promising products in the regulatory pipeline. Searle alone spent 24% ($200 million) of its sales in 1987 for R&D, well above the pharmaceutical industry's 15% average.

These high R&D costs carried throughout the company, and along with charges related to restructuring, acquisitions and divestitures, kept the lid on earnings in 1987. Earnings climbed only 1% above 1986 levels on an 11% growth in sales. However, for the first six months of 1988, net income has increase 43% to $220 million as sales have grown 2% to $2.26 billion.

In measured advertising, Monsanto's biggest change was for household carpeting made of Wear-Dated Fibers with StainBlocker. Monsanto launched its largest ever campaign for Wear-Dated Fibers in February 1987 with $8.4 million in measured seven-media spending. Monsanto's campaign.

Monsanto's Wear-Dated Fibers campaign was partly a response to a significant increase in competition among the big four carpet makers, including Monsanto, Allied Corp.'s Allied Fibers division, E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. and 3M Co. The four companies collectively have spent up to $80 million in 1987, enlisting such spokesmen as comedian Don Rickles for Allied. DuPont initiated the big consumer advertising push behind carpets when it introduced its StainMaster brand in late 1986.

NutraSweet, the brand name for the aspartame-based sweetener developed by Searle in 1965 and launched in 1981, accounted for 46% of Monsanto's 1987 spending, or $20.4 million, down 17%.

Equal, the aspartame-based low-calorie tabletop sweetener, accounted for Monsanto's second-largest seven-media spending total, with $11 million in 1987 outlays, down 31%.

Aspartame captured more than 80% of the market for artificial sweeteners in 1987. That worldwide market is approaching $1 billion. Monsanto's NutraSweet unit recorded sales of $722 million in 1987, up 2% over 1986. Since 1985, sales of NutraSweet and Equal have grown 128%. Establishing brand preference is critical to the brand's future because the NutraSweet unit's patents on aspartame expire in 1992 in the U.S.

A NutraSweet spokesman said patterns of advertising spending will change as NutraSweet moves beyond the brand awareness stage.

"We've come a long way in established our identity, and now we're aiming to bridge the gap between brand loyalty and brand preference," the spokesman said.

The market for NutraSweet continues to expand rapidly. In June 1988, the FDA approved its use in yogurt, chocolate milk, aseptically-packaged fruit juices, Jell-O ready-to-serve, wine coolers and frozen desserts, and government approval was granted for NutraSweet in France. NutraSweet also petitioned the FDA in 1988 to approve use of an encapsulated form of NutraSweet in baked goods. The sweetener is now used in 1,200 brands worldwide, and in 34 food categories in the U.S. Carbonated beverages are believed to represent about half of the total sales of NutraSweet.

Another important product for the NutraSweet unit is Simplesse, an all-natural fat substitute that could dramatically reduce calories and cholesterol in different types of products, such as ice cream, cheese spreads and mayonnaise. Simplesse was introduced with much fanfare in January 1988, but came under FDA scrutiny in February. NutraSweet now plans to file a petition with FDA to affirm the product as "generally recognized as safe," which could take years.

Monsanto also had significant spending for Roundup and other row crop herbicides in 1987, using a strategy of price cutting to open new international markets. International sales of Monsanto herbicides boosted the Monsanto Agricultural Company's sales 10% in 1987 to $1.18 billion.

Worries about the depressed farm economy in the U.S., and uncertainty about acreage set-aside programs announced in 1986 led to lower levels of media spending. U.S. measured spot TV spending for Roundup fell 33% in 1987 to $1.2 million, according to BAR/LNA. For Lasso herbicide, spot TV spending fell 29% in 1987 to $2.4 million.

Monsanto herbicides received $6 million in measured spending for farm publications in 1987, up 9% over 1986. Farm spending figures supplied by AGRICOM are totals for companies without brand breakouts.

Also in May 1987, the agricultural division selected St. Louis-based Bartels, Carstens & Associates as agency of record, replacing its long-standing relationship with Muller Jordan Weiss, St. Louis.

Joining BC&A were three former Monsanto Agriculture Co. employees, including: Jim Robertson, formerly director marketing-communications, now senior VP; Dave Althaus, formerly marketing manager, now VP-acct super and Steve Barr, formerly manager of marketing communications, now VP-acct super. Also changing jobs was Joe Osborn, former VP-creative group head at Muller Jordan Weiss, who took the same position at BC&A.

Nestle SA expanded its Nestle and Carnation brands in the U.S. to a wide range of new products and line extensions, and, uncharacteristically, created a corporate ad campaign.

The world's largest food company also was at the forefront of one of the most significant and controversial issues facing advertisers and agencies in the late 1980s: agency compensation.

Nestle, which began serious consideration of a worldwide agency fee system in 1986, continued to explore ways to experiment with non-commission agency compensations to involve agencies more deeply in Nestle's total communications efforts.

It asked its major international agencies, including Lintas:Worldwide, McCann-Erickson, Publicis and J. Walter Thompson Co., to submit proposals regarding compensation and new ways to contribute to "totally integrated centralized communications orchestration." Nestle insisted the approach is not a cost-cutting measure. With the removal of commissions, the fee system could be augmented with incentives geared to the success of the brand and based on set criteria such as sales volume or brand share, sources said.

Nestle subsidiary Carnation Co. in May 1987 cut the commission it pays its ad agencies from 15% to 12%-13%. In addition, both Carnation and U.S. unit, Nestle Enterprises, consolidated large portions of their media buying in 1988.

Nestle Foods named J. Walter Thompson USA, New York, to handle its consolidated $18 million spot media buying assignment in a one-year test, affecting four of its other agencies. Three months earlier, Carnation consolidated its network TV buying at Lintas:New York, shifting an estimated $30 million in spending from Nestle in early 1988 said it was seriously considering a compensation clause in agency contracts that would require them to pay Nestle certain expenses should it have to find a new agency as a result of merger-related conflicts.

In early 1988, Nestle Enterprises, known for its reticence about publicizing its business and particularly financial matters, ran a 24-page color insert describing the company's operating units—Beech-Nut Nutrition Corp., Hills Bros. Coffee, L.J. Minor Inc. (foodservice), Nestle Foods Corp., Nestle Foods Puerto Rico, Stouffer Corp. and Wine World—in Forbes' 500 issue. The $800,000 insert marked the first time the company had done corporate advertising.

Nestle, through Carnation's newly-formed nutritional products division, made a long anticipated move into the U.S. infant formula market with the announcement that, in fall 1988, it will begin marketing Good Start H.A., a hypo-allergenic, whey-based infant formula and Good Nature, a follow-up formula for older babies eating solid food.

Nestle, which will have to battle formidable competition in the $1.6 billion U.S. infant formula market, is counting on the pristine, family-oriented image of its Carnation subsidiary to sidestep the problems associated with Nestle's marketing of formulas in the Third World.

In the late 1970s, Nestle waged a long battle with the World Health Organization over WHO's proposed marketing rules, but agreed to comply with the group's standards in early 1984. Consumer groups had boycotted the company, charging it with misleading uneducated mothers in developing nations.

Nestle, which planned to break with tradition in the U.S. formula industry and advertise the new formulas directly to mothers (consumer advertising is not used by the two leaders in the formula industry), took heat for those plans. The American Academy of Pediatrics opposed the company's plan to use the Carnation logo on an "information campaign," using print ads to alert new mothers to the problems of formula intolerance in their babies. Carnation finally bowed to pressure from the academy and agreed to drop its logo from the ads. It continues to negotiate with the academy for planned media advertising in support of Good Nature.

Nestle markets Good Start H.A. in West Germany, France, Belgium and Switzerland, but has no plans to market either formula in developing countries.

Bristol-Myers and Abbott Laboratories lead the U.S. formula market with 38% and 54% shares, respectively.

Nestle's other U.S. baby products unit, Beech-Nut Nutrition Corp., found itself in hot water in 1987. Beech-Nut pleaded guilty to federal charges that it had sold adulterated and mislabeled apple juice intended for babies and agreed to pay a $2 million fine and $140,000 Food & Drug Administration investigative costs. It also settled a class action suit about the juice for $7.5 million which provided a consumer cash fund and products for certain retailers. Beech-Nut, second runner in baby foods to Gerber Products Co., Fremont, Mich., increased measured ad spending for its baby foods 30% to $4.8 million.

Nestle raced to build a national presence in the fresh prepared-foods business in 1987 with the acquisition of Pasta & Cheese, Long Island City, N.Y. Through Carnation, Nestle repackaged the line of fresh pastas and pasta sauces under the Contadina Fresh brand name and prepared for a mid-1988 national rollout, supported by $20 million to $40 million in advertising. Carnation invested $100 million in the line, including acquisition costs and capital expenditures.

Other early players in the fresh prepared-foods market are Kraft Inc., which is testing a line of refrigerated line of salads, entrees and desserts under the Chillery brand, as well as Delissio All-in-One pizza kits, Di Giornio pasta and sauce dinners, and Marquessa chilled chocolates; General Foods, with its Culinova venture and Ronzoni refrigerated pastas and sauces and Campbell Soup Co., which continues to experiment with its Fresh Chef line.

In frozen foods, Nestle's Stouffer Foods Corp. continued to hold the lead in the $1.5 billion low-calorie entree segment with its Lean Cuisine brand, despite sluggish growth and intense competition from H.J. Heinz Co.'s Weight Watchers brand. The low-calorie industry segment grew 3.5% in sales in 1987, slightly more than the frozen dinner market as a whole. Together, Lean Cuisine and Weight Watchers control about 70% of the segment, with 40% and 30%, respectively.

Stouffer lowered Lean Cuisine's price tag about 10% in 1987 and decreased ad spending 24% to $10.1 million. The brand will face new competition in 1988 and 1989, from Sensible Chef by ConAgra, and from Eating Right, a new low-calorie entry from Kraft's All American Gourmet unit that is known for its Budget Gourmet line. Both Sensible Chef and Eating Right are currently in test.

Spending also decreased for Stouffer's Red Box line, down 50% to $5.4 million. In contrast, spending for the Dinner Supreme line, introduced in 1986, increased 116% to $6.8 million.

Stouffer leads frozen entrees overall, with an estimated 38.5% of the $3.5 billion market. The company in mid-1988 added Tatham-Laird & Kudner to its agency roster, giving the agency what is believed to be significant new product assignments.

Nestle Foods added Nestle Premium Ice Cream Bar to its frozen novelty line, consisting of Nestle Crunch Ice Cream bar and Nestle Quik on a stick, in 1987. It supported its frozen novelties with $3.9 million in media spending, up 143% from 1986.

Carnation increased its stake in the fast-growing $2.7 billion frozen treat segment, repackaging its entire line, including three new products, under the Carnation Ice Cream Treats brand. It followed the $40 million 1987 introduction of Heaven Bars, Heaven Sundaes, Fruit Scoops and Berry Swirl Bars, with Creamy Lites, Cheesecake Bars and Chocolate Malts in 1988.

Nestle, which made an unsuccessful run at Rowntree PLC, one of Britain's biggest confectioners, decreased overall spending for its confection brands in the U.S. Ad spending for Nestle's Morsels dropped 27% to $8.6 million. Measured spending for the company's candy products, including Nestle Crunch, Nestle White, Henri Nestle Premium Chocolates and Chunky, among others, also declined 46% to an estimated $8.2 million. The bulk of that was $6.2 million supporting Nestle Crunch, according to BAR/LNA.

Despite the decrease in spending, Nestle saw sales growth of 35% in its major candy brands in 1987 and held steady in its race with Cadbury for the third-ranking position in chocolates, behind Hershey Co. and M&M/Mars. Ad expenditure for candy brands could increase in 1988 and 1989 as a world cocoa glut drives ingredient prices down and frees up more funds for marketing.

In coffee, Nestle's other staple business, the company's Hill Bros. unit expanded distribution of its namesake brand into the Midwest, and hired its first Hispanic agency, La Agencia de Orci & Asociados, Los Angeles, for MJB coffee. Nestle Foods also jumped on the Colombian bandwagon in 1987, introducing Taster's Choice Colombian Select, in soluble and ground roast versions, with $8.7 million in ad spending—the company's largest expenditure for a single entry. Nestle's overall coffee spending dropped 7.5% to $31 million, despite consumer trends toward less coffee drinking.

Nestle passed Quaker Oats Co. to capture the No. 2 spot in the $5.7 billion pet-food market, despite sales growth of just 1% in 1987 for the industry as a whole. That fact that cats remain the convenience pet of choice benefited Nestle and its Carnation unit, because Carnation is a predominantly cat-food company, as opposed to Quaker's dog-food orientation.

Despite a drop in sales, Carnation's Come 'N Get It, moved into the No. 5 position in dry dog food, up a notch from 1986. Carnation completed national expansion for Grand Gourmet, a premium canned food for larger dogs, by the end of 1987. Grand Gourmet received $5.4 million in ad spending.

Carnation increased spending for premium entries Fancy Feast canned cat food, which received $11.5 million in ad support, and Mighty Dog canned dog food, which got $6.5 million. It virtually Nissan Motor Corp. USA, subsidiary of Nissan Motor Co., Tokyo, is seeking a clearer focus for its product line after suffering through another year of diffused regional advertising and continued brand identification problems.

Nissan's "corrective" steps in 1987 and early 1988 have included a change in its primary ad agencies, the selection of another agency for a new luxury car debut and the centralization of regional dealership advertising. Meanwhile, it maintained its ad spending levels of 1986 with 1987 expenditures of $181.4 million.

Sales and earnings in the accompanying box for both fiscal years were converted from yen to dollars at an average annual exchange rate of Y125 = $1.

In a move to gain better coordination of it market strategy, Nissan plans to cut all local ad funding for dealers by Oct. 1 and consolidate the business with its new national agency Chiat/Day, Los Angeles. This could remove Nissan billings from more than 30 agencies handling advertising for 62 Nissan dealer groups nationwide.

Although dealers groups can continue doing business as they choose, Nissan will stop its ad contributions to dealer associations. Those funds will be used by 11 regional general managers for market-by-market ads created by Chiat/Day.

Nissan will spend $60 to $80 million on regional advertising in the 1989 model year. Dealers spent $75 million for advertising in 1987, one-third of it from Nissan.

Nissan corporate goals for the U.S. for the early 1990s is the sale of one million vehicles annually and first place among foreign automakers (both U.S. and foreign production) by the early 1990s.

During 1987, Nissan unit sales were 820,866, up 24.6% from the prior year. Imports were 622,510 of the total, and represented a 13.2% decrease from the prior year. The total for imports and domestic production gave Nissan an 8% share of the U.S. car/truck market, behind Toyota at 9.1%, followed by Honda at 6.1% and Mazda at 3.2%.

Nissan's import total for cars and trucks gave it a 22% share of the import market, behind Toyota's 31.5%, but ahead of Honda, 12.4% and Mazda, 11.6%.

Nissan relies heavily on truck sales, which in 1987 were down 3.08% in the U.S. They fell from 30.7% of all Nissan units sold in the U.S. in 1986 to 26.3% in 1987. Nissan's Smyrna plant accounted for 78,678 of the truck unit sales, or 36.3% of the 216,514 compact trucks sold by Nissan for the year.

The Japan Automobile Manufacturers Assn. reports Nissan's worldwide domestic production in 1987 at 2,159,757 units including—1,750,970 cars and 401,330 trucks along with 7,457 other vehicles—down from 2,235,382 units or 3.3% from 1986. Nissan ranks second among Japanese auto producers, behind Toyota, followed by Mazda, Mitsubishi and Honda.

Squeezed by lower profits and the intense competition among economy models, Nissan plans to launch in fall 1989 a line of upscale luxury cars under the Infiniti nameplate to be supported by a separate U.S. dealer network. Models include a V-8 engine, four-door sedan and a six-cylinder sports car and four-wheel steering. Price: $30,000 to $40,000.

The move into the upscale market makes Nissan the second Japanese automaker to establish a special dealer network for luxury cars, well after Honda's Acura in 1986. Toyota also will begin importing a luxury car line known as Lexus in the 1989 model year.

Nissan expects Infiniti sales to be much smaller than Honda's Acura. Ultimately, annual volume may reach 150,000 units from some 300 dealers, but will not approach the 400,000 annual sales Honda is projecting by 1990. The first wave of 75 Infiniti dealers will begin selling cars in 1990.

Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, the Boston-based ad agency which won the estimated $60 million Infiniti account in early July, will set up a Los Angeles office. The launch will include both coasts. Infiniti is expected to draw $45-$60 million in ad spending in its introductory year.

Nissan studies have shown that since its name change from Datsun in 1984, only 45% of the general public knows the Nissan name. Last spring, after five years and hundreds of millions of ad dollars to build the Nissan name, consumer research revealed that unaided recall of Nissan as an automaker was still 20% lower than Datsun the year before the switch.

This "identity" crisis was quickly addressed by Chiat/Day, Los Angeles, which won the account in August 1987 from William Esty Co.

The new corporate image-building campaign, launched last October by Chiat/Day, was themed "Nissan: Built for the human race," and featured Nissan designers and engineers extolling the virtues of their product and how Nissan cars are built to fit into personal lifestyles.

Although the company appeared pleased with the campaign, some dealers believed it focused too much on image and not enough on sell.

First phase, from October through December, placed emphasis on the Nissan name. Performance, innovation and technology benefits were addressed in the second phase. Phase three ads were product-oriented and featured individual models, particularly on TV and print.

For 1988, Nissan's model lineup consisted mainly of holdovers from the previous year, including the popular Nissan Sentra models. Other holdovers included the Stanza, Pulsar NX, Maxima, 200SX, 300ZX and Stanza Wagon.

Nissan's seven-passenger van, introduced in 1987, accounted for $31 million of Nissan's $143.4 million in measured media expenditures. The new model offers dual air conditioning as standard on the XE and GXE models.

Import sales of the best-selling Sentra, priced at $6,699 for the standard five-speed, two-door sedan, accounted for 121,139 units, down 23.7% from 1986. However, when sales of 119,678 U.S.-built Sentras are included, the resulting 240,817 total makes it No. 1 selling "import" in the U.S. The Sentra received $13.6 million in measured ad spending, down 35% from 1986, according to BAR/LNA.

The 1987 output of Sentras (plus 78,678 pickup trucks) at the Nissan plant in Smyrna has enabled the company to import additional upscale models from Japan, easing the self-imposed restrictions of the Voluntary Restraint Agreement on all Japanese cars.

The Smyrna plant will be expanded within the next few years to build new products, which eventually could be exported to Japan and Europe.

Unit sales of other imported Nissan models in 1987, compared with the previous year, were Maxima 94,092 (112,755 in 1986), Stanza 64,745 (67,804), 300-ZX 33,649 (52,936), Pulsar 62,175 (47,350), 200-SX 30,196 (45,952).

During the year, car ad spending amounted to 60% of total measured media. Nissan compact trucks accounted for more than $33.8 million in measured media spending, the most of any Nissan product, according to BAR/LNA. Sales of small trucks entered a slump in 1987 in the U.S., but while Nissan sales were off modestly, Mazda's totals dropped 21.2% and Toyota's fell 20.9%. Mitsubishi bucked the trend with a 48.2% unit sales boost.

Noxell Corp., a Baltimore-based manufacturer of toiletries and household products including Cover Girl, Noxzema and Lestoil, upped its ad budget in 1987 to promote its new Clarion line of cosmetics and to fight off competition in other market segments.

Cover Girl, market share leader in the cosmetics market, maintained its position as the most heavily advertised cosmetic brand during 1987 with Cover Girl models Carol Alt, Christie Brinkley, Jennifer O'Neill and Renee Simonsen carrying the message to the public.

The 1987 sales for Cover Girl continued to pull away from top contender Maybelline from Schering-Plough. Among mass marketed lines of makeup, Cover Girl had 21% market share in 1987 vs. 18% for Maybelline. Schering-Plough consolidated Maybelline's $60 million ad account at DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, last year as part of its effort to fight off competition from Noxell.

In the liquid foundations line of facial makeup, Noxell posted gains from Replenishing Liquid and from consumer acceptance of its new Extremely Gentle line of fragrance free and hypo-allergenic makeup.

Consumer demand also increased for face powders, a market in which Cover Girl already claims a 50% share. Cover Girl Cheekers, a mini-blush product introduced in 1987, helped the company achieve record sales in the blush category.

Cover Girl Moisture Wear makeup posted growth attributed largely to new packaging graphics, market acceptance of its moisturizing benefits and the strength of the Moisture Wear ad campaign by Lintas:New York.

In response to increased demand for products for sensitive eyes, Cover Girl came out with Extremely Gentle Mascara. Retail sales audits credited Cover Girl with six of the top 10 selling mascaras.

Eye shadow sales also increased with the introduction of eight-kit shadows and a basic strengthening in its single shadow line, Cover Girl Pro-Colors, which was introduced in 1985. Sales for Pro Lining Pencils went up with the introduction of new shades, an upgraded product and aggressive advertising.

Nail enamel took a dip in 1987, following a national trend of weakening nail polish sales. But nail treatment products posted some gains.

Noxell repackaged its Cover Girl lips, and the line continued to increase its hold in the largest color cosmetic category.

Noxell eased off on advertising for Clarion, which rolled out nationally in September 1986. Designed for women with sensitive skin—a group Noxell estimates at half of all women—Clarion included 85 initial products. The national rollout of a line that large is almost unheard of in the industry, according to analyst Ben Peress at the Washington securities firm of Johnston, Lemon.

The Clarion product line, initially backed by $15 million in advertising from Lintas:New York, sold at prices 20% to 30% higher than the Cover Girl line. Clarion includes foundation, lip and eye products. Displays include a self-service computer to assist customers with a color analysis. In 1987, Clarion accounted for roughly $40 million in sales, which was substantially below earlier estimates of $50-$55 million.

Nonetheless, Clarion represents a very successful line for Noxell without cannibalizing sales from Cover Girl. The company plans to cash in on that success by expanding the line to about 150 products by the end of this year. Noxell projects a 20% sales jump from Clarion this year with the new products adding to the bottom line.

Earlier this year, Leo Burnett USA snatched the $20 million Clarion account away from Lintas, which has been a Noxell agency since the late 1940s. Industry estimates place Lintas' Noxell billings as high as $60 million.

Noxell also has increased its pricing for selective products to pass on higher packaging costs. That move could help profitability, but Mr. Peress warned that excessive price hikes could price the product too high for its target market.

In the toiletries market, Noxell has lost some market share to top contenders. It plans to combat those losses by stepping up marketing and putting more emphasis on new product development. In 1987, Noxzema Medicated Skin Cream continued as the top facial cleansing cream in the U.S. It brought out two new antiseptic skin cleansers and rang up unit and dollar gains.

Sales volume was up slightly in the household products division where lead product, Lestoil liquid cleaner, had a slight increase in sales. It was backed with $1.1 million in measured spending, down 16%, according to BAR/LNA.

Nynex Corp. outlined a strategy in 1987 centered on combining its telecommunications strength with an expanded range of products and services, including communications equipment, computer systems and software.

The strength of its telecommunications operation is apparent in the company's 1987 financial results in which the telephone subsidiaries, New York-based New York Telephone and Boston-based New England Telephone and Telegraph, accounted for 88% of the Nynex's $12.1 billion in operating revenues.

During the past year, Nynex spent $2.3 billion to upgrade networks of New England and New York Telephone, increasing digital access lines to 3.5 million and installing over 195,000 miles of fiber cable.

In measured media, New York Telephone ad dollars in 1987 nearly doubled to $18.3 million from 1986. Residence and business TV campaigns, both themed, "A Call Can Make a Difference," were designed to spur usage and increase revenues. The business campaign centered on call networking to achieve success. The residence portion focused on the emotional reward of a call.

late usage. The theme is, "Get Street Smart—Nothing's More New York than New York Telephone Public Phones."

Measured spending of $8.25 million was flat at New England Telephone. New England Telephone launched a campaign featuring conflict. The residential series that plays on a father and daughter who haven't talked to each other in two years. The business series focuses on a lost architectural design contract and efforts to get it back. Both series end happily, the conflicts resolved over the phone. The tag line is, "We're the one for you New England. New England Telephone and Telegraph."

New England Telephone residence usage is up 12.9% and business usage has improved 5% through June 1988, said Geraldine O'Brien, director of advertising.

A $15 million umbrella corporate awareness campaign, "The Answer is Nynex," kicked off in November 1987 and will run throughout 1988. The campaign is designed to heighten awareness to the Nynex name, especially outside its northeastern base.

"We needed to raise awareness that we're more than a phone company and Yellow Pages. Nynex owns several software companies. We're in computers with our business centers, and we have credit companies," said Sheila Enwright, staff director-corporate advertising. Nynex Corp. general promotion measured spending increased 74% to $4.7 million in 1987.

Spending for Nynex Information Resources jumped 33% to $8.4 million in 1987 as the division launched a bevy of new products and services. Resources entered new markets in 1987, with directories in northern New Jersey and southern Connecticut. The first specialty directory, Nynex Boaters, was introduced for Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Seven additional maritime advertising directories are planned this year for New York, Florida and California markets. A telemarketing services division was launched offering design of facilities, list management, training and consulting, and in October 1987, the division also introduced Fast Track Digital Directory, the Nynex white pages listings on compact disc.

New companies were added to Nynex Information Solutions group. In February 1987, Solutions acquired BIS Group, London, a software system for banking applications. This April it purchased CAP International, a Marshfield, Mass.-based marketing information company specializing in market research and consulting, and this June reached agreement to acquire the professional services and software products of New Jersey-based AGS Systems.

Nynex Business Information Systems markets business telecommunications systems and office automation products. Spending dropped substantially to $86,000 in 1987, from $2.6 million in 1986. Nynex Business Centers, with 80 outlets across the U.S., is second only to Businessland, with 94, in office automation retail centers, said StoreBoard Inc., a Dallas-based market research company for the computer industry. But business is believed to be down.

"I'm not convinced retail stores amount to anything for Nynex. Their basic business is pretty strong; growth is there in the long term," said Jack Grubman, analyst, PaineWebber, New York. "Overall, Nynex earnings have been slightly below expectation. Their overall core business, the telephone business, has been strong. That's offset by revenue problems in their unregulated businesses," he added.

Mr. Grubman is opposed to diversification for the Baby Bells, believing growth into areas that are a natural extension of the telephone business—cellular, cable TV—is the way to go. "Regional Bell operating companies run the risk (of going) from a well-managed telephone company to a mismanaged conglomerate," he said.

Nynex is already into cellular as its Mobile Communications division operates cellular systems in markets in New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. It will enter New Hampshire and will construct 40 new cells this year.

Judge Harold Green, who oversaw the breakup of AT&T and rules in such matters, will likely review the cable entry question. He did allow the regional Bells to get into transmission of data, although they could not create their own. That decision opens the door for videotex and other transmission.

"Nynex's outlook is good for its core business. The New York-Boston corridor is chock full of information intensive businesses that use telecommunications to a large degree . . . it is very fertile ground. The regulatory environment is one of the more favorable ones. But the management of Nynex has to prove they can be more innovative, like Bell Atlantic, in utilizing their network," Mr. Grubman said.

For retailing giant J.C. Penney Co. Inc., mid-1987 to mid-1988 was the year of the move.

The department store operator in spring 1987 announced it would relocate its corporate headquarters from New York City to Plano, Texas, a Dallas suburb—a move the company believes will save it between $60 million and $70 million annually from reduced overhead and travel expenses in a more centrally-located office.

And while Penney curtailed some of its projects during the move transition, it maintained its ad spending level. TV advertising claimed the largest measured total of $61.5 million, about the same for both years, with 80% of that in network TV, according to BAR/LNA.

The bulk of its budget continues to be devoted to local ROP newspaper advertising and to preprints. Preprints are counted as unmeasured advertising in this report. They traditionally account for the majority of the mega ad budgets of the major retailers. Penney's in-house ad department puts out a 16-to 48-page insert weekly.

Penney's move to Texas was one more step in a strategic realignment for Penney begun in 1983 when the company announced it would discontinue some of its traditional hard-good lines like paint and appliance to focus on clothing and home furnishings.

The company has continued to narrow its focus this year by announcing it would drop some of its smaller departments like photography and consumer electronics. At its annual meeting in May, the company said it has set aside nearly $60 million to renovate the 4.4 million sq. ft. of space freed up in its stores after closing these departments.

The move also helped Penney streamline its staff. When the move was announced, it had about 2,200 managers in New York City. When the move was completed, it had transferred 1,200 to the Dallas area, some of whom were personnel from regional operations who had spent time in New York training before moving to Texas. Penney hired 800 managers locally and eliminated 200 positions which it said were no longer needed because of improved technologies or streamlined operations.

The changes in personnel extended to the advertising department. Ad manager Ed Hayward said he hired about 60 people in Dallas to fill out his 80-member in-house staff, which was trimmed from 140 in New York City. He said because of the company's reorganization into fewer lines and a push for increased productivity, he has been able to operate with a leaner staff.

When Penney announced its move, its advertising agency N W Ayer, New York, announced it would open a Dallas office. Ayer has set up a full-service office and hired professionals locally to manage the office and work with creative efforts. The account is being handled by both Ayer offices.

While analysts said it's too early to judge the effects of replacing a sizable portion of the retailer's managers, some observers see the changes as reinforcing its realignment.

John Plummer, a partner in Ward Howell International, a New York executive recruiting firm that specializes in retail clients, said he believes Penney's replacement of about half of its management staff will strengthen the overall team. "They are bringing people in who are looking more toward the way the market is today than it was yesterday."

Edward Johnson, analyst with Johnson Redbook in New York, believes it will take months before actions by new managers affect company operations. "When you replace that many people, you get rid of a lot of deadwood, but you discombobulate operations, particularly in the buying department," he said. "Changes in buying won't show up for months."

Thus far, the move does not appear to be having a dramatic effect on the company's bottom line although its sales and net income for the second quarter of 1988 were down, a trend common in the sluggish retail environment.

For the three months ended July 30, Penney reported net income of $81 million on sales of $3.2 billion compared with net income of $103 million on sales of $3.4 billion for the same quarter in 1987. However, the company showed an increase in net income for the first half of 1988, up from $157 million in 1987 to $212 million this year.

While the move has created some short-term disruptions for the company, longer-term or long-planned programs continued. Last fall Penney kicked off a test of Telaction, its home shopping system, in the Chicago area. Penney began planning the project in late 1985 and has spent more than $60 million to get the interactive shopping service started, which cable subscribers can access by using a push-button telephone. If the test is successful, it will expand the offering to other markets.

The company also continued its series of in-store special events emphasizing the offerings of a specific country. In early 1988, it was India. The effort, dubbed "Expedition India," was backed with a $12 million, two-week ad campaign including a 30-second spot produced by Ayer.

PepsiCo's continued diversification into the fast-food business has replaced soft drinks as its biggest category by both sales and advertising in 1987, although on the creative side, the ad beat is definitely with Pepsi because the year found Michael Jackson pushing the cola to his big hit, "Bad."

Mr. Jackson received a reported $10 million-plus for his part in the BBDO Worldwide commercials that aired October. Then this year, Pepsi added heavyweight boxing champion Michael Tyson to plug Diet Pepsi in an attempt to shore up its fast-eroding share in that market segment.

Total sales for PepsiCo rose by more than 26% in 1987 and those increases came without adding major new divisions, as the company had in 1986 when it acquired Kentucky Fried Chicken and Seven-Up International.

For the diversifying PepsiCo, soft drinks now account for only about 36% of its business and have been eclipsed in total sales by the restaurant segment which brought in about $85 million more than soft drinks during 1987. Restaurants also accounted for 59% of PepsiCo's total measured ad spending, according to BAR/LNA, which monitors seven national media.

PepsiCo's tapping of big-time presenters has shown it to be an aggressive marketer against old nemesis Coca-Cola. But, on the production side of its soft drink business, it has proved more reactive. Coca-Cola has been rapidly buying up independent soft-drink bottlers and spinning off its bottling operation into a separate but controlled company thereby gaining greater control of its reproduction and distribution operation.

Pepsi has followed though in more modest fashion. The company thwarted IC Industries' attempt to buy outright RKO Enterprises bottling operation from parent GenCorp. Earlier this year, PepsiCo and IC solved the dispute by agreeing to form a joint venture by merging into one unit, the RKO unit, IC's Pepsi-Cola General Bottlers Inc. and two other PepsiCo-owned bottlers in the Midwest. Pepsi took a 20% interest in the venture, which became the largest Pepsi bottling operation not controlled by PepsiCo.

This June the company agreed to pay $705 million for the soft drink bottling operations of Grand Metropolitan Inc., the third largest independent Pepsi bottler in the U.S., accounting for about 3.6% of Pepsi's total sales.

Overall, Pepsi continues to chase Coke for soft drink market share. While both companies continue to make small advances in total market share at the expense of their smaller competitors, PepsiCo has been unable to close the gap on Coca-Cola, according to Beverage Industry, a trade journal.

The magazine reports that Coca-Cola brands claimed a 40% share of the soft-drink market in 1987 while various PepsiCo brands accounted for 30.9% of total sales. Both figures represented a gain of about two-tenths of a point over the previous year.

But in the diet soft drink market, Pepsi lost ground to Coke. While various Coke diet brands grew from 42.4% in 1986 to 43.9% of that market segment in 1987, Pepsi's share of the market slipped from 31% to 27.1%.

Beverage Industry editor Gary Hemphill noted that the "Cola wars" appear to have shifted to the sugarless arena. "Traditionally, the first quarter of the year is considered the big period of diet soft drink marketing because people are trying to get rid of weight they put on during the holidays. This year, that just spilled over into the summer."

The only category in which Pepsi holds a lead is in the juice-added market where Slice and Diet Slice are both segment leaders. But even that market is a troubled one, Pepsi officials have admitted. In November, the company transferred its $30 million account for Slice from J. Walter Thompson USA to BBDO.

At the time, Pepsi had seen the Slice slice of the total soft-drink market fall from 3.8% in 1986 to 2.7%. The moves came at a time when the entire juice-added market was in decline. Juice-added drinks accounted for 4.9% of the total 1986 soft-drink market and then declined to 4.5% last year. The 1988 figures are expected to put the share even lower.

The Slice move was not the only major advertising switch for PepsiCo. BBDO also won control of the $25 million Pizza Hut account from both Chiat/Day, Los Angeles, which handled creative, and DeWitt Media, New York, which handled media buying.

While snack food revenues increased 6% at Frito-Lay, PepsiCo's big Dallas-based unit, Frito-Lay held onto its market supremacy with a 51% share of estimated $6 billion snack food market. Four Frito-Lay brands were among the top 10 sellers among all dry food brands in supermarkets.

The trio of fast food chains—Kentucky Fried Chicken, Pizza Hut and Taco Bell—gave PepsiCo the world's largest restaurant system with 16,500 stores. Symbolically, for the world's most populated market, KFC opened the world's largest fast-food restaurant in Beijing. By itself, the overall KFC operation contributed $4.1 billion to PepsiCo's total $11.5 billion in worldwide sales.

It also was a year of significant international expansion for PepsiCo, from the agreement with the Soviet Union to open a Pizza Hut restaurant in Moscow to a vastly increased marketing program for Pepsi in Brazil, the world's third largest soft-drink market. Worldwide, Pepsi reported spending $840 million in advertising during 1987, up 19.7 from 1986.

Brand Pepsi was given some $60 million of U.S. measured spending. While the Messrs. Jackson and Tyson ads were the high profile elements in the PepsiCo advertising strategy, the company also increased ad spending for Kentucky Fried Chicken through J. Walter Thompson. KFC received the highest measured expenditure of any PepsiCo brand—$109 million, some 63% in network TV and 35% in spot TV, according to BAR/LNA.

PepsiCo is the nation's largest advertiser on spot TV where it funnels most of its advertising for the Pepsi brand. By contrast, Coca-Cola spending for the Coke brand is divided equally between network and spot TV.

Although Pfizer Inc. continues to put its muscle behind its lucrative pharmaceuticals division, it unveiled several new consumer products in 1987 to help drive up sales volume by 9% to $4.9 billion in fiscal 1987.

Slow growth in Pfizer's traditionally most profitable sector, pharmaceuticals, sapped profitability. Worldwide net income increased only 4.5%, far behind the 13.8% gain produced in 1986. U.S. operating profits declined 7.7%.

The two consumer products division, Leeming/Pacquin and Coty, accounted for sales of $396 million, up 8.5%. The division funneled heavy advertising behind the introduction of Equalactin, an OTC remedy for both diarrhea and constipation launched in mid-1987. Measured ad spending came to $6 million.

The major expenditure was a TV campaign featuring a tortoise and hare to depict the two ends of the extreme treated by the product. In-house agency Adforce handles the account.

Equalactin specifically acts to restore the bowel's normal water balance. Pfizer estimates more than 20 million people in the U.S. suffer from this problem. Retailers report that Equalactin, which has no direct rival, has done very well in the estimated $700 million laxative/anti-diarrhea category. During calendar 1987, its manufacturers sales reached $1 million, according to senior consultant Jim Saberton of Charles Kline & Co., Fairfield, N.J. "That appears small because the product was rolled out mid-year and did not have full distribution until year end. "We are expecting it to do quite well in 1988," he said. Although Equalactin treats both constipation and diarrhea, it is tracked along with anti-diarrhea products giving it over a 2% share of the category, according to Mr. Saberton, who added that Johnson & Johnson's McNeil division's, Imodium A-D, newly-approved OTC remedy will be stiff competition for other anti-diarrhea products.

Ben-Gay and Barbasol were moved from McCaffrey & McCall to Ally & Gargano during the year in an effort to add new life to mature products. According to a company spokesman, the company wanted new creative, especially for Ben-Gay. The once dormant sore-muscle reliever category has been undergoing renewed growth and Leeming/Pacquin wanted to capitalize on it, he said. Measured spending also declined 20.3% to $5.5 million in 1987. Marketing thrust continues to address arthritis sufferers and consumers with sports-related aches for Ben-Gay, which holds a 40% share of the medicated skin product and liniment market, well ahead of No. 2 Thompson Medical Co.'s Aspercreme at 20%.

Visine, whose measured spending dipped 9.8% to $12 million, still leads the market although it faces stiff competition from Schering-Plough's Ocuclear, a new contender in the eye-drop business, and Abbott Lab's Murine.

Even competition featuring technological breakthroughs cannot seem to put a dent in Barbasol's strength in the shave cream market. It commands about a 20% share of the $300 million market, and that without much measured ad spending. Barbasol got only $1.2 million in measured spending, down 37%. A gel form is in the planning stages, sources report.

The Leeming/Pacquin division got a new category with the acquisition of Plax, an anti-plaque dental rinse which came with Pfizer's buyout of Oral Research Laboratories Inc. Although Plax controls less than 5% of the total market, it has caused category leaders like Colgate-Palmolive (Colgate toothpaste) and Procter & Gamble (Crest) to delve deeper into the concept of end-benefits, retailers explain.

Pfizer's Coty unit remains the sales leader in mass fragrances at most leading drug chains. The $949 million men's fragrance category is lead by Coty's Stetson with an 8.5% share, according to a leading warehouse tracking service. That's up from only 4.8% just four years ago and it outpaces perennial leader, Shulton's Old Spice with an 8.3% share. "They captured a spirit and they've stood by it and made it a best seller," observes Allan G. Mottus, an industry consultant.

Measured spending behind Stetson rose to $6.6 million, up 10.9% from 1986. A new men's fragrance called Iron debuted during 1987, backed by a $5 million budget. Retailers say Iron has been a solid performer, but not as dynamic as Stetson. Stetson, Coty's Men's Musk and Iron produce sales of $65 million. Coty backed off the musk classification in 1987, to emphasize its non-musk scents. Spending against men's musk declined from $2.1 million in 1986 to $947,000.

But this year, Coty is rolling out a novelty musk scent called Mexicali Musk, a tequila-like bottle featuring a plastic worm inside. The idea, according to a company spokesman, is to take advantage of the nation's love of Mexican beer and foods.

Lady Stetson has been a big item for mass retailers and takes honors as one of the top three sellers in mass outlets Coty plunked down over $8.3 million to put it there during 1987. The company said sales improved by more than 73% since its launch in 1986. Exclamation, launched this year, is an upscale mass fragrance set off in chic black and white packaging. Agency for the $5 million budget is Ketchum/Hicks & Greist. Pfizer also acquired Sand & Sable fragrance in 1987 and expanded the brand's market behond the South where it is better known.

Coty put spending behind its Overnight Success Cream, a product ripe for the booming mass skincare market. Measured spending totaled over $2.3 million.

The success of the consumer products division in 1987 is just icing for Pfizer. The real gem is its healthcare division which has continually produced breakthrough drugs. Sales of $3.1 billion in this division account for 63% of net sales.

Most of its new pharmaceuticals are promoted directly to physicians and therefore have no measured spending. Pfizer spends millions of dollars in staffing a detail force to physicians as well as sampling efforts. The bevy of items accounts for a climb in unmeasured spending.

Pfizer also has been using some consumer advertising for its ethical pharmaceutical since 1986. Diabinese, an oral hypogycemic drug for advertising to consumers in 1986, received $163,000 in measured spending in 1987, up from $79,000. Measured spending for Pfizer's general quality-of-life image campaign was $2.6 million.

Although several Pfizer pharmaceuticals had a rough year, industry analysts predict a major turnaround in 1988. "Feldene, the largest-selling anti-inflammatory, is on the road to recovery," said Joseph P. Riccardo of Bear Stearns, New York. Feldene's sales should hit $600 million in 1988, an increase of $76 million, according to Mr. Riccardo. He blames Pfizer's lackluster performance on a mature product line that will shortly be corrected by new products in the pipeline.

In specialty chemicals, two products currently awaiting FDA approval are chymosin, for use in cheese-making, and alitame, a high-intensity sweetener. Pfizer filed for approval of chymosin, the first for a food using recombinant DNA technology. Alitame is 2,000 times sweeter than sugar and has higher heat stability. This allows it to be used in baking.

Philip Morris Cos. has adopted a get-tough stance to beef up earnings in virtually all its industry categories—from the company's strong defense of tobacco marketing to its directives to its food and beer divisions.

During 1987, Philip Morris managed to remain tops in the $33.7 billion tobacco market with a record 37.9% share, up 1.1 share points—this in an industry laboring under a 2.5% unit decline influenced by the loss of its first liability suit, the U.S. Surgeon General's branding of smoking as addictive, Canada's adoption of a full ad ban and the proliferation of anti-smoking laws on the local level.

PM came out swinging in the summer of 1988 with a $5 million ad effort, created by Reuben Smith Associates, Nashville, reminding American industry that smokers are a potent "economic force" with "$1 trillion in financial power."

This followed its unusual display of solidarity with competitor, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco, when PM supported RJR after it fired Nabisco agency Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton for creating anti-smoking ads for another client Northwest Airlines. After the incident, Northwest said PM barraged its offices with almost 7,000 Mailgrams and disruptive calls to the airline's reservation system.

PM's hard-nosed policy extended to its General Foods and Miller Brewing subsidiaries when its informed them that it was losing patience with their low earnings performance. The profit pressure triggered shock waves and changes at Rye Brook, N.Y.-based GF, including a restructuring, an incentive compensation package for ad agencies and the departure of GF's top executive, Philip Smith.

Miller also was jolted by PM's profit mandate, resulting in a new president for the Milwaukee brewer and the exploration of new creative for the company's $75 million Miller Lite campaign. Miller President William Howell, 57, took early retirement in January 1988. He was succeeded by Leonard Goldstein, 60, the company's former senior VP-sales.

In July 1988, Mr. Goldstein ordered up new creative executions for the brewer's Miller Lite campaign created by Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide. At presstime, no decision had been made whether Miller would drop its 15-year-old "Less filling. Tastes great" campaign. Agencies involved in the brainstorming are currently on the Miller roster, including New York-based BSBW, J. Walter Thompson USA (New York and Chicago) and Leo Burnett USA, Chicago.

That same month, Phil Smith, GF's54-year-old president-CEO and PM vice chairman, announced he would leave to join Pillsbury Co. Mr. Smith was said to be chafing over his inability to "run his own show" at GF.

It was Mr. Smith who masterminded the restructuring of GF. Through the restructuring, nearly 25% of the company's corporate staff was eliminated and General Foods Corp. became a holding company for three independent units, General Foods USA, GF Coffee & International and Oscar Mayer Co. Ervin Shames, 47, was named president-CEO of GF USA; Robert Seelert, 44, was named president-CEO, GF Coffee & International and James McVey, 55, became president-CEO Oscar Mayer. PM will not fill Mr. Smith's post.

The restructuring held up compensation negotiations with GF's agencies until May, when an incentive compensation package was approved awarding up to 3 percentage points more in revenue for outstanding advertising to its agencies. Based on an A, B, or C grading system, the top percentage is believed now to be 16.3%. The package applies only to GF USA.

PM's 37.9% share in the cigarette market helped PM keep its distance from runner-up RJR, whose 32.6% share rose only 0.3 share points from the previous year, according to John Maxwell, analyst with Wheat First Securities, Richmond, Va. Brown & Williamson Tobacco was third at 10.8%, a drop of 0.9 share points; followed by Lorillard, 8.2% share, up 0.1 share points; American Brands, 6.9% share, down 0.3 share points and Liggett & Myers 3.6%, down 0.3 share points.

RJR launched an attack on Marlboro country in summer 1988 with new creative for its Camel and Salem brands designed to bring in younger smokers, which are Marlboro's main franchise. But Marlboro still leads the pack of all cigarette brands in 1987, with a 23.9% market share, said Mr. Maxwell, up from 22.9%. Spending was $84 million in measured media, about even with the prior year.

The original "Marlboro Man," David Millar, 81, died of emphysema-related illness in 1987. The cowboy legacy he did so well to establish continues to define Marlboro. During the year with an extensive campaign for Menthol Marlboro Lights by Leo Burnett, Chicago.

Ads for PM's Merit, the leading low-tar cigarette, in early 1988 abandoned sailing imagery with an aggressive new effort stressing taste and low-tar benefits. The company also began a blind taste test for consumers. Leo Burnett handles Merit, which was supported with $35 million in spending, according to LNA.

Although Merit is the No. 1 low-tar with a 4% share, RJR's Vantage, is close behind at 3.2%. Lorillard's True, with only a 1% share, launched a hard-hitting campaign with a taste message almost concurrently with PM's Merit ads.

Benson & Hedges unit sales dropped 6.7% in 1987 prompting some changes in the creative for the brand's advertising campaign via Wells, Rich, Greene, New York. The much talked about campaign is themed "For people who like to smoke." B&H's share is 4.2%, down slightly from its 4.4% share in 1986. Spending in 1987 is measured at $44 million.

Total company spending in most media were down in 1987. In late March, GF consolidated all its network TV buying at D'Arcy, Masius, Benton & Bowles, New York, a $35 million windfall for DMB&B in addition to the $50 million in buying assignments it already held. The loser was Y&R New York, who previously held network daytime.

Company-wide earnings at GF were depressed because of its troubled coffee division, causing Mr. Smith, at a shareholders meeting in April 1988 to call 1987 "a painful year" for domestic coffee. The company was unprepared for a dramatic drop in retail coffee prices and had an excess of high-priced inventory on hand. As a result, GF funneled the bulk of its spending to cents-off and trade promotion and away from advertising.

The strategy proved costly. While Maxwell House spending, at Ogilvy & Mather, New York, plummeted from $33 million in 1986 to almost nil by year end 1987, GF's total market share also plunged from 35.9% to 34.6%. Meanwhile, rival Procter & Gamble's Folgers gained share from 28.2% to 31.4%.

By early 1988, GF vowed "a rapid-fire series of marketing programs" said Mr. Smith. Maxwell House returned to the air, but dropped its "Coffee Made Our Way" theme for its old "Good to the Last Drop" tag line.

In April, P&G launched a new threat, changing over Folgers to a "fast-roast" technology nationally. With the new technique, beans are roasted faster and hotter, so they "puff more" according to the company, resulting in 13 ounces of the new Folgers being equal to 16 ounces of regular Folgers. Supermarket buyers said GF would have to either convert Maxwell House or "discredit" P&G.

In meals, GF downscaled its Culinova fresh prepared entrees to less exotic fare, lowering the price to less than $4 from a high of over $7 at retail.

Impromptu, GF's shelf-stable line testing in Evanston, Ill., and Portland, Me., was described by Mr. Smith as "our most promising product" at the annual meeting in 1988, but GF declined to give results.

Despite record ad spending in 1987, GF's market share for cereal dropped during the April/May 1988 period as compared to the previous year, according to Tim Ramey, analyst with County Securities, New York. Post's share dropped from just over 12% to 11.8%, he said, compared to a gain for Kellogg Co. to 41.8% from January through May 1988, from 41.1% in 1987.

GF became embroiled in the Great Raisin War of 1987 when Kellogg Co. sued GF and its agency, Grey Advertising, over claims made in Post Raisin Bran advertising. Kellogg filed a $100 million lawsuit in U.S. District court in Kalamazoo, Mich., charging that the Post ads "inaccurately claim that the raisins in Post Natural Raisin Bran are natural and unprocessed." The suit was settled out of court in summer 1988. No damages were paid.

Meanwhile, Post changed its Raisin Bran ads, enlisting the California Raisin Advisory Board's Dancing Raisins to plug the cereal. Post began running teaser ads in April 1988 and by July 1988 rolled a :32 national TV spot featuring the Raisins in concert.

Post also introduced a resealable "Zip*Pak" technology for its cereals, beginning with Raisin Bran, in 1987, supported with ads starring John Denver.

Raisin Bran received $17.7 million in measured media spending in 1987, up from $15.4 million in 1986. Post Raisin Bran' share hovered near 2% in 1987, only half of Kellogg's Raisin Bran's 4%.

Total cereal spending for Post was $88 million, up 11.3% from the prior year. Grape-Nuts received the most support—$28 million up 40%.

To revive the $800 million powdered drink segment, which is declining at about 5% annually, GF rolled national in February 1988 with Tang Fruit Boxes, an aseptic drink, spending $20 million on the campaign. The ads feature Claymation figures and "mouths" sliding off children's faces to "run" to the grocers to buy the Fruit Boxes. The theme: "The taste your mouth can't wait for."

Separately, GF rolled national with a $20 million effort for Kool-Aid themed "Wacky Wild Kool-Aid Style," and a $25 million consumer promotion. GF also launched a national "Big Chill" style Kool-Aid campaign for adults, with parents discussing the ups and downs of having kids—and having kids drink Kool-Aid.

In the $2 billion-plus frozen novelty market, GF rolled out three new products in 1988: Jell-O Pudding Pops Deluxe, Kool-Aid Kool-Pops frozen drink bars with Vitamin C and Crystal Light Cool 'n Creamy bars. Young & Rubicam was assigned Pudding Pops Deluxe; Grey received Kool-Aid and DMB&B the Crystal Light bars.

Spending for all Jell-O and Crystal Light frozen novelties in 1987 was $14 million, up 17% from the previous year.

In August, 1987, GF sold its Open Pit barbecue sauce to Campbell Soup Co. for an undisclosed sum.

Miller Brewing registered only a 0.6% increase in shipments in 1987 as compared to Anheuser-Busch's 3.8% gain. Emanuel Goldman, analyst with PaineWebber, put A-B's 1987 market share at 40.4% as compared to Miller's 21.2%. Stroh Brewery comes in third with 11.1%.

A change of direction was brewing at Miller in 1988, as the company announced its intention to concentrate more fully on promotion and local advertising at the expense of national ads. First quarter 1988 figures from LNA show a decline in total measured spending to $26 million from $35 million in first quarter 1987.

The biggest spenders in the Miller lineup in 1987 were Miller Genuine Draft, with $52.4 million in measured spending, up substantially from 1986 spending of $37.7 million and Miller Lite, with $73.8 million, down slightly from 1987's $76.3 million.

Miller Lite, the No. 1 light beer, saw its sales grow only 0.5% to 19.2 million barrels in 1987. Meanwhile, A-B's Bud Light soared 23% to 8 million barrels and Adolph Coors Coors Light rose 12% to 8.2 million barrels. To raise its share of the light market, Miller began testing Lite Genuine Draft in four markets in March 1988.

Miller tried to stem decline of its High Life brand, which skidded from a 13% share in 1980 to 4.9% in 1987, according to industry newsletter Impact, with a fresh ad approach from J. Walter Thompson, New York. The campaign scrapped the "Made the American Way" theme line for "Stop and Taste the High Life." The company, in 1988, is expected to pump more spending into High Life, which was supported by $20 million in measured media in 1987.

Lowenbrau TV ad spending was cut in 1987 to $10 million from $19 million the prior year, with the bulk of Lowenbrau's spending in print. But, in February 1988, the company shifted gears with a network TV campaign featuring a lion chained to a beer barrel via JWT.

Miller also broadened its base through the acquisitions this February of Chippewa Falls, Wis.-based Leinenkugel Brewing, a premium lager marketer. Agency is Frankenberry, Laughlin & Constable, Milwaukee, handles the Leinenkugel's estimated $1 million in measured spending.

Philips NV, which in 1987 acquired the 42% of North American Philips Corp. stock it didn't already own, turned around this August to sell off 53% of its worldwide appliance unit to Whirlpool. The two moves by the Dutch company reflect the geographic direction of its marketing effort—the U.S.—and the need to shore up the bottom line, if not temporarily through a cash infusion. It also has reduced its share in several joint ventures.

Philips NV profits dipped in 1987 from the prior year, but they have been stagnant for several years as sales generally have climbed. The margin, or net income divided by sales, at Philips in 1987 was only 1.5%. That previously low figure continues into 1988. In the second quarter of this year, Philips net profits fell 44% to to $56.6 million, the lowest level since 1983, on sales of $6.1 billion, up 6%.

Philips said its performance has been hurt by cheap imports from the Far East, particularly South Korea, and the decline in the dollar, the latter affecting products produced in strong-currency areas like Europe but sold elsewhere. The U.S. accounts for 40% of its sales but only 25% of its production.

To gain more direct control of the U.S. operation, Philips paid $683 million for the remaining shares of NAPC. Philips has since divided its U.S. operations into two separate entities: NAPC and Consolidated Electronics Industries Corp., the latter housing its non-electronics business. CEI includes Anchor Brush Co., Genie home products, Selmer orchestral instruments and Magnavox Government & Industrial Electronics Co.

At the same, Philips has launched a worldwide plan to cut overhead and production expenses by eliminating 20,000 jobs (6% of the total) and closing 70 factories.

As part of Philips' consumer electronics division, which had a 1.4% decline in worldwide sales to $8.0 billion in 1987 although U.S. division sales were up, NAPC backed its Magnavox, Sylvania, Philips and Philco audio-video brands in the U.S. with measured ad spending of $23.9 million, up 7.8% from 1986.

The Philips brand name was reintroduced in 1987 which features prestige, high end TVs, audio equipment, VCRs and CDs. A $4-to-$5 million print campaign from Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, featured a three-page magazine ad headlined "Philips discovers America." The Philips line now has 200 dealers, up from the original 100 a year ago, and markets 40 audio/video products.

The Magnavox brand, the biggest advertiser in the division, drew $19.4 million in measured spending, up 33% from the prior year, according to BAR/LNA. That level has been hiked about 50% to an annualized rate of $30 million for 1988. A four-month-long print and TV campaign from Backer Spielvogel Bates featuring the Smothers Brothers began in September 1987. Follow-up spots and print ads with the singing comedy duo promoting new color TVs, VHS-C camcorders and Universal remote are rolling out this winter.

According to Television Digest, 5% of 1987 model color TVs sold were Magnavox and sales of Sylvania and Philco brands brought Philips total market share to 9%, third among manufacturers' brands, with RCA at 17%, Zenith at 14.5% and ahead of Sony with 6%. That was about the same as 1986, but down from the 1981 high of more than 13% for the brands.

Philips is the world's largest manufacturer of lamps and world leader in light bulb sales. In the $1.5 billion (retail dollars) U.S. consumer lighting market, Philips Lighting Corp. is No. 2 with a 15% market share behind General Electric and ahead of GTE Sylvania. Sales of light bulbs for 1987 were up 42% over 1986 and sales for the first three months of 1988 were 62% higher than same period last year. Philips Lighting Corp. spent $9.4 million in measured advertising in 1987, up 36%. Sales of the Longer Life bulb were up 75% for first quarter of 1988. Other new campaigns included a print campaign for Director bulbs (for track and ceiling lights) and one for security lighting with McGruff the crime dog. Ninety percent of Philips Lighting Corp.'s advertising is network TV.

The former NAPC consumer products division, renamed the Norelco Consumer Products Division, includes the Schick and Philips home products brands. Philips plans to eventually market all these products under the Norelco or Philips name. In 1987 Norelco, the No. 1 electric razor marketer with an estimated 39% share, phased out non-rotatract shavers and concentrated advertising spending on TV and print for the rotatract models. Remington was close behind with a 37% share at the close of 1987.

New domestic appliances in 1987 were low-noise hairdryers, cordless hair curlers and a ton of coffeemakers. Philips is improving design and making appliances easier to use and aiming them specifically at the youth market with modern design and color.

Companies who issue their own "whew!" statements are rare. This past year Pillsbury joined the few when it called its fiscal 1988 "a year we are all glad to have behind us," and for good reason. It was a year of poor operating results and management and organizational shakeups.

Pillsbury suffered its second straight drop in net income in fiscal 1988 ended May 31, primarily as a result of a poor performance by Pillsbury's flagging restaurant group in which Burger King sales fell 1%, Steak & Ale's dropped 6% and Bennigan's slipped 3% from the previous year.

Pillsbury took decisive action to remedy the problem by announcing its intent to sell Godfather's Pizza, Quik Wok, Bay Street and Key West Grill restaurants, by modernizing or closing some Burger King, Steak & Ale and Bennigan's restaurants, and streamlining other company operations. All this resulted in a $215.3 million restructuring charge.

In mid-1988, Pillsbury's Foods Group was reorganized into Consumer, Industrial and International foods divisions as part of a plan to focus on fewer business and product lines. A down-sized restaurant group also enabled Pillsbury to focus on core restaurant chains—Burger King, Bennigan's and Steak & Ale.

Corporate shakeups continued through fiscal 1988 and into July, when Philip Smith, 54, was named president-CEO to replace William H. Spoor, who had come out of retirement to pinch hit until a replacement could be found for chairman-president-CEO John Stafford, who resigned in February. Mr. Smith previously held the same post at Philip Morris Cos.' General Foods unit.

His arrival followed the June resignations by Jeff Campbell, restaurant group chairman and Burger King president, and Kyle Craig, S&A Restaurant Corp. chairman-CEO. Charles Olcott, 41, was promoted to president-COO of Burger King overseeing worldwide operations.

Pillsbury's reported its worldwide advertising, promotion and selling costs were $653.9 million during fiscal 1988, up a modest 2.7% from fiscal 1987. Some $572 million of that was spent worldwide to advertise Pillsbury brands, up 5% from fiscal 1987.

In the U.S., Pillsbury's measured media spending for calendar 1987 dropped 4.3% to $248.9 million, some 75% of that spent on Pillsbury's various restaurant groups paced by $163.6 million expenditure for Burger King, virtually unchanged from 1986.

Burger King, the world's No. 2 hamburger chain with 5,578 units operating at the end of fiscal 1988, dropped J. Walter Thompson for N W Ayer in September 1987. Ayer produced a new campaign themed "We do it like you'd do it," and ads have returned to the "broiled vs. fried" theme of the past in hopes of rejuvenating sales that apparently weren't helped by JWT's "Herb" campaign of early 1987.

The chain plans to increase the number of new units opened in the U.S. to 40 by June 1989, from 25 in fiscal 1987 and 1988. Despite overcrowding in many markets, BK will open units in unconventional sites such as airports, hospitals, schools and zoos.

During the year, Pillsbury foods sales rose 6% to $3.56 billion, buttressed by a 7% growth in vegetable sales, an 18% growth in Haagen Dazs ice cream and a 35% increase in international foods sales. Sales of consumer foods, traditionally Pillsbury's largest segment, increased only 2%.

Although it remained the No. 1 marketer of frozen pizza, Pillsbury suffered a 6% drop in sales attributed to price hikes for Totino's brand pizza, which have since been rescinded. Pillsbury holds a 40% share of the frozen pizza market, down from over 50%, said John McMillin, food industry analyst for Prudential-Bache Securities, New York. Pillsbury spent only $1.4 million in measured media for Totino's, both microwave and frozen varieties.

Pillsbury concentrated sizable ad dollars behind microwave products which totaled $17.8 million in measured advertising, up 85% from 1986. Microwave cake mixes led the pack with a $6.3 million expenditure, up from $2.7 million in 1986. Pillsbury also launched Microwave Brownie Mix during the year, spending $2.4 million on the item, and spent heavily for multi-product advertising backing microwaveables on network TV ($4.8 million).

Among other personnel shifts, Thomas McBurney was moved from chairman of the Foods group to the newly-created In-

Do You Know What It Means

To Miss New Orleans?

Unfortunately, some national advertisers do. And that makes us wonder why. Consider, for a moment, that retail expansion has increased 25 percent in the last 18 months. And if you're still not convinced, consider that Macy's "exceeded" its expectations when it opened in October of 1986. That's why it is opening a second one in New Orleans this year.

Who else is in New Orleans? Brooks Brothers, Saks Fifth Avenue, Esprit, Gucci, Laura Ashley, strong regional retailers like Maison Blanche and D.H. Holmes, and in August of 1988...Lord & Taylor. Do they know something about the $14 billion New Orleanians spend on retail sales that you don't?

If you're missing the good news, call Ray Massett (504) 826-3071.

NOTE: *Worldwide earnings were reduced by $459 million and U.S. earnings were reduced by $357 million to reflect costs of restructuring in fiscal 1987.

Procter & Gamble Co. spent most of 1987 supporting existing brands and seeking more efficient media buys at the expense of its heavy network TV advertising. In the process, U.S. ad totals for this perennial No. 1 advertiser dipped 7.6%, dropping P&G to the No. 2 slot behind Philip Morris.

P&G's total measured ad expenditures also dropped for the second consecutive year as network TV expenditures fell 17.6% to $377.6 million, a figure that still makes P&G the king of network TV advertising.

Worldwide, the company's big ad budget helped push net sales 14% to $19.34 billion in fiscal 1988, ended June 30. P&G worldwide net earnings climbed 30% to $1.02 billion from $786 million last year, excluding the prior year's one-time charge that reduced net earnings by $459 million to cover restructuring of its manufacturing operations, including a drastic reduction of capacity for its Duncan Hines ready-to-eat soft cookie line.

"This past year's significant profit recovery is in line with our expectations," said John Smale, P&G chairman-CEO, and John E. Pepper, president, in a joint statement. "Broadly based volume growth, particularly in international operations, and the lower federal statutory tax rate in the U.S. were major factors contributing to the strong improvement in earnings." P&G's non-U.S. net sales have risen from 29.1% of the total in fiscal 1986 to 37.7% in fiscal 1988—a time period that has been marked by a steep drop in the value of the dollar.

Although P&G earlier this year sliced nearly $75 million more from its 1987 network TV budget, which was down $81 million from 1986, it more than compensated for the network TV spending cut with aggressive syndicated and cable TV buys, couponing, promotions and special-events programs.

"P&G's whole philosophy over the last two years has been to put more money into syndie deals, print and cable," said Greg Ostroff, a securities analyst with Goldman Sachs & Co., New York.In October 1987, P&G cut an estimated $20 million upfront deal on the 191 stations represented by Katz Television Group, and bought $10 million of time on the Turner Broadcasting System/Tribune Broadcasting "unwired network" system. The two deals are said to have offered P&G the advantages of lower cost-per-thousand, audience guarantees and the relative ease of one-stop buying.

P&G markets the leading brand in 21 of the 40 product categories in which it competes. Its largest measured media expenditure for a single brand in 1987 was $44 million for Folgers coffee, a 16% increase over 1986.

In October 1987, P&G established category business units through the company's domestic operations. All brands and products in a particular business category, such as disposable diapers or oral care products, now are grouped organizationally in the same unit under the direction of one general manager, in order to eliminate promotional duplications.

P&G, observers say, may reorganize its ad agencies along category lines. Such speculation was fueled in May when P&G transferred its estimated $4 million Bold laundry detergent account to Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, from Grey Advertising, New York. Burnett already handles Cheer and Era detergents.

Burnett also was the lucky winner in November 1987 when P&G pulled two brands from Wells, Rich, Greene, New York. Burnett won Prell shampoo and conditioner, and N W Ayer, New York, got the Citrus Hill Plus Calcium and Lite Citrus Hill brands. Ayer already had been working on regular Citrus Hill Select orange juice.

P&G in January moved its $10 million Pantene shampoo account to Grey Advertising, New York, from FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York, citing competitive conflicts with the Leber Katz's Colgate business. P&G had inherited the agency when it bought Richardson-Vicks in 1985.

P&G's decreased measured ad spending coincides with what observers said is at the low-point of a new-product introduction cycle. The company this year concentrated advertising and marketing efforts on product reformulations, packaging improvements and line extensions of established brands. Such initiatives, the company said, "reached a record level throughout the domestic divisions this past year, contributing new unit volume and market share growth."

New unit volume records were set in both U.S. consumer and industrial divisions, the company said. Unit volume rose 4%, which analysts consider a "strong growth rate" for P&G. Domestic net earnings from operations jumped 26% to $864 million from $686 million the previous year.

"It's spooky," said Jack Salzman, household-products analyst with Goldman Sachs & Co., New York. "It's like everybody decided they'd wash more, brush their teeth more and buy brand-name goods."

However, Kidder, Peabody & Co. analyst Jay Freedman noted that the "3Ds," analysts' shorthand for P&G's core detergent, diapers and dentifrice businesses, are losing some of their historical importance to the company. The reason, he said, is those products face more competition and because P&G competes in far more categories than it used to.

The three categories still are essential to P&G's financial health, though. Disposable diapers alone account for 16% of all sales in fiscal 1988 and in the two previous years. Combined, the 3Ds bring in a third or more of all sales and 45% of profits, analysts said.

Yet, perhaps in recognition that it cannot survive solely on profits from those products, P&G during fiscal 1988 made significant moves to expand its presence outside its core businesses, particularly international expansion and in pharmaceutical marketing.

In December, the company finalized its acquisition of the Mainz, West Germany-based Blendax Group, establishing a major presence in the European health and beauty-care products market, and created a joint venture with a Hong Kong company to sell soaps, detergents and other products in mainland China. And in August, the company announced it would acquire Perfumarias Phebo, one of Brazil's top personal-care companies. Brazil is seen as the key to expanded distribution throughout Latin America.

To bring new OTC and prescription drugs to market more quickly, P&G set up several joint ventures with pharmaceutical companies including Upjohn Co., Gist-brocades of the Netherlands, Syntex Corp. and Meridian Diagnostics Inc.

The company also showed confidence in the marketability of olestra, its revolutionary fat substitute awaiting government approval, electing Charles Lieppe as VP in charge of the olestra division. The company said establishing a separate olestra division is "a more formal way of assessing olestra's potential." Initially, P&G plans to use the food additive in its Puritan and Crisco cooking oils and shortenings and Pringle's potato chips.

P&G backed its Citrus Hill franchise with more than $17.2 million in measured media spending in 1987, a 12% increase from the previous year. P&G is the third-ranked marketer in the $3 billion orange juice category.

In March 1988, P&G embarked on an adventurous new strategy for Folgers, replacing 16-ounce regular Folgers coffee with a 13-ounce "fast roast" Folgers, made by roasting coffee beans "faster and hotter" which allows more flavor to be extracted from each bean; as a result, P&G uses fewer green coffee beans per can and can reduce the list price.

General Foods Corp., P&G's main competitor, has a 34.6% share of the $4.8 billion national coffee market. P&G is closing fast, with a 31.4% share, up from 28.2% share a year ago, according to P&G sales materials. In soluble (instant) coffee, GF holds a 39.5% case share, down from 40.8%, while P&G holds a 21.3% share, up from 19.7%.

P&G supported the Folgers line with more than $44 million in measured media spending, a 16% increase. National advertising is themed "The best part of wakin' up is Folgers in your cup."

The Pringle's potato chip line, supported with $14 million in measured media spending, added four new flavors: Original Idaho Rippled, French Onion Idaho Rippled and Taco 'n Cheddar Idaho Rippled and Light Ranch. The brand has grown to about a 7% share of the potato chip market, compared with Frito-Lay's 50% share. Pringle's low-oil varieties account for about 25% of the brand's total $200 million in retail volume.

P&G rolled-out four new gourmet cake mixes under its Duncan Hines label called Tiara Desserts and introduced Vienna White and Praline Crunch into the Duncan Hines brownie mix line. P&G ranks second to Pillsbury Co. in overall baking mix sales (including cake, brownie, muffin and bread mixes) and second to General Mills' Betty Crocker brand in the $170 million brownie mix line. P&G supported its Duncan Hines line, excluding ready-to-eat cookies, with $15.3 million in measured media, down 15%.

In the $860 million cooking oil category, P&G's category leading Crisco has a 22% share and Puritan, 6%. Both Crisco oil and shortening were supported with $19.3 million in measured spending, down 32%, while Puritan's media spending was slashed 71% to $3.2 million.

The introduction of Sparkle Crest for Kids helped maintain P&G's 40%-plus share of the $1 billion dentifrice category. P&G is the leading toothpaste marketer; Colgate-Palmolive Co.'s Colgate is second with a 30% share, followed by Beecham Products, 9.5% with Aqua-Fresh, and Lever Bros., 11% evenly divided between Aim and Close-Up.

The Big 4 toothpaste companies concentrated on segmenting the toothpaste category this year, with P&G alone marketing more than 38 various sizes and flavors of Crest. P&G supported Crest regular, kids and Tartar-Control with $39.9 million in measured media spending, up 26%, primarily on network and spot TV. One campaign for new Sparkle Crest for Kids, featuring animated dancing Sparkles, is themed "It will make you rush to brush." A separate campaign themed "The Dentist's Choice" broke in mid-June for its reformulated tartar-control formula Crest. The campaign emphasizes how regular use of the improved Crest shortens the length of dental check-ups.

Measured media support behind Scope totaled $18.6 million, up 21%, as the company continued a high-level of introductory support for new Peppermint Scope. Scope has a 24% share of the $600 million category, trailing the 28.9% share for Warner-Lambert's Listerine.

P&G said its volume and market share were up significantly in the $3.5 billion laundry detergent category because of its category-leading Tide, which the company said shipped a record number of cases. While Tide powder and liquid are the No. 1 detergents with shares of 17% and 10%, respectively, P&G's total share of the category slipped about 1 percentage point to 51.3%. P&G supported Tide with only $20 million in measured media spending, down 51% from 1987.

In February, P&G began testing Tide with Bleach, positioned as the "toughest-cleaning Tide," in Colorado, parts of Nebraska, North Dakota and Wyoming. The detergent, which "combines the power of Tide with color-safe bleach" is P&G's response to Clorox Co.'s entry into the detergent category with Clorox Super Detergent.

P&G also introduced a reformulated lemon-scented Dash powder and liquid, supporting the new brand with more than $8 million in measured media spending. It began testing Lemon Fresh Comet liquid chlorine, P&G's second entry into the $600 million-plus bleach category. The company already markets Biz powdered bleach, which holds an 8% share.

P&G in mid-1988 ended testing of Bold Washer-Dryer Paks, prepackaged detergent pouches that contained dryer-activated fabric softener, and discontinued its market test of Tide Multi-Action Sheets.

In the $443 million automatic dishwasher detergent category, P&G's Cascade is the leading brand with more than a 47% share. However, in the growing $140 million liquid segment, analysts said Colgate's Palmolive Automatic is the leading liquid detergent with a 41.3% share. Lever's Sunlight, in its first full year of national distribution, has a 31.5% market share, while liquid Cascade has 25.9%.

P&G added a lemon-scented Cascade liquid variety this year, and supported both lemon and regular-scented liquid Cascade with $13.3 million in measured media spending. Cascade powder received only $4.2 million, down 76%.

In March, P&G introduced April Fresh Downy fabric softener sheets and rolled out Downy SunRinse Fresh liquid fabric softener. P&G is the category leader, with Bounce dryer sheets holding a 38.4% share of the nearly $300 million segment, and Downy commanding more than a 52% share of the $407 million liquid fabric softener segment. P&G backed Downy with more than $18 million in measured spending, up 4.8%, while spending for Bounce declined 10% to $15.4 million.

P&G's share of the $660 million light-duty dishwashing detergent category rose 2 percentage points to 52%, with Dawn the market leader at 22%. P&G this year introduced Mountain Spring Dawn, but measured media spending dropped 34% to $9.1 million. Colgate-Palmolive is the second-leading light-duty detergent marketer with a 22% share.

P&G in October will introduce nationally Luvs Deluxe diapers designed differently for boys and girls. Called Luvs Deluxe for Boys and Luvs Deluxe for Girls, the thin, superabsorbent disposable diapers have been hot sellers in Midwestern test markets since they were introduced in October 1987. The rollout will be backed by a $15 million national multimedia campaign.

The introduction is viewed as bolstering P&G's 54% share of the $3.2 billion U.S. disposable diaper category. Archrival Kimberly-Clark Corp.'s Huggies holds a 34% share, up four percentage points. P&G's Ultra Pampers currently has a 39% share and Luvs, 15%, equal to its 1984 standing, the year before P&G launched its all-out effort to strengthen its position.

P&G supported Ultra Pampers with $27 million in measured media, up 5.3%, while Luvs got nearly $20 million, up 28% from 1986.

P&G's Always feminine-protection line received $17 million in measured media, a 23.3% drop. However, the brand gained four percentage points, and now holds a 24% share of the $1.2 billion category. Johnson & Johnson is the category leader with a 34.6% share, primarily due to the 19% share held by the Stayfree brand.

P&G's measured media support for its other paper products—Charmin bathroom tissue, Puffs facial tissue and Bounty paper towels—all showed virtually no measured media spending support. However, P&G commands more than a 26% share of the $2.1 billion toilet tissue category with its Charmin and White Cloud brands, and its Bounty paper towel is the leader in the $1.47 billion category.

P&G commands a 30.6% share of the almost $1 billion shampoo category, with Head & Shoulders again the category leader with more than a 10% share. P&G introduced improved packaging and formulas for the Vidal Sassoon haircare line, and supported it with more than $11 million in measured media support. Pert, restaged as Pert Plus, a combination shampoo, and now has a 5.4% share, up from 2.7% in 1986. Pert Plus was backed with more than $13 million in measured media, up 140%.

P&G's Bain de Soleil brand in 1988 redefined the fashion tan in advertising, acknowledging consumer concerns about overexposure to the sun. Print, radio and TV ads introduced the brand's super sunblock with a high sun-protection factor of 30. Emphasizing Bain de Soleil's range of protection and moisturizing benefits, the ads said, "In St. Tropez, women have no fear of exposure . . . For a luxurious tan that's never at the expense of beautiful skin, indulge in Bain de Soleil." The brand, supported with $2 million in measured media in 1987, has an estimated 8% share of the $450 million suncare category. Schering-Plough, marketer of Tropic Blend and Coppertone, leads the category with a combined 35% share.

In February, P&G filed a petition with the FDA to revised its listing of Metamucil's laxative benefit to include cholesterol reduction. Analysts say if P&G is successful in amending Metamucil's benefit listing, the brand will add to its current 60% share of the $170 million bulk-laxative category. Metamucil, supported with $9.4 million in measured media, is far ahead of Citrucel, marketed by Merrell Dow's Lakeside Pharmaceuticals unit, and Fiberall, the Ciba-Geigy product recently bought from S.C. Johnson & Son.

This summer, P&G began the national introduction of Maximum Strength Pepto-Bismol, a line extension of its category-leading Pepto-Bismol stomach remedy brand. Pepto commands an 18% share of the $360 million antacid category, leading Norcliff-Thayer Inc.'s Tums at 13%. The brand received more than $20 million in measured support, up 7.2%.

Vicks cough-cold remedies received $18.3 million in measured media, up 14%. Nyquil holds a leading 12% share in the $1.2 billion category for cough, cold and sinus remedies.

P&G in October, 1987, came under fire by the National Association of Black-owned Broadcasters, who were dissatisfied with the company's limited use of minority media. In response, P&G purchased "a major block" of time on the Black Entertainment Network, and created a position for an assistant manager-target marketing, to coordinate ad placement with black-owned media.

John S. Scott, chairman of the board of Richardson-Vicks Inc. retired as an officer of R-V and from P&G's board of directors in December 1987. P&G said there will be no successor named to that position.

Charles C. Carroll was named vice-president-business development, health and beauty care. Bengt E. Braun, general manager-dishwashing products, packaged soap and detergent division, was named to succeed Mr. Carroll as manager, bar soap and household cleaning products division.

Diversification, exemplified by the "Moving Rock" corporate ad campaign running on network TV, enabled the Prudential Insurance Co. of America to increase total consolidated assets by $7.2 billion in 1987.

For the first time, Prudential in 1987 advertised its consumer financial services products as part of a corporate campaign on TV, print and radio which helped account for a 57% increase in total advertising during 1987.

Prudential spent $26 million on its corporate campaigns in 1987, twice the 1986 budget, according to BAR/LNA. This figure also includes advertising for various insurance and financial services, said company spokesman Scott Mason.

Of Prudential's total 1987 ad spending estimated by AA at $111.1 million, some $82.3 million of that was in 11 measured media, compared to $52.3 million in 1986.

The company's 1987 "Moving Rock" and "Above and Beyond" ad campaigns, are seen by industry observers as a prime example of recent insurance company efforts to reposition themselves as broad-based financial services companies. The latter in particular stresses customer service above individual products. Besides being the largest U.S. life insurer, Prudential is the world's largest non-bank corporation with $141 billion total consolidated assets in 1987.

Beyond the money spent on financial services in the corporate campaign, Prudential put an additional $6.9 million into consumer financial services advertising in 1987, more than half of it on network TV. This reflects a major increase over the $211,000 spent for financial services advertising in 1986.

On an individual service basis, Prudential also spent heavily in 1987 on life insurance ($2.6 million). The only increase in spending over 1986, however, was for automobile insurance, up 75%. Sales of automobile insurance policies, however, actually dropped in 1987, largely the result of rate increases, according to the company. Total life insurance sales were up 5%.

Diversification helped Prudential remain strong despite Black Monday. Already one of the largest U.S. real estate investors, it moved into the $13.5 billion residential real estate market in the spring of 1987, with the formation of Prudential Real Estate Affiliates Inc., headquartered in Southern California. Prudential began supporting its burgeoning network of real estate broker franchises with a $61,400 ad budget, most of it going to magazines.

New capital investments were at an all-time high of $4 billion in 1987, a 43% increase. Largest among 135 separate financings funded through Prudential Insurance Co. affiliates was a $700 million leveraged buyout of CBS Magazines. It was the largest unsecured leveraged buyout ever financed by Prudential, and at the time was the largest acquisition in the magazine industry's history.

The stock market crash contributed to a troublesome year for one subsidiary, Prudential-Bache Securities Inc. The company reported an after-tax loss of $164 million, despite a $14.5 million ad budget, up 51% from 1986.

Prudential's rapidly expanding network of group health and dental-care programs, supported in 1987 by $2.1 million in advertising, has become the largest and most widespread system of its kind in the U.S. New premiums and fees from sales of life insurance and health coverage to more than 2,000 groups exceeded $1.2 billion, a 24% increase over 1986.

Sales of medical-care coverage for individuals and small groups were lower in 1987, affected by rising premiums. However, Prudential/PruCare Plus, a new product offered to companies with 6 to 19 employees, helped generate a $10 million increase in total premium income from health coverages for small groups. The plan combines the cost control of a health maintenance organization with the freedom of choice of traditional major medical programs.

Quaker Oats Co. spent most of the past year fighting off unfriendly neighbors.

Not only did Quaker encounter aggressive competitors in several key businesses—including hot cereals, pet foods, frozen breakfasts and sports beverages—but in August Wall Street was rife with speculation that the company faced an unfriendly takeover attempt by Philip Morris Cos. On top of that, rumors circulated all year that Chairman-CEO William Smithburg was being wooed by other major food companies, including Pillsbury Co.

In trying to deflect its competition, Quaker increased its worldwide ad and marketing spending to $1.23 billion in fiscal 1988, up 28.4% from the previous year. That comes close to matching the 36.6% increase posted in fiscal 1987. Ad and merchandising expenditures for the U.S. and Canadian grocery products division, Quaker's largest business, were up 29%, to $853 million.

AA's estimate of $344.6 million for Quaker advertising is only for U.S. advertising, with 52% of that spent in measured media.

The marketing investment paid off in a 21% increase in worldwide sales from continuing operations, which rose to $5.33 billion. Operating income was up 15%, to $518 million.

The most bitter battle has been fought over oatmeal. During the 1987-88 hot cereal season, Quaker spent an estimated $46 million to defend its leading 68% share of the $606 million market, which SAMI/Burke said increased from $500 million at the start of the battle. Themed "It's the right thing to do," Quaker's TV and print campaign starring actor Wilford Brimley won the Grand Effie for marketing effectiveness from the New York chapter of the American Marketing Association.

This year, Quaker and General Mills are continuing the oatmeal war. General Mills with an 8% share is introducing Oatmeal Swirlers and upping its marketing budget to an estimated $35 million. Quaker has rolled national with Quaker Extra, an instant oatmeal fortified with 10 vitamins and minerals. Quakers also boosted its 1988-89 hot-cereal marketing budget to nearly $60 million.

With most of its cereal attention focused on oatmeal, Quaker basically kept even with its rivals in the $5.5 billion ready-to-eat cereal category; its fourth-place share rose to 7.6% in 1987 from 7.4% the previous year. Kellogg's 42% share remained the same over two years, while General Mills share dropped to 23.6% in 1987 from 24.1% and General Foods share increased slightly to 12.1% from 12%. Ralston trailed Quaker with 6.1% down from 6.2% in 1986.

Its only new product was Quaker Oat Squares, rolled nationally after a Midwestern test. This fall, Quaker is launching major new ad efforts for its Life and 100% Natural cereals. It also will add to its flagship Cap'n Crunch line with Christmas Crunch, a holiday product featuring red and green crunchberries. Bayer Bess Vanderwarker, Chicago, handles Cap'n Crunch.

Quaker Oat Squares are being marketed with a new slogan: "From the man who knows breakfast best." Reflecting that commitment to being the industry's leader in breakfast foods, Quaker shored up its lackluster Aunt Jemima line in July with the industry's first reduced-calorie frozen pancakes and pancake mix, under the Aunt Jemima Lite label. New frozen breakfast products from Campbell Soup Co. and ConAgra's Banquet division also damaged Aunt Jemima's position; Home-style Breakfasts were discontinued after a disappointing yearlong test.

Aunt Jemima holds a 31% share of the $526 million market for breakfast mixes and syrups, and a 28.7% share of the $337 million market for frozen breakfasts. Measured spending for the Aunt Jemima line, handled by J. Walter Thompson, Chicago, rose 80%, to $15.8 million.

Quaker faced a less visible but just as serious challenge in pet foods. Through its 1986 purchase of Anderson, Clayton & Co., Quaker became the nation's No. 2 pet-food marketer, with a 14% share, and leader in the $200 million semi-moist dog food category. But category leader Ralston Purina Co., which lost out in the bidding for Anderson, Clayton, quickly put Quaker on notice; Ralston rolled national last year with Grrravy, a parity product for Quaker's newly-acquired Gravy Train, and Moist & Meaty, a dead ringer for Quaker's Ken-L Ration Moist 'n Beefy. Ralston has an estimated 27% share of the pet-food market.

Quaker responded by relaunching Cycle canned and dry dog foods in spring with new names, packaging, formulas and ad campaigns; Quaker did not actively advertise Cycle in 1987. In July, Quaker followed with an estimated $15 million relaunch of Gravy Train. Measured spending for Gravy Train was cut in half, to $5.6 million, during the year before the relaunch. Chiat/Day, New York, handles both brands.

Quaker struggled with distribution problems of its King Kuts premium canned dog food, which chalked up sales of $35 million in its first year.

Even its largest and most successful brand, Gatorade, is facing new challenges. With annual sales of $300 million and an estimated 90% national share of the sports-drink market, Gatorade has been unscarred by its numerous regional and occasional national challengers. But after General Foods announced plans to test Kool-Aid Sports Koolers—aseptically packaged and targeted to kids—Quaker quickly rolled national with aseptically packaged GatorBox, supported by ads aimed at mothers and children.

In the past nine months, Quaker also has added a fifth flavor, Citrus Cooler, to the Gatorade lineup, and rolled national with GatorLode, a powdered carbohydrate-loaded drink. Total measured spending for Gatorade increased 56.9%, to $20 million, in 1987. Bayer Bess Vanderwarker handles.

Quaker devoted a large chunk of ad and promotional dollars to a $26 million summertime tie-in with Lucasfilm's "Willow." The promotion, which included TV, free-standing inserts and promotional offers, tied in a record number of Quaker brands, from Golden Grain side dishes to cold cereals to Aunt Jemima products.

Quaker has high hopes for Golden Grain, and this year launched a new ad campaign from Chiat/Day, San Francisco, to help what it calls "undermarketed" brands. Sales were up 14.7% in 1987. Golden Grain holds about one-third of the $320 million rice side dish category and 28% of the noodle side dish category.

The Fisher-Price division, Quaker's only remaining nonfood business, continues to be a stellar performer in the rollercoaster toy industry. Sales rose 38%, to $821 million, with operating income up 63%, to $106 million. The division benefited from strong sales of its core infant products, plus a good reception for its Fun With Food playfood line. Despite a lukewarm reception for the PXL 2000 camcorder, its first toy aimed at preteens, Fisher-Price in August introduced Pocket Rockers, kid-size tape players. Spending for the division was $35 million, up 31.6% from 1986.

In February, C. Clarkson Hine was named VP-advertising, filling a slot that had been open for nearly six months. Mr. Hine came to Quaker from D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, Chicago, and replaced Charles Decker, who last year became exec VP of Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, New York.

Diversity appears to have energized Ralston Purina. From its inception nearly a century ago as an animal feed producer to its acquisition of Continental Baking Co. and Eveready Battery Co. in the mid-1980s, Ralston Purina has transformed itself into a major player in the consumer marketplace.

In no corporate division was this more evident last year than in Eveready Battery Co. During its first full year under the Ralston Purina banner, Eveready posted sales in excess of $1.1 billion, solidifying its first-place position in the highly-competitive battery industry.

During 1987, Eveready switched pitchers for its lucrative Energizer line, dropping Mary Lou Retton for Australian celebrity Jacko, whose loud, brash Energizer commercials were already a hit Down Under. Ted Bates International's George Patterson Pty., Sydney, produced the Australian ads, but DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, handled the $25 million account in the U.S.

DDB Needham also handled the print and TV campaign for Eveready's The Conductor, a new line of alkaline batteries introduced this past February. The premium-priced, high-output batteries are designed specifically for use in audio equipment.

In April 1988, Ralston Purina's in-house sales promotion division, Check-Mark, introduced a print campaign for Eveready Classic, the renamed line of traditional multi-purpose batteries. Ads were based on the theme "The world's choice for dependability," and initially appeared in the April issues of major consumer magazines.

In the $5.6 billion domestic pet foods industry, Purina led the pack with a 27.3% market share. The company positioned itself vigorously in the medium- and premium-priced markets through the introduction of dog foods, Purina O.N.E.

and Purina Pro Plan, dog snacks Cheesedawgs and Hearty Chews and cat food products Smart Cat and Unique.

Though in a battle with Quaker Oats for domination of the $3.5 billion dog food market, Purina's spending in seven measured media dropped to $39 million in 1987, down 26%. The heaviest promotional efforts were concentrated on Purina O.N.E., Purina Dog Chow, Grrravy and Purina Lucky Dog. Wells, Rich, Greene, New York, developed a campaign to reintroduce Purina's Butcher's Blend dry dog food via bacon-scented scratch 'n sniff newspaper inserts, while Scali, McCabe, Sloves, New York, created animated TV spots for Grrravy.

In cat foods, Purina conducted an agency review earlier this year, re-opening its dormant $8 million Meow Mix account. DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, got the final nod. Overall, however, Purina halved its expenditures in this area, spending $13.8 million in seven measured media vs. $27 million in 1986. Purina Cat Chow, Purina Kitten Chow, Smart Cat and Tender Vittles received the most promotional attention.

Continental Baking Co., makers of Wonder and Hostess products, recorded a boost in sales of 10.8%, attributed in part to the introduction of a dozen new products in regional and national markets over the past two years, including Wonder Light Bread, Hostess Choco-Bliss snack cakes and Bread du Jour.

Earlier this year, Continental added Hostess Pudding Cakes to its product list as part of an on-going effort to maintain dominance in the $1.25 billion snack cakes and pies market. Tatham-Laird & Kudner, Chicago handled the introductory campaign which consisted of inserts, print, radio and TV spots.

The introduction of new products which demanded heavy promotion resulted in a reshuffling of ad expenditures among Continental products. While spending in seven measured media more than doubled for Hostess Snack Cakes ($7.7 million in 1987 vs. $3.5 million in 1986) and Wonder Light Bread ($6.4 million in 1987 vs. $2.5 million in 1986), it fell for Hostess Pies ($2.1 million in 1987 vs. $7.8 million in 1986) and Wonder Bread ($4.6 million in 1987 vs. $6.2 million in 1986).

In all, Ralston Purina spent close to $31 million promoting Continental products last, down 7.8%.

Ralston Purina's fifth place ranking among cereal marketers remained unchanged in 1987. Ralston introduced several products over the past year starting with a new version of Freakies, a children's cereal it first marketed between 1974 and 1977. Wells, Rich, Greene, New York, the agency which handled the original account, was given the task of promoting the reincarnated Freakies, a pre-sweetened, multi-grain cereal with colored marshmallows.

Early this year Ralston introduced a second children's cereal, fruit-flavored Diner-Saurs, followed by the test-marketing of three new adult cereals—Bran News, Double Chex and Muesli. Avrett, Free & Ginsberg, New York, handled the Diner-Saurs introduction, Ally & Gargano, New York, Bran News and Wells, Rich, Greene, New York, Double Chex test markets assignment. Ralston's in-house agency, Centra Advertising, was given both the Double Chex and the Muesli national accounts.

Ralston's seven media measured spending on cereal products last year totaled $33.7 million, up 64.4%. Ad expenditures of $13.5 million for Chex cereals were nearly double the 1986 total, while spending on Chex Snack Mix promotions skyrocketed from $850,000 in 1986 to $5.2 million.

Chicken of the Sea tuna and pink salmon, with sales growing 6.5% to $290 million in 1987, received only $395,000 ad spending for pink salmon and virtually nothing for tuna.

Revlon spent 1986 getting bigger, and 1987 getting better. It reshuffled management, reorganized business segments and redirected marketing emphasis in 1987. A recognizable identity for the diverse cosmetics' company was the ultimate goal—the same goal put in place after the 1985 takeover by Ronald O. Perelman.

A single corporate identity is behind the launch of "The Nines" this month at Macy's in New York. "The Nines," embracing Revlon's fashion and designer lines, allows a customer to choose treatment, makeup and fragrances from nine of Revlon's prestige houses. Each line will offer a customer its "specialty," allowing the customer to coordinate her beauty needs from one convenient in-store location.

Included among "The Nines" are Ultima II, which specializes in color; the Princess Marcella di Borghese line, which will offer 'outrageous' colors and spa treatment products; Charles of the Ritz powder products and Alexandra de Markoff foundation products. Other lines include Lancaster, Revlon Classics and Revlon's prestige fragrances, such as Norell, Bill Blass and Halston.

A new line of treatment products, Jeanne Gastineau, will debut at the new branch of Bloomingdale's in Chicago which opened this month, and will eventually join its sisters as part of "The Nines." The print campaign, from Arnell Bickford Associates, New York, is scheduled for an October launch.

The Classic Revlon line is continuing its inhouse-designed campaign, "The most unforgettable women in the world wear Revlon," which features celebrities in a series of photographs by Richard Avedon. The September campaign, which features screen star Audrey Hepburn, was preceded by such famous faces as Brooke Shields and Liza Minnelli.

Ms. Minnelli and model Paulina Porizkova, in fact, proved revolutionaries in the cosmetic's industry. They signed on with Estee Lauder as well. Estee continues to dominate the prestige cosmetics market, with a 38% to 39% share of department store sales, followed by Cosmair, which holds a 14% share. Revlon is third at 10%. Revlon's Ultima II line is the No. 6 women's cosmetics brand, with a 3.6% share of market.

Revlon also is third in the mass market segment, where Noxell Corp.'s Cover Girl leads with a 21.2% share, followed by Schering-Plough's Maybelline at 19.5%, Revlon at 13.8% and Cosmair's L'Oreal, 5.2%, according to Value Line Investment Survey analyst Rudolph C. Carryl.

Cosmair leads the mass market fragrance category with Vanderbilt, having dethroned Revlon's Charlie fragrance from the top spot in 1987. Charlie, which received $2.8 million in measured support, down 22%, held a 5.2% share of the mass fragrance market in 1987. It has been gradually slipping since 1984 when it held a 5.9% share.

Altogether, Revlon has cornered 25% of the mass-fragrance market with its own developed brands that include Charlie, Intimate, Jontue and Scoundrel, plus its acquired fragrances like Enjoli, Tatiana, Forever Krystle, Midnight and X'ia X'ang. Xia X'ang received the largest media support among Revlon's fragrances, $3.5 million, in 1987.

Trouble, a new mass-market fragrance aimed at women 20- to 40-years-old, was introduced in department stores in August, and will enter the drugstore market in November. The $10 million campaign, developed by Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, New York, sports the tag line, "A little trouble keeps life interesting."

A new prestige fragrance, Couture, was introduced via Korey Kay & Partners, New York, in February at Bloomingdale's, prior to its national launch.

This year, Revlon re-introduced an older brand, the Clean and Clear shampoo system, aimed at the low-premium market segment. A $22 million campaign supports the first major shampoo/conditioner entry by Revlon in this $1.8 billion market since 1984, when Revlon introduced Hair's Daily Requirement, which is no longer being made by Revlon. Clean and Clear advertising features the product's clarity.

Neat-Touch professional manicure system was introduced in 1988 into the nail-care preparation market where Revlon is reported to generate $650 million a year in sales.

Revlon's Almay division introduced Stress Cream and Stress Eye Gel last year into that growing category. The Almay line received nearly $15 million in measured media support in 1987, up 36%. Max Factor's measured media budget remained at about $10 million.

Young & Rubicam became Revlon's agency of record as it took over the media-buying function from Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, ending Revlon's brief one-year relationship with that agency, which left to take on Faberge Inc.'s $15 million Elizabeth Arden business. Y&R picked up Revlon's Flex haircare line, when Grey Advertising resigned the account to take on Procter & Gamble's $10 million Pantene haircare account. The Flex line received $5.6 million in measured support last year. Along with the media-buying function, Y&R received an estimated $30 million worth of business from Revlon.

Lawrence Wechsler, formerly the president of Revlon's Beauty Group, U.S., became president at the turn of the year of the newly-formed Revlon Communications and Creative Group, which oversees advertising and other marketing functions.

The company reformed its fragrance and Revlon brands cosmetics business, known as Group I, into the Revlon Classic Cosmetics and Fragrance Group. Arnold Zimmerman continues as president of the newly-formed group and Paul Block, who had been the division's senior VP-marketing, became exec VP-marketing.

Revlon's former Group II became the Beauty Care Group under the continued leadership of Neil Katz. Andrea Robinson was named president of Ultima II and Robert Nielsen was named president of the Fashion and Designer Group.

The parent company sold off its optical subsidiaries this year. Barnes-Hind and Coburn were sold to U.K.-based Pilkington Bros. for a reported $574 million, while Frigitronics Inc., an eye-care and surgical products manufacturer, which had been purchased in 1986, was sold to Staar Surgical for an undisclosed sum.

RJR Nabisco lit a fire under the tobacco industry in 1987 with the announcement of a revolutionary new "smokeless" cigarette, and a year later, inflamed the ad industry by firing Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton on its $80 million-plus Nabisco Brands account.

In September 1987, RJR Tobacco Co. said it was preparing to introduce a cigarette that heats, rather than burns, tobacco and therefore does not emit sidestream smoke. The company is expected to spend about $100 million to develop and market the product, which has been assigned to Young & Rubicam, New York. Test marketing begins Oct. 1.

The "smokeless cigarette" caused an immediate furor among anti-smoking groups, which asked the Food & Drug Administration to regulate the new cigarette as a drug. To date, the FDA has not ruled on the request.

Then in April 1988, RJR ruffled more feathers when it dismissed Nabisco agency S&S DFS Compton for creating an anti-smoking commercial for another client, Northwest Airlines. RJR Tobacco Co. Chairman-CEO Edward Horrigan was said to be behind the move to "punish" the agency. The campaign was created and aired with no warning to RJR.

The company, faced with reassigning its cookie, cracker and confection business to a new agency, used the opportunity to realign its entire U.S. agency roster, eliminating Tatham-Laird & Kudner and Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt entirely.

RJR moved the bulk of its Nabisco business to its tobacco agencies. The biggest winner was FCB/Leber Katz Partners, agency for Salem and Vantage cigarettes, which picked up $90 million in Nabisco business, including Oreo and Chips Ahoy! cookies (from S&S DFS), Fleischmann's margarine (from TLK) and Life Savers roll candy (S&S DFS). FCB/LKP's total RJR Nabisco billings shot up to $125 million with the assignments.

Interpublic Group of Cos., whose McCann-Erickson unit already handled $150 million in billings for Camel and Winston cigarettes and Nabisco cracker brands, picked up new Nabisco business through its sister agencies, Lowe Marschalk and Lintas:USA. Lowe was assigned the $4 million Ortega Mexican food lines formerly at TLK, and Lintas, a newcomer to the Nabisco roster, was awarded $25 million in Planters nuts and snacks, including Baby Ruth and Butterfinger candy.

Long, Haymes & Carr, Winston-Salem, N.C., the agency for Doral cigarettes, was assigned the $4 million Bubble Yum account previously at S&S DFS.

Executive changes abounded at RJR and its Nabisco Brands subsidiary, the latter of which reorganized in 1988. In March 1987, Ross Johnson, RJR Nabisco president, added the title of CEO when J. Tylee Wilson stepped down from that post. But Mr. Wilson, although originally intending to keep the chairmanship, relinquished that office in April and took early retirement. Later that month, J. Paul Sticht, a retired RJR exec, was brought back as acting chairman, but was later succeeded by Charles Hugel, a surprise move because he was a non-company exec. Mr. Hugel remains president-CEO of Combustion Engineering Co. as well.

At RJR Tobacco USA, Dolph von Arx, 53, a former Thomas J. Lipton exec, succeeded Gerald Long as president-CEO. Mr. Long became chairman of that unit until his retirement in 1988.

Relating to RJR's move that brought $200 million in broadcast buying in-house from Ohlmeyer Communications in November 1987, president-CEO at Ohlmeyer, John Martin, became an exec VP at RJR Nabisco and William Liss, Ohlmeyer VP-public affairs, joined RJR in that capacity.

In December, the company formed a new unit, RJRN Golf, and later changed its name to Sports Marketing Enterprises Inc., awarding advertising and promotion of company-sponsored sports events to Long, Haymes & Carr.

In 1987, RJR adopted an incentive compensation system for its agencies, giving a 20% bonus to agencies doing "outstanding" work. A 10% bonus is given for "very good." Average and poor are not given bonuses, but paid an undisclosed, fixed commission.

RJR Nabisco made sizable media spending swings in 1987, funneling 34.7% more spending in network TV than in 1986. It increased cable by 40.5% but cut magazine spending 21.9% and sliced newspapers by 60%.

RJR increased its share of the $33.7 billion tobacco market to 32.6% from 32.3% in 1986, according to John Maxwell, analyst with Wheat First Securities, Richmond, Va. Still, RJR's gain paled in comparison to leader Philip Morris' increase of 1.1 share points to 37.9%. The overall market however decline by 2.5% in units.

To grab some of PM's share, RJR is focusing on its core full-price cigarette brands, Winston, Salem, Camel and Vantage, and concentrating on stealing away some of PM's [illegible] the young adult smoker.

But that effor[illegible] not fully under way until 1988, was not reflected in spending figures for the company's cigarette brands in 1987, with the exception of Camel. According to BAR/LNA, measured spending for Vantage plunged 39% to $22 million in 1987; Salem spending dropped 35% to $20 million, and Winston spending dipped 10% to $36 million. Spending in 1988, however, is expected to be up markedly.

The company's first move to update its brands was an aggressive new campaign for Camel, celebrating the brand's 75th anniversary. The ads, via McCann-Erickson, New York, brought "Old Joe," the brand's packaging symbol since its introduction, to life in musical and pop-up magazine ads themed, "75 Years and Still Smokin'." Then, in summer 1988, the campaign was expanded to show Old Joe dressed as "Top Gun" and "Miami Vice" type characters with a new theme, "Smooth Character." Camel's 1987 market share was 4.2%, according to the Maxwell Report, tying it for fourth place in cigarette brands with PM's Benson & Hedges.

to younger smokers began in December 1987, when packaging was updated with vivid color and a more bold sailing motif logo. By summer, the effort was extended to advertising in a campaign from FCB/LKP. "Refreshest" theme were run in nine zoned editions of national magazines, which used sight and sound. The four-page ad contains a picture of a champagne bottle about to be popped on the first page. When the page is turned, a paper facsimile of a champagne cork "pops" out with an attention-getting sound.

Salem was the third-largest selling cigarette brand in 1987, according to the Maxwell Report, with a 7.7% share behind PM's Marlboro and RJR's own Winston. But that share dropped 0.1 point from 1986. Another menthol, Lorillard's Newport, is gaining share, to 4.3% from 3.8% in 1986.

RJR VP-advertising and brand management Rick Sanders said similar attention-getting efforts are planned for Vantage and Winston in 1988, but declined to specify further. Vantage's 1987 share was 3.2%, even with the prior year, but Winston's share dipped 0.1 share points to 11.1%.

In August 1988, the company introduced Magna, a generic-priced cigarette, into North Atlantic states. Long, Haymes & Carr handles the brand, whose ad theme is "Good Smoke. Great Price."

A major restructuring went into effect in June 1988 at Nabisco Brands, designed to trim staff 20% to 1,600. The restructuring broke the U.S. company into two additional operating companies, Nabisco Biscuit Co. and Nabisco Foods. Del Monte Foods and Del Monte Tropical Fruit already had been broken out as separate companies late in 1987.

Through the restructuring, Ellen Marram, 41, and William McKnight, 43, essentially switched jobs. Mr. McKnight, who was president-biscuit division, moved to president-CEO Nabisco Foods. Ms. Marram, previously president-grocery division, moved to president, Nabisco Biscuit. Peter Rogers, 49, added CEO of Nabisco Biscuit while remaining an exec VP of Nabisco Brands. And H. John Greeniaus, 43, moved to president-CEO of the Nabisco Brands holding company.

Nabisco in 1987 introduced a host of line extensions to established brand names, such as Oreo Big Stuf, new flavors of Newtons, chocolate enrobed Oreos, Ritz Bits and Cheese Ritz Bits crackers. A-1 Steak Sauce was extended with an A-1 Poultry Sauce, which received $3.4 million in measured spending.

The company said its "18 New Stars from Nabisco" cookie and cracker lines introduced in 1987 generated $200 million in sales that year, a figure anticipated to climb to $300 million in 1988. The company said the line generated "20 miles of new shelf space" in grocery stores for Nabisco. RJR Nabisco Vice Chairman Robert Carbonell told securities analysts in February 1988 that the "New Stars" increased the company's cookie market share to 37.1%, up one percentage point, and the company's cracker share up two points to 54.7%.

Two of the biggest stars in the line-up were newcomers: American Classic Crackers, supported by $5.9 million in 1987 spending, according to BAR/LNA, and Quackers, supported with $6 million.

The company rolled out Fruit Wheats cereal in 1987, a fruit-in-the-middle cold cereal entry which helped Nabisco achieve a 23% share of the adult cold cereal market, the company said. Spending on Fruit Wheats, advertised as "the In Cereal," was $10 million via FCB/LKP.

The adult market is a subsegment of a much larger ready-to-eat cereal market in which Nabisco held a 4.9% share in 1987, up from 4.5% the prior year. Only one Nabisco cereal, Shredded Wheat, made the top 10, with a 3.6% share.

Citing efficiencies, RJR moved its Planters division to Winston-Salem, N.C., combining its sales unit with tobacco in a new group called RJR Sales. Ralph Angiuoli, 51, formerly president of RJR Tobacco USA, was named president of the new unit.

During 1987, Planters introduced two major products: Planters Premium Select microwave popcorn and Life Savers Fruit Juicers, a 10% juice product rolled national in 1988. Premium Select received $6.3 million in 1987 measured spending, according to BAR/LNA.

Two new shelf-stable products joined the Del Monte line-up in 1987 and 1988, Del Monte Vegetable Classics, tested in Phoenix and Seattle, and Del Monte Yogurt Cup, a kid's yogurt which began rolling national in summer 1988. With Yogurt Cup, Del Monte concentrated on extending the company's single-serve cup snack line to 20 items.

In February 1988, Nabisco sold its confectionery brands, including Junior Mint, Charleston Chew and Sugar Daddy to Warner-Lambert Co.'s American Chicle Group. Terms were not disclosed. Sales in 1987 for the unit were $57 million.

Sara Lee restructured in 1987 from five to three business segments to cross-link its top brands. It sold off business lines that didn't fit its new lineup, including Electrolux, and broadened its European base through acquisition.

The company, already an experienced mail order marketer, also set in motion plans to expand direct marketing in the near future. It also plans to apply the Sara Lee corporate name to all operations of the company, a practice notably absent in packaging and advertising to date.

The company condensed its five business segments into three—Packaged Foods, Foodservice and Packaged Consumer Products. It cut, shifted and folded together its existing companies to gain product synergies within the divisions for its wealth of brands, many of which lead their market category.

Specifically, Packaged Foods consolidated Hollywood Brands (candy) and Sara Lee Bakery, the latter the new logo for Kitchens of Sara Lee and Chef Pierre (pies). Packaged Meats, another subunit of Package Foods, pulled together many regional processed meat companies and the nationally-marketed Jimmy Dean and Hillshire Farm sausage brands. Within that subunit, Standard was linked with Hi Brand, Buring and Seitz with Bryan, and R.B. Rice with Rudy's Farm, which in turn is merging with Jimmy Dean. Yet a third Packaged Foods subgroup—Coffee and Grocery—brought together Sara Lee's big Dutch beverage and tobacco unit, Douwe Egberts, and the new Akzo acquisition in Holland, the C.V.B.G. wine company, and Jonker Fris, the Dutch fruit and vegetable canner.

Foodservice centered around PYA/Monarch restaurant and institutional supply company, operating from the Atlantic seaboard through the Midwest. Booth Fisheries was folded into PYA/Monarch. Superior Coffee and Foods, and the Lyons chain of 63 family-style, 24-hour restaurants in California, Nevada and Oregon filled out the group, although the latter is believed to be on the block.

Packaged Consumer Goods pulled in hosiery units, leatherware, brushes, gloves, bras, shoe polish, the household and personal-care business of Intradal and part of the new Akzo addition in Europe.

Where this process shows holes, Sara Lee is buying or making acquisitions, most recently in manufacturers of hosiery, knit-wear, snacks and personal products. Where product duplication or performance or distribution are problems, it has viewed divestiture as one answer.

The biggest acquisition in Sara Lee history was its $600 million purchase early this year of Akzo Consumenten Produkten (ACP), a maker of foods and personal and household products marketed in 13 European countries, with $720 million total annual sales in 1986. Akzo was owned jointly by Akzo NV and Shell Petroleum NV.

Sara Lee in July 1988 agreed to acquire one of its Hanes hosiery manufacturing suppliers, Adams-Millis, High Point, N.C., in an exchange of stock valued at $80 million. A month earlier the company said it planned to purchase 50% interest in Pannill Knitting Co., Martinsville, Va., maker of fleeced sweatpants and sweatshirts. Earlier in 1988, it bought Stedman Corp., a North Carolina underwear and sportswear producer, which became part of Hanes Printables. French government approval is being sought to enlarge its holdings in Dim SA, a Frency hosiery-lingerie supplier company, from 34% to 60%.

Sara Lee's Kiwi household products line gained strength through the acquisition in late 1987 of Knomark Inc., a division of Papercraft Corp., New York. Knomark produces Ty-D-bol toilet cleaner, which will complement Kiwi's existing cleaners, including Toilet Duck and Bloo.

Sara Lee said its Electrolux sweeper company did not fit the long-term objectives of the company and sold it in October 1987 to its management and affiliates of the First Boston Corp. and Wesray Capital Corp. Also sold was New York-based Sirena Co., maker of Sirena swimwear and Wear-About leisure wear. Its West Coast Lyons Restaurant chain could be the next on the block.

Greater reliance on mail order also is in the works, said a corporate spokeswoman. Already Sara Lee uses mail order in the marketing of Fuller Brushes, Coach Leatherware and Wolferman Muffins, a Kansas City line. One of the newly-created operating companies is Sara Lee Direct, a combo of Coach, Fuller and an existing mail-order operation, Direct Marketing Division.

Adapting to the demographic punch of this era—no housewives at home to greet the door-knocking Fuller Brush man—Fuller is trying two alternatives: a 52-page four-color direct-mail catalog, circulating about 15 million copies, and three retail stores, two in the Dallas area and one, a factory outlet, in Birch Run, Mich.

The big Sara Lee foodservice unit, PYA Monarch, based in Greenville, S.C., this summer launched a new slick monthly tabloid, The Monarch Edge, which PYA/Monarch VP John P. Gates calls the "cornerstone of our entire marketing plan for the fiscal year." Going to 105,000 existing and potential customers in the company's marketing areas, the four-color papers carry ads not only for Monarch and other Sara Lee companies but for non-Sara Lee foodservice suppliers who want to reach the Edge's readers.

In new products, PYA/Monarch introduced two rape seed cooking oils, Nutra-Fry and Nutra-Clear, which the company claims have zero cholesterol and 50% less saturated fat than any other product now made in the U.S. A 1988 addition to the Kitchens of Sara Lee Hearty Fruit Muffin line was Raisin Bran Muffins, both frozen and microwaveable.

Hollywood Brands introduced a new Fun Size or miniature version of its familiar non-chocolate peanut and nougat Pay Day candy bar, sold in 12 oz. bags. After trying a multi-media tack for its advertising in 1986, Hollywood has gone back to print only. Spending rose 23% in 1987 to $3.2 from 1986. Ads appear in 28 titles covering a broad range of categories—service, glamor, men's, outdoor, sports—weighted 60% to women, since they make quantity purchases in supermarkets, and 40% to men, who tend to buy mostly single bars from vending machines.

In the biggest single segment of Sara Lee advertising, the Hanes line of hosiery, underwear and printables sports shirts, ad spending was down 8.5% to $32.7 million, according to BAR/LNA. Within the line, hosiery advertising was up 5.5% to $17.5 million, men's underwear fell 13.2% to $13.9 million and Hanes Children's underwear plummeted to only $482,200 from $2.9 million in 1986.

Major gainers among the various Sara Lee lines of media-promoted products were: Aris brands of gloves, slippers and accessories, up 35% to $19.2 million, Bali bras and panties, at $2.4 million, up from $645,900 and Kitchens of Sara Lee brands, climbing 7% to $12.4 million.

L'eggs advertising, which makes heavier use of television, compared to print, than Hanes, dropped 6.4% to $24.1 million. The meat line fell 12.3% to $21.9 million, although two major brands were up—Jimmy Dean, up 57% to $7.3 million, and Bryan Meats, up 19.5% to $4.8 million.

Spot TV is favored by all of Sara Lee's retail meat companies doing consumer promotion. Only Hillshire Farm and Jimmy Dean, the two truly national brands, use network. Hillshire Farm figured into one of Sara Lee's few agency changes during the year. Hillshire Farm Heartland Division, New London, Wis., switched its account, worth $5 million, from Frankenberry, Laughlin & Campbell, Milwaukee to Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Minneapolis.

With the coming of its new 1988 fiscal year, Sara Lee had a new president, Paul Fulton, 53, former exec vp and L'eggs Products exec who contributed to development of the famed egg-shaped package. Vacating the president's office to start a new career in public service at age 53 was John B. McKinnon, who subsequently agreed to stay for a year with Sara Lee, working to develop the foodservice line. New also is Cornelis Boonstra, 50, who became corporate exec VP.

Charles W. Lubin, 84, founder in 1949 of the Kitchens of Sara Lee, whose daughter's name was adopted in 1984 as the new corporate marque of Consolidated Foods Corp., died of a heart attack while driving in Chicago's Loop July 15, 1988. The Sara Lee label originally identified a cake brand which Mr. Lubin had named for his newly-born daughter, Sara Lee, following a suggestion from his wife, Tillie, which she had made in jest. In 1956, Mr. Lubin sold the highly successful Kitchens of Sara Lee to Consolidated Foods Corp.

Schering-Plough propped up its major advertised unit, Maybelline, with its largest-ever advertising and promotion budget as the cosmetic's unit introduced 16 new products, revived sales and boosted market share by 1.5 share points.

Maybelline, which is expected to increase its sales by 15% this year, got $42 million in measured spending in 1987, up 20%. This helped Maybelline acquire a 19.5% share of the cosmetic's mass market, according to Value Line Investment Survey analyst Rudolph C. Carryl, who notes the share is second only to Noxell's Cover Girl line's 21.2%.

Other players include Revlon cosmetics, which has a 13.8% share, while Cosmair's L'Oreal holds 5.2% of that market.

Newly-assigned advertising agency, DDB Needham, Chicago, promoted the brand's product benefits with the theme, "Smart, Beautiful, Maybelline." The media emphasis has been on direct advertising via TV and print, because "Cosmetics are an advertising, not a promotion, business," a DDB Needham spokesman said.

Eye makeup continues to be Maybelline's strength. Successful new product launches in 1987 included Blooming Colors mascara in vivid colors and Color Wand powder eye shadows. Maybelline's mascara commands a 45% share in supermarkets, while Maybelline shadows account for 48% of that market, according to Salomon Bros. VP and cosmetics industry analyst, Diana K. Temple. The biggest single product support went to Maybelline mascara, which received $14 million in measured media, up 54% from 1986.

Coppertone Suntan Products, part of Schering-Plough's proprietary medicines and toiletries segment, its second largest consumer segment, maintained leadership in the $250 million suncare products category, with close to a 20% share of that market, according to Jim Saberton, senior consultant with Fairfield, N.J.-based Kline & Co., marketing consultants.

Coppertone's distant competitors include Charles of the Ritz's Bain de Soleil line, which has a 10% share, and Schering-Plough's own Tropical Blend, which is tied with Tanning Research Laboratories' Hawaiian Tropic brand for between a 5%-8% share. Coppertone's Water Babies children's suncare product line was extended to include formulas which offer higher levels of sun blockage. The entire Coppertone line received nearly $5 million in measured media support.

In April of this year, Schering-Plough pulled three brands, totaling about $20 million in measured spending, from Ogilvy & Mather Advertising, following a reported dispute over ad claims made by Schering-Plough. Those products were Fibre Trim diet plan, Ocu-Clear eye drops and Chlor-Trimeton allergy medicine. Ogilvy & Mather continues to promote Drixoral, while Fibre Trim and Ocu-Clear are as yet unassigned. Chlor-Trimeton was assigned to Ketchum/Hicks & Griest Advertising, New York.

Fibre Trim diet plan continues to perform well in the $400 million diet-aid category, though its share has declined since first taking the lead following its 1985 introduction. In 1986, Fibre Trim held a 30% share of the market, but that figure dropped to 15% in 1987, relegating Fibre Trim to the No. 2 position. Thompson Medical Co.'s Dexatrim leads the category with a 30% share, while Ciba-Geigy Corp.'s Accutrim is close behind Fibre Trim with a 12%-15% share. Fibre Trim received around $10 million in measured support last year. A line extension product, easy-to-use Fibre Trim Sparkling Fruit Tabs, is expected to bolster the brand, following its introduction in December 1987, backed by a reported $28 million budget.

Drixoral, the prescription cold medication that went OTC in 1982, received $6.6 million in measured spending, up from $1.5 million in 1986 as Schering-Plough introduced it to network TV. Drixoral maintain its 7% market share, and product sales grew along with the category, according to Mr. Saberton of Kline & Co. The product got a Drixoral-Plus line extension.

Leading the $700 million cold medications category are Procter & Gamble's Nyquil, with a 12.5% share, Miles' (Bayer) Alka-Seltzer, with a 9% share, and Burroughs-Wellcome's combined 8%-8.5% share for its Actifed and Sudafed products, Mr. Saberton said.

Led by the immense success of the new Dura Soft 3 Colors contact lens line, vision-care sales for Schering-Plough's Wesley-Jessen subsidiary more than doubled to about $100 million aided by measured spending of $8.6 million, according to BAR/LNA.

W-J estimates that Dura Soft Colors sales were responsible last year for one-half the growth of the entire contact lens market. Niched as offering the only opaque colored lens on the market, the line represents one-third of the market for tinted lenses.

During 1987, the color range of the opaque lenses for dark eyes was broadened, and lenses for light eyes were introduced at the end of 1987. The line now offers various shades of blue and green, hazel and aqua. A violet shade is expected to debut in the fall, pending FDA approval. A new lens for astigmatism was introduced in 1988, as well as a new solutions line for contact lens users.

Schering-Plough's plans to acquire the worldwide contact lens operations of the Cooper Co., Palo Alto, Calif., have been put on hold because of regulatory objections from the FTC. The acquisition would have nearly doubled Schering-Plough's vision-care business. Cooper reportedly had $80 million in revenues in 1987.

Schering-Plough completed its divestiture of the international side of Dr. Scholl's businesses in August 1987, while Scholl USA, Memphis, named a new agency, Della Femina McNamee WCRS, New York, to handle its $7 million footcare advertising, after Backer Spielvogel Bates resigned the account earlier this year.

Jos. E. Seagram & Sons, the U.S. arm of Seagram Co. Ltd., has shifted marketing emphasis to its top brands, diversified through acquisition and continued to emphasize heavy ad spending to try to reverse the units overall decline in sales.

The company credits the reorganization of Seagram's U.S. subsidiaries in 1987 with producing higher sales for several of its liquor lines—Chivas Regal, V.O., 7 Crown and Seagram's Gin, despite an industry-wide slump in U.S. liquor consumption.

And marketing emphasis more than ever is being placed on the company's top-selling brands: Chivas Regal, Canadian Club, V.O., 7 Crown and The Glenlivet—Seagram's single malt scotch whisky and the market leader in the category.

Seagram has broadened existing market categories and entered a new one this year through two acquisitions, both in April 1988. The biggest purchase was that of Tropicana Products Inc., a leading U.S. producer of premium-branded fruit juices and juice beverages, from Beatrice Cos. for $1.2 billion. This places Seagram in the non-alcoholic beverage field.

Headquartered in the juice country of Bradenton, Fla., Tropicana leads the rapidly-growing and increasingly competitive ready-to-serve orange juice segment.

Tropicana, whose 1987 revenues totaled $760 million, commands a 32% share to Coca-Cola Foods' Minute Maid's 19% of the ready-to-serve market. Tropicana had enjoyed exclusivity in the ready-to-serve chilled orange-juice segment of the market, but Minute Maid's introduction of Premium Choice ready-to-serve takes direct aim at Tropicana on its home turf—the Northeast. Because 70% of Tropicana's sales are east of the Mississippi, company officials intend to expand the market westward and north to Canada this year. Minute Maid leads the frozen orange juice category with a 30.6% share of market to Tropicana's 9.7%, and Citrus Hill's (Procter & Gamble) 9%. Overall, Minute Maid had 22% of the o.j. market compared to Tropicana's 18% for 12 months ended May 31, according to A.C. Nielsen.

Armed with an ad budget of over $20 million in measured spending, Seagram's Tropicana line has the potential to expand in North America and also into international markets. Another possible diversification could be the development of new beverage products that combine juice and a Seagram's spirits product, said Marie L. Conway, analyst with Value Line Investment Survey.

The second big purchase was an $820 million expenditure for Martell SA, the second largest cognac producer in the world. Founded in 1715, Martell is one of only four internationally recognized cognacs in the world. Martell holds the No. 2 position in the market with an 18% share, and also produces the world's largest-selling Janneau Armagnac.

Hennessy, a subsidiary of Moet-Hennessy-Louis Vitton SA, leads the world market with a 20% share. The purchase of Martell allows Seagram to expand into international markets, especially in the Far East, where cognac is experiencing especially good growth. Cognac is one of the few sectors of the liquor business that's growing.

Chivas Regal Scotch continues to be Seagram's most successful international product. It is the largest-selling premium 12-year-old Scotch in the world. Last year, sales were up 22% over 1986. This past May, Chivas was imbued with a more youthful, active image in its first campaign in 25 years that replaced its longstanding "pinnacle of quality" theme. The new $12 million campaign from DDB Needham seeks to promote frequency of use with the new theme, "What are you saving the Chivas for?"

Among the top-selling U.S. brands, Seagram's 7 Crown is the largest-selling blended whiskey in North America, according to Impact, the New York-based alcoholic beverage industry newsletter. Seagram's 7 Crown received $4.6 million in measured media allotment last year, a boost of 35%.

The $1.6 billion wine-cooler market was flat in 1987 after several years of strong growth. However, of the four top brands in the category, only Seagram's coolers grew, gaining nearly 16 market share points, to take the No. 1 position with a 26% share. Dethroned Bartles & Jaymes from Gallo slipped to No. 2, with a 24% share, while Brown-Forman's California Cooler came up third with 12%, according to Frank Walter, director of research with Impact.

"Moonlighting" star Bruce Willis was replaced in the new Ogilvy & Mather campaign, despite the phenomenal growth of the brand while he was spokesman. The new $30 million Seagram's Wine Cooler campaign features a trio of stars: "Cheers" star Woody Harrelson, "Fatal Attraction" actress Anne Archer (she played the wife) and comedian Steve Guttenberg.

Imported champagne was another area where Seagram held its own in 1987. It held No. 2 and No. 3 positions in the $700 million champagne category with Mumm (3.6% share) and Perrier-Jouet (1.6%). Moet/Chandon from Schieffelin & Co. held the top spot with an 8.6% share, according to Mr. Walter of Impact.

Seagram also signed a sales and marketing agreement with Tequilas of Herradura for a premium tequila brand of the same name last year, which gives Seagram its first niche in this popular market segment.

The company will be entering the Chinese market soon, under a joint marketing agreement signed in April with China Distillery in Shanghai to produce wine coolers, whiskeys and sparkling wines for the Far East in addition to the Chinese market. The joint venture will be known as Shanghai Seagram Ltd.

Edgar Bronfman Jr., son of the company's chairman, moved to corporate headquarters in the No. 2 spot behind his father. The son was president of the House of Seagram, a U.S. division of Jos. E. Seagram & Sons, prior to recently being appointed exec vp of U.S. corporate parent, Jos. E. Seagram & Sons. The newly-named president of the House of Seagram is William G. Pietersen, who had been with Guinness America Inc. since 1986, and before that with Unilever for 18 years.

Sears, Roebuck & Co., the nation's No. 1 retailer, is making major changes to fend off encroachment from mass merchandisers and specialty retailers. From the corporate offices in Sears Tower to its automotive service departments, the company is overhauling its management and marketing strategies, to become more focused and aggressive.

After reporting lackluster earnings in 1987 from the Sears Merchandise Group, the company took several pivotal steps in 1988. Sears first announced a restructuring of its headquarters operation in early 1988, followed by a record number of acquisitions and new ventures aimed at helping the company catch up with its specialty retailing competition.

The restructuring resulted in the reassignment and dismissal of several top executives, the creation of new key positions and the beginning of a gradual reduction of its 8,000-member headquarters workforce, mainly through attrition.

In the fall of 1988, Sears also said it would replace its three-year-old umbrella ad slogan: "There's more for your life at Sears," with: "Sears: your money's worth and a whole lot more." The new slogan actually has been used in Canada since 1980. Michael Bozic, chairman and CEO of the Merchandise Group, was formerly head of operations in Canada and influenced the company's decision to adopt the "your money's worth" slogan.

Shortly after announcing the new slogan, Sears also said it planned a new TV ad push to start in late 1988, running for at least 18 months. The focus will be on its strongest private brands, including Kenmore appliances, Craftsman tools and DieHard batteries.

Ogilvy & Mather, Chicago, remains Sears' agency-of-record for the entire Merchandise Group, following the consolidation of its account there in 1986.

Overall media spending for the merchandise group was down 36% in 1987, excluding local newspaper advertising, where Sears spends heavily.

Despite its vast experience in newspaper advertising, Sears clashed with the New York City Department of Consumer Affairs in 1988, which claimed that certain ads for services and merchandise were "deceptive and misleading." Among other charges, the agency said Sears used false deadlines in several ads for carpet cleaning services, to create the impression that customers had to hurry in to take advantage of sales.

Sears changed the ads in question, but challenged the agency in Federal District Court saying that New York City's regulations hindered its ability to advertise nationally, which is a growing concern among big retailers.

In 1988 the Merchandise Group made dramatic efforts to specialize, by acquiring new retailing operations and opening a variety of new in-store specialty departments and free standing stores.

Sears doubled the size of its Eye Care Centers of America optical store chain, and in August, renamed the 80-store division Eyemasters; Chiat/Day, Venice, Calif., handles the $7 million account.

After acquiring the 25-store chain of Pinstripe Petites, Sears was a bidder for several other apparel chains, including Talbots and Eddie Bauer Inc., but neither deal was consummated.

Meanwhile, the company debuted an in-store specialty department, carrying young women's apparel in all of its 800 stores, called Mainframe. Separate print advertising for Mainframe ran in Seventeen magazine, targeting teenagers.

Its biggest acquisition to date came in March, when Sears bought Western Auto Supply, Kansas City, Mo., for $250 million. The company gained 278 corporate stores and wholesale distribution to 1,500 independently-owned franchised outlets. Sears continues to run the division under the Western Auto name.

In August, Sears also debuted in-store home electronics and appliance "superstores," named Brand Central in 13 Indianapolis stores. The Brand Central departments carry over 60 national brands alongside its top-selling Kenmore lines. Sears plans to roll out Brand Central departments in its general stores through 1990, while it tests some free standing outlets in 1989.

To keep up with competitors, including Montgomery Ward & Co.'s Electric Avenue outlets, Sears promised to match the advertised prices of any competitors' identical merchandise.

Next, Sears launched its first free standing McKids store, in a test in a Chicago shopping mall, followed by six more in the area. The new concept was built on Sears' successful introduction of McKids departments inside its stores in 1987, through a licensing agreement with McDonald's Corp.

The new McKids stores will be tested in 20 to 40 mall locations through 1989, targeting dual-income, upscale families. The stores carry McKids-brand clothing, plus other brand-name apparel, toys and books.

Sears also opened its first free standing RoadHandler Car Care center in Chicago in August, which it will test.

In 1989 Sears also will try out its first "neighborhood store" concept in Chicago, in a test that was originally planned for the fall of 1988.

The medium-sized store may become a new format for Sears, in densely-populated urban or suburban areas where customers don't have access to a full-line department store. The smaller stores will feature selected apparel, home furnishings and a catalog pick-up area.

Sears opens its first free standing Home Furnishings Center in Manhattan in 1989, and it continues to test three Sleep Shops outlets in Miami.

The company continues its marketing relationship with Walt Disney, which resulted in its promotion of the re-release of the movie "Bambi" and a new movie called "Oliver & Co." in 1988, which were supported by TV advertising.

Sears also teamed with McDonald's and General Motors Corp. in 1988 for its second successful giveaway promotion tied to the game Monopoly, in which the three spent a total of around $70 million advertising the promotion.

The Dean Witter Financial Services Group, New York, reported that the Discover card showed a profit for the first time in the second quarter of 1988. Dean Witter predicts the card will be solidly profitable in 1989.

The $35 million Discover account moved to DDB Needham, Chicago from J. Walter Thompson USA. New TV spots from Needham in 1988 were aimed at driving up card use in restaurants and retail locations.

In July 1988, Dean Witter suddenly announced it would move its $10 million brokerage services account to Leo Burnett, Chicago, from Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, without conducting a review.

Burnett now has $40 million in billings from Sears, including its 30-year, $30-million relationship with Allstate, which continues its theme: "You're in good hands with Allstate." The insurance division, which in 1987 introduced the Allstate Advantage auto insurance product, reportedly will roll out more new products and may increase its budget in 1989.

In mid-1988, Allstate handed the management of its Mature Outlook travel club for senior citizens to Des Moines-based Meredith Corp., but it retains ownership of the operation.

The Coldwell Banker Real Estate Group, whose $2 million account remains at BBDO, Los Angeles, in 1987 introduced an aggressive multi-media ad campaign designed around its "Expect the best" residential real estate brokerage program. The Coldwell Banker division continues to expand its holdings in shopping centers across the country through its Homart Development Co.

At the end of 1987, Dallas-based Southland Corp. returned to private status as members of the founding Thompson family completed a $4.9 billion leveraged buyout of the company best known for its 7-Eleven convenience stores.

To help finance the buyout, JT Acquisition Corp. formed by Thompson brothers John, Jere and Joe Jr. sold major secondary operations of Southland including Chief Auto Parts, its Dairies Group and nearly 1,000 of its 7-Eleven stores.

At the same time, the company narrowed its focus toward the convenience store business and toward streamlining operations.

Company spokeswoman Cecilia Norwood said Southland implemented a significant reorganization of its 7-Eleven operations in November and December of 1987 as final placement of financing for the buyout was being completed. As part of the reorganization, the company eliminated two levels of management and doubled the number of divisions to 32 to allow managers to focus more on specific markets, she said.

The market-specific approach applies to advertising as well, Norwood said, as divisions have been given more flexibility to respond to market conditions. She said Southland is putting more emphasis on point-of-purchase promotions. "We are trying to merchandise better, and found in-store displays to be very effective," she said. "We are trying to pinpoint vehicles for specific markets."

The more market-specific approach does not mean Southland plans to abandon national efforts, but in this arena, too, the company is looking for extra value for its ad investments. For example, in the past year Southland has linked with two high-profile companies for special promotions—first with the Coca-Cola Co. in an introduction of a Coca-Cola-flavored Slurpee and last July with Oscar Mayer hot dogs in its "Big Bite" promotion.

Currently Southland is reorganizing its national ad effort with a review of the estimated $12 million retail account previously held by Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, New York. Ties also were severed with two agencies that worked primarily with divisions no longer owned by the company—Davis, Johnson, Mogul & Colombatto of Los Angeles, which handled specialty retail advertising and The Richards Group of Dallas, which worked with the manufacturing and distributing divisions.

However, Southland has maintained its tie with W.B. Doner & Co., Southfield, Mich., which has been handling special projects for 7-Eleven stores.

Doner's most notable work for 7-Eleven was a series of TV commercials featuring Dabney Coleman promoting the regular low prices the convenience stores offer on everyday products.

The spots aired primarily in May, June and July in Southland's major markets of Florida, Arizona and Texas.

While the company declined to discuss ad spending, it appears the early summer promotion added significantly to Southland's spending for TV in 1987. BAR/LNA Multi-Media Service reported Southland spent nearly $30.7 million in spot and network TV in 1987 compared to about $12.4 million in 1986.

Overall, BAR/LNA reported Southland spent nearly $33.6 million in seven measured media in 1987 compared with $15.8 million in 1986. For 1988, the company's ad expenses are expected to decline since some of the operations it sold shared in the overall ad budget in 1987 and because of the company's emphasis on overall efficiency.

Operations that were sold include 270 Houston stores in National Convenience Stores Inc. of Houston ($80 million), 473 stores in 10 states to The Circle K Corp. ($47 million) and 21 Missouri stores to FFP Operating Partners.

Southland now operates 7,200 7-Elevens in the U.S. and Canada, down from 7,818 at the end of 1987. It also operates 432 other convenience stores, and its licensees and affiliates operate another 4,600-plus stores in 14 foreign countries, Puerto Rico, Guam and parts of the U.S.

It sold its MovieQuik videocassette rental division to Cevaxs U.S. Corp. of Vancouver, B.C., for about $52 million. Included in the agreement was a nine-year distribution contract for Cevaxs to operate rentals in 4,100 7-Elevens.

Southland sold its Chief Auto Parts division, including 469 stores, to Chief Auto Parts Inc., a corporation formed by Chief's management and Shearson Lehman Brothers. The purchase price was more than $130 million in cash and assumption of certain liabilities.

A second group of Southland managers and investors led a $243 million buyout of the company dairies' food company and formed MorningStar Foods in Dallas.

The company also sold its Reddy Ice and Tidel Systems divisions.

Southland retained its 50% ownership in Citgo Petroleum Corp. and owns five distribution centers and six food centers to support its stores.

In 1987, Southland continued to expand its fast-food program both by increasing its fresh-food offerings like deli-style sandwiches, nachos and pizza as well as testing more branded fresh products like Dunkin' and Winchell's doughnuts.

Privately-held Stroh Brewery Co. maintained its No. 3 ranking among U.S. brewers in 1987, but its market share dropped for the third consecutive year, to 11.9% from 12.5% in the previous year.

In an effort to stop the slide, Stroh hired San Francisco-based Hal Riney & Partners in July 1988 as agency for the family-owned company's flagship Stroh and Stroh Light brands and premium Signature brand, replacing Lowe Marschalk, New York.

Considering Riney's creative reputation, industry observers were predicting the second demise of the Stroh brand spokesdog, Alex, who returned in November 1987 after a three-year hiatus to pitch Stroh and Stroh light. Alex fetched higher ad awareness for the brands than the preceding campaign, a good times-good friends-good beer approach to the theme, "Stroh's is spoken here." But some observers believed Alex overshadowed the brand and didn't generate new sales. Stroh also reduced ad spending for its premium brands in 1987 by 7.4% to $25.1 million.

Stroh's total beer shipments declined 5.3% last year to 21.6 million barrels, according to Emanuel Goldman, analyst for PaineWebber, San Francisco. Top ranking Anheuser-Busch maintained its No. 1 spot in 1987, securing approximately 41% of the domestic beer market, while No. 2 ranked Miller Brewing Co. holds a 21% share of the market.

Stroh's biggest selling brand, Old Milwaukee, dropped 2.7% in 1987 to 7.3 million bbls., but Old Milwaukee Light shipments increased 5.2% to 2 million bbls.

Stroh sharply increased ad spending on its leading popular-priced Old Milwaukee brands to $17.1 million, up 30.4%. Its second best-selling brand, Schaefer and Schaefer Light, shipped 4.2 million bbls., in 1987, down 2.3%. Schaefer drew only $285,500 in advertising, down 15%.

The brewer's premium Stroh and Stroh Light brands placed third in its lineup with 3.7 million bbls., shipped in 1987, down 7.5%.

In October 1987 Stroh sold its specialty beer, Erlanger, to the Dubuque Star Brewing Co., Milwaukee, claiming it was unable to give the high-end lager the marketing attention it deserved.

Stroh's Sundance Natural Juice Sparklers, a 70% fruit juice/30% sparkling water positioned between 10% juice-added soft drinks and bottled waters and seltzers, received measured media spending in 1987 of $4.6 million in a seven-market rollout beginning in June 1987. The product went national in June 1988.

This April, Stroh introduced in select markets its High Five 10% fruit-juice soft drink, first tested last October in Salt Lake City.

Stroh's White Mountain Cooler is struggling to maintain its presence in the cooler market. The beverage is rated No. 5 in the overall cooler market, though it is the top seller among malt-based coolers. Leaders in the wine cooler industry are Jos. E. Seagram & Sons and No. 2 Bartles & Jaymes, distributed by E&J Gallo Winery. Shipments of Stroh's White Mountain Cooler declined in 1987 to 4,615 cases, a 23.1% drop from the year before, estimates Impact, a liquor industry newsletter.

Stroh significantly decreased its measured spending for its brand of wine coolers in 1987, spending only $3.7 million, down from $14.2 million. In 1988, Stroh dropped out of TV advertising for the brand, concentrating instead on a radio campaign that featured up-and-coming comics delivering comedy routines.

Stroh is an active sponsor of hydroplane racing, fishing, golfing, equestrian events and motorsports. Stroh also sponsored a group of 14 racecar drivers, a group dubbed the "Stroh Bonus Pack." On the cultural side, it sponsors the Stroh Summer Jazz series, the Montreux Detroit Jazz Festival and the Atlanta Jazz Festival.

Subaru of America, a leader in the four-wheel drive market, is hoping its plans to expand into other markets will help restore profits and growth which dipped for the first time in 11 years in 1987.

Attempts to remain competitive and reduce inventory led the Cherry Hill, N.J.-based company in 1987 to nearly double 1986 ad expenditures.

Subaru, U.S. distributor for Fuji Heavy Industries, Tokyo, reported a loss of $30 million in 1987, compared with net income of $94 million the previous year. Sales dropped 7.7%, from $1.94 to $1.79 billion in 1987.

Fuji, whose fiscal year results are reported in the accompanying box, saw net income and sales decline 21.3% and 6.9%, respectively. (Figures for both fiscal years were converted at the rate of Y145.85 = U.S.$1.)

Subaru said the major contributing factor to its slide was the strength of the Japanese yen, which forced it to raise retail prices in the U.S. by roughly 25%. To compete with other automakers, the company narrowed its profit margin, supported dealers with sales incentives and higher-than-planned national and regional ad programs and offered hefty customer rebates.

Despite the company's financial woes, total unit sales dropped only 3.3%, to 177,138 vehicles. Subaru's shares of the U.S. import market and total U.S. car market remained about the same, at 5.6% and 1.7%, respectively.

Subaru was especially pleased by the debut performance of the Justy, its entry into the crowded, low-end market. "About 80% of the people who bought the Justy had never purchased a Subaru before, which means we obviously took some car sales away from other manufacturers," says David L. Sippel, vp-marketing. Subaru backed the Justy with $14.5 million in measured spending, according to BAR/LNA.

Over the next few years, Subaru hopes to attract new customers by introducing a more varied model mix and establishing itself in regional markets outside the snow belt and rural areas where its popularity has been greatest.

One step towards this goal was the purchase in 1987 of four regional distributorships previously under independent ownership. As a result, Subaru-owned distributors now cover 34 states and account for 55% of retail sales.

Subaru also is looking to its new $500 million Lafayette, Ind., manufacturing plant—a joint venture with Isuzu Motors—to provide the company with a major presence in the Midwest. The plant is scheduled to begin operating in fall 1989 with annual capacity of 60,000 Subaru cars. It will produce Subaru sedans and wagons.

Subaru's 1988 model line featured a new top-of-the-line XT6 with a horizontally-opposed 2.7 liter six-cylinder engine and "on demand" four-wheel drive in the Justy GL. Other changes included various detail improvements on the Hatchback, Sedan, Wagon, 3-Door Coupe and four-cylinder XT.

The company already has begun touting a new transmission system that will be available in 1989 Justys. Electronic Continuously Variable Transmission, or ECVT, is an electronic transmission without gears that the company said could set a new standard for small car transmissions.

Subaru continued to spend heavily on network and spot TV and newspaper advertising in 1987, with these four media accounting for more than three-quarters of the company's measured media spending.

Early in 1988, Subaru unveiled a two-tier marketing strategy, advertising cars below $10,000 as inexpensive and those above as upscale. Both broadcast and print ads featured a so-called human approach and stressed the cars' reliability, durability and high customer satisfaction rating.

One print ad for the Subaru Wagon, for example, shows a family headed for vacation piling into its car with a headline that reads, "Before you go on a trip, put your valuables in a safe place."

Subaru joined the ranks of automakers trying to target women by sending a three-packet mailing to 500,000 professional women with annual household incomes of about $35,000. The company hoped the program would make it easier for women to make a purchasing decision by giving them information before visiting a dealership. Women make up about half of Subaru's buyers, according to Christopher Wackman, director-advertising services.

On the promotional end, Subaru, official car of the U.S. ski team since 1976, continued to sponsor major national championships and World Cup skiing events held in the U.S. in an effort to increase its visibility in non-skiing areas. Subaru also became the official car of the U.S. Cycling Federation and began to sponsor bicycle races across the country.

Innovative new products, key acquisitions in the high-tech industry and continued refurbishing of its retail operations are improving the stature of Tandy Corp. in the computer industry.

Tandy, which recorded strong sales and earnings for its fiscal year ended June 30, made good on computer industry speculation in April 1988 when it came out with the market's first non-IBM computer to include a IBM Micro Channel-type bus system that allows for powerful enhancements in a personal computer.

That same month it surprised the technology community when it reported it had developed Tandy Thor-CD, a technology that allows people to record and erase digital information on a CD-compatible optical disc using a laser beam.

While Thor-CD is not expected to be available until 1990, Tandy is ready to license the technology. The product will retail for about $500. Industry analysts speculate if Tandy can fulfull its promise for a low-cost, erasable recorder, it would boost Tandy's standing and steal some thunder from the Japanese.

But before discussion wa[illegible] on Tandy's high tech products, the company announced in July it would purchase the highly regarded laptop computer maker, GRID Systems. Later in July, Tandy reported it would begin marketing an IBM PC-compatible computer to include digital voice and sound recording.

The company continues to redesign Radio Shack stores, giving them more of a high-tech look. By midyear 1988, Tandy had refurbished about 1,400 of its 4,900 stores at the rate of three stores a day, said Ed Juge, Tandy spokesman.

Tandy's various moves are getting plenty of notice from the investment community. Dennis Telzrow, a retail analyst with Eppler, Guerin & Turner in Dallas, said the company has gained consumer favor because its products are listed as compatible with a growing number of software products.

Tandy has continued a steady advertising program among the changes and innovation, dedicating about 8% of total sales to various forms of advertising.

The company continues to use its in-house Central Advertising Agency to manage and execute its ad program. Direct mail continues to be a cornerstone of the effort. The company sends out between 18 million and 24 million fliers a month with spending above $50 million annually. This is backed by the company's newspaper insert program, which Mr. Juge said is close to $60 million annually.

The company backs its print effort with a series of TV spots under the theme, "Why Tandy Computers?" The commercials highlight the capabilities of Tandy computers as well as value.

There are dark clouds on the horizon for Texas Air Corp., which took off in the deregulated skies on the strength of aggressive price-cutting and acquisitions of Eastern and Continental airlines financed by $4.9 billion in consolidated debt, and is now encountering severe turbulance, particularly between Eastern and its unions.

Spending in advertising has felt this downward pressure, dipping to $124.8 million in 1987, down 6.2% from the prior year—most of that related to reduced support for beleaguered Eastern Airlines and a cooling off in the media ad battles that flaired up in 1986 over discounting.

Eastern's measured spending for passenger advertising plummeted 60% to $7.3 million in 1987, according to BAR/LNA, which in 1987 did not monitor national newspaper spending. Main cutback in the BAR/LNA data was in spot TV, which dropped 65%. Newspaper advertising, by far the lead medium in the Continental-Eastern mix, because of the marketing focus on discount and comparative fares, dipped to $67.3 million in 1987 for Texas Air, down 6% from 1986 when discounting was at its peak.

Meanwhile, BAR/LNA measured media for passenger advertising at Continental jumped 424% to $7.8 million in 1987, most in spot TV. Eastern and Continental also had $3.4 million in combined measured media for passenger advertising, divided between spot TV and consumer magazines.

In 1986, Texas Air more than tripled the size of its airline operations through acquisitions of Eastern, Newark-based People Express, substantially all of the assets of Frontier Airlines, New York Air and two commuter carriers and a substantial number of additional aircraft. At the close of 1986, Texas Air's fleet numbered 636 aircraft, compared with 160 aircraft at the end of 1985.

Consolidation of non-computerized carriers into Continental caused massive confusion and disruptions of service. As Continental brought the situation under control through 1987, the carrier nearly doubled its fourth quarter 1987 ad spending to counter the public's negative image of the complaint-ridden airline.

Texas Air incurred a consolidated net loss of $466.1 million in 1987 on total operating revenues of $8.5 billion. In 1986, the corporation recorded net income of $72.7 million on operating revenues of $4.4 billion, including the results from Eastern beginning on July 8, 1986. Results from People Express Airlines were consolidated beginning Dec. 31, 1986.

For the first six months of 1988, Texas Air recorded a consolidated loss of $380.1 million on operating revenues of $4.26 billion, compared with a loss of $127.7 million on operating revenues of $4.2 billion in the year-earlier period.

At the close of 1987, Eastern ranked No. 6 among U.S. air carriers with a 9.2% share, while Continental ranked No. 7 with 8.3%, based on revenue passenger miles, according to PaineWebber, New York. A revenue passenger mile is the standard measure of revenue gained by carrying one paying passenger one mile. United Airlines had 17.5% share, American 15.1%, Delta 13.4%, Northwest 10.9% and USAir 10.2%.

The biggest headache for Texas Air's Chairman Frank Lorenzo is labor problems at Miami-based Eastern Air Lines, following its February 1986 acquisition for $640 million. Eastern currently is in contract talks with pilots, from whom it seeks productivity concessions, and with its machinists and baggage handlers, from whom it seeks wage cuts averaging 20%.

Texas Air has used as a bargaining chip the threat of transferring Eastern assets to its low-cost, non-union Houston-based Continental Airlines unit if the unions fail to come to terms. Texas Air in 1987 took the System One reservations system off Eastern's hands for $100 million, making it a separate subsidiary, sold 20 aircraft and put 21 on the market, and drew $100 million in cash out of Eastern in a variety of transactions.

But Eastern's unions successfully have used the federal courts to stop Texas Air from selling certain Eastern assets. A federal judge ruled in April 1988 that Eastern could not sell the profitable Eastern Shuttle, which operates between New York, Boston and Washington, to another subsidiary of Texas Air for $225 million.

The courts also have enjoined Eastern from transferring employees to newly-created units and from training replacement workers in preparation for a possible strike. In August 1988, a federal court issued a temporary injunction preventing loss-plagued Eastern from implementing cutbacks that would have wiped out 4,000 jobs.

"The things Lorenzo has tried to do to restructure Eastern have been stymied by the unions and the courts," said Robert Decker, airline analyst at Duff & Phelps, Chicago. The situation becomes ever more serious as the labor-management stalemate continues, Mr. Decker said.

"Without major changes in the union position, Eastern faces a very real possibility of bankruptcy. And until Lorenzo solves the problems at Eastern, there is no solution to his [consolidated earnings] dilemma [at Texas Air]."

Paul Karos, airline analyst at First Boston Corp., New York, said Texas Air probably could hold out until mid-1989 before being forced to make a move. "The No. 1 hope of management is to get concessions. But if they can't, Texas Air won't allow Eastern to bleed them to death," he said. Most likely, Eastern would be downsized, its assets and routes broken up and sold off, or it would be taken into Chapter 11 bankruptcy and liquidated, he added.

Time Inc.'s belt-tightening efforts in 1987 ranged from staff reductions to divestitures to a growth of only 3% in ad spending, the latter usually characterized by substantial annual budget hikes.

The cost-saving measures have begun to show up in improved earnings. In the first half of 1988, Time Inc. reported net income of $150 million, up 21% over the corresponding period in 1987, on sales of $2.17 billion, up 9.4%. Time's cable TV operation was largely responsible for the growth. Advertising revenues in its magazine division were up slightly, but higher paper costs and postal expenses weighed down operating income for the group. Time in September 1987 launched a major program called the Maximum Advertising Exposure Plan, or Max Plan, to rejuvenate its sluggish advertising. The rather convoluted program rewards advertisers with "credits" (additional ad pages earned) if their spending levels with Time match or exceed their totals with Time from July 1986 through June 1987. The complex plan also factors in a minimum spending level and the percentage of the advertiser's overall magazine spending devoted to Time Inc.'s wholly owned magazines: Time, Life, Fortune, Money, Sports Illustrated, People, Southern Accents and Southern Living.

Competitors, Newsweek and U.S. News & World Report were quick to follow suit with their own discount plans. Over 500 advertisers have signed up for Time Inc.'s program, which was initially scheduled to run for two years; it has been extended for a third.

At the end of 1987 the company's flagship magazine, Time, froze its advertising rates for the first time since 1963.

Time's 50/50 joint venture, Working Women McCall's Group, introduced a controversial open TV-style negotiable rate card for McCall's in 1987. Women's magazines share many packaged goods advertisers with network TV. McCall's publisher Dale Lang said the plan only formalized what Seven Sister magazines had been doing for years—scuttling the rate card. Then in mid-1988, the joint venture titles—McCall's, Working Woman and Working Mother—and People launched "The Women's Lifestyle Network," a sort of spot print package in which the four magazines are included in a five-page buy to reach 10 markets only.

In February of this year, Time launched a French edition of Fortune, published with the Hachette Filipacchi group. The edition combines Fortune articles translated from English with pieces written by a Paris staff.

In August of this year, Time Inc. acquired a 50% interest in Hippocrates magazine for $9 million. The bi-monthly consumer magazine, published in California, deals with health and medicine.

The company's ad dollars largely were spent on subscription promotions for People, Time and Sports Illustrated. According to BAR/LNA, People spent $19.4 million on subscriptions, up 4% from 1986. Time's spending in this area dropped slightly, at a level slightly above $15 million. Sports Illustrated received $11.5 million, down 17% from 1986. Life laid out $3.1 million for its subscription efforts, up 63% from 1986. Fortune's spending decreased negligibly, remaining at slightly above $1 million, while spending for Money dropped 31% to $854,000.

In the book and information division, the company attributed its strong growth in revenues and operating income to Scott Foresman & Co., which it acquired from SFN Cos. at the end of 1986. However, it is believed Time is looking for a buyer for the nation's No. 3 book publisher because analysts contend it is an odd fit in Time's current business lineup and publishing assets have been in high demand. Scott Foresman publishes textbooks, an entrenched business.

While the Book-of-the-Month Club had record revenues, with membership rising 13% to 2.7 million, ad spending fell 16% to $3.7 million. Spending also decreased 21% for the Book-of-the-Month Record & Tape Club and 10% for Time-Life Books, with a budget of $21 million. But Time-Life Records & Tapes received $9.9 million in advertising, a huge 94% increase.

At the end of the year Time sold its SAMI/Burke market research company to Control Data for $80 million plus future payments. Other divestitures included Discovery magazine, USA Network and a partial sale of ATC.

Measured spending for Time's HBO and Cinemax cable TV services grew 10% to $22.5 million in 1987. The HBO pay TV service alone accounted for $16.1 million of the total, the same as 1986. At the end of this year HBO will discontinue its Festival service, which was oriented to a family audience.

In June 1988, Time announced that its Denver-based ATC cable unit would be moving to New York to be closer to decision-making at the corporate level. Although claiming the decision a good one from a business standpoint, Trygve Myhren, ATC's chairman-CEO, announced his resignation. He was replaced by Joseph Collins, who left the post of president of HBO. E. Thayer Bigelow replaced Mr. Collins at HBO.

Toyota Motor Sales USA, Torrance, Calif., subsidiary of Toyota Motor Corp., Japan, failed to repeat in 1987 its one million-unit U.S. sales volume of 1986 for cars and trucks, fulfilling forecasts of a down year influenced heavily by higher prices associated with the rise of the yen against the dollar.

Shipments from Japan to the U.S. actually declined during the fiscal year by 12% primarily because of poor U.S. truck sales, said the company. Even with the adverse exchange-rate ratios and severe competition, Toyota in the U.S. strengthened its position as the leading car and truck importer. That effort was backed by a $257.7 million ad budget, only slightly less than the previous year.

Despite the turndown in U.S. vehicle sales, the parent performed better in fiscal 1988 than in the two previous years as worldwide earnings rose 19% on an 11% growth in sales. Pretax profits, which increased 51% to $3.9 billion, represented the first such gain in three years. Financial totals for both fiscal years ended June 30 were converted at the rate of Y133.85=U.S.$1.

Offsetting the fall in U.S. sales was a slower-than-expected rise in the yen, cost reduction efforts and strong domestic sales, particularly of luxury autos. Its unit sales in Japan were up 14% to a record 2.02 million for the fiscal period. In the past three years, Toyota has turned to its domestic market to minimize the rise in the yen, which has made its products more expensive abroad. In fiscal 1988, its overseas shipments amounted to 1.79 million units, or 46% of its domestic production. That compares with a 56% rate three years ago.

Toyota's plans to capture 10% of the world's auto market by the 1990s, a marketing concept the company has dubbed "Global 10," calls for improving its modest market share in Western Europe as well as in Japan. The U.S., however, is key to the success of Global 10. Toyota marketers report that for the company to seize 10% of the world market, it must have a 10% share of the U.S., its most lucrative market.

Calendar 1987 totals for worldwide car production place Toyota third behind General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. Toyota production in the calendar period was 3,638,279 domestic units virtually unchanged from 1986—2,708,069 cars and 930,210 trucks.

In the U.S., Toyota sales in calendar 1987 were 932,445 units—583,809 imported cars, 303,783 imported and domestically produced compact trucks, and 44,853 U.S.-built FX and FX 16 cars. Combined sales were down 8.9% from calendar 1986. The total represented a 9.1% share of the U.S. market, up from 8.9% in 1986, and a 28.2% share of the import market.

Toyota ranked first among Japanese importers, followed by Nissan at 22%, Honda at 12.4% and Mazda 11.6%.

The company led importers in total truck sales with a 6.1% share of total U.S. light-truck markets, followed by Nissan at 4.3%, Mazda 2.4%, Isuzu 1.7%, Suzuki 1.6% and Mitsubishi 1%.

Pressed by self-imposed quotas assumed by Japanese car marketers under the Voluntary Restraint Agreement, Toyota has followed fellow Japanese marketers, Honda, Nissan and Mazda in constructing production facilities in the U.S. to assure itself of an adequate supply of cars in the U.S. market.

In line with Toyota's effort to "Americanize" its operations, the parent company is considering establishing a single U.S. headquarters to consolidate sales, manufacturing, design and research and development in one location. No timetable has been set, but the move was regarded as a natural outgrowth of Toyota's startup of other U.S. operations.

Toyota and General Motors operate a joint-venture plant called New United Motor Mfg. Inc. (NUMMI) in Fremont, Calif., which builds Toyota's Corolla FX and FX-16 models and Chevrolet's compact Nova.

Toyota has built a plant in Georgetown, Ky., which is making the upscale Toyota Camry ($15,998 for a top-of-the-line LE 5-door wagon). The plant's annual production rate is 200,000 units.

A decision has yet to be made on a site for construction of Toyota's truck plant in the U.S. A new plant producing up to 300,000 units annually would help Toyota reach U.S. sales volume of 1.3 million vehicles a year by the early 1990s.

Two of Toyota's rivals are marketing upscale luxury cars in the U.S. or have announced plans to do so with separate dealer networks—American Honda through its Acura division and Nissan with its upcoming Infiniti. Toyota also has entered the fray with its Lexus division. The first car from the division is scheduled for the fall of 1989. Toyota will open the 1990 model year with three luxury-performance car lines and eventually set up 250 to 300 new dealerships. The Lexus ad budget is expected to be about $60 million.

Of the company's $180.7 million in measured advertising in 1987, 55% went for cars and 45% for trucks, about the same as the previous year. Spot and network TV claimed 62.2% of the total, newspapers 15.7% and magazines 14.9%.

New introductions for the 1988 model year included a new Corolla line, which received major emphasis and accounted for about $20 million in measured media in 1987.

Other new models included a turbocharged, all-wheel-drive Celica, an MR2 sports car with supercharged engine, an all-wheel-drive version of the Camry and mid-year introduction of an option V-6 engine for the Camry.

Toyota introduced innovative advertising for its Corolla by tipping in detachable cardboard binoculars for 3-D imaging. The three-dimensional four- page print ad and viewer cost $1.5 million to produce. It ran in Cosmopolitan, People and Time magazines. A humorous TV spot showed the Corolla driving off a theater screen, up the aisle through an audience wearing the 3-D glasses associated with the 1950s horror films.

The Camry accounted for $17.5 million in measured media spending in 1987, some 76% of that split between network and spot TV, according to BAR/LNA. With U.S. unit sales of 186,633, up 18.6% from 1986, the Camry was the company's best-selling line. It took over No. 1 position from Toyota's second best-seller, the Corolla model, which slipped to 119,447 units, down 21.4%. The Corolla was followed by the Tercel at 100,590 units and the Celica at 79,333.

The low-end Tercel models, priced at $5,998 for the EZ 3-door liftback model, accounted for $15.5 million in measured media spending in 1987, most of it in spot and network TV. A total of $11.3 million in measured media was spent on Supra for the year. Unit sales of the $20,000 Supra hit 29,907 in 1987, down 11.5%.

With the price of the 2-wheel drive standard pickup now at $6,598, Toyota no longer featured low price as a selling point in its truck advertising. The compact trucks category accounted for about $32.6 million in measured media expenditures during the year, according to BAR/LNA. Some $5.9 million of that backed the SR-5 Turbo model, priced at $18,568, Toyota's entry in the sport/utility truck market.

Toyota named Conill Advertising/L.A. as its first Hispanic agency of record. Conill's first ad campaign for Toyota will debut this October. Ad budget for the Hispanic market segment was estimated at over $2.5 million.

Toyota launched two promotions in 1987 directed at blacks. They included the Toyota Leadership Award for black college football athletes. Another was the Sportin' Waves Toyota MR2 Sweepstakes, a promotion with Soft Sheen Products, Chicago, in which Toyota gave away five cars. Basketball star Isiah Thomas of the Detroit Pistons was corporate and dealer spokesman in promos aimed at blacks. Blacks represent about 12% of the total U.S. population, but account for 5% of Toyota's U.S. sales.

Pro golfers Chi Chi Rodriguez and Lee Trevino promoted Toyota cars and trucks on TV while actor Martin Sheen continued to be used for voiceovers in selected car and truck ads. The tough, gravelly voice of actor Eli Wallach continued to be heard pushing Toyota's truck lines.

Toyota's return to worldwide profitability in fiscal 1988 helped restore one claim the car manufacturer has held in Japan for years. It has been the No. 1 company in Japan in pretax earnings volume. It regained its position from Nippon Telegraph & Telephone Corp.

NOTE: *Without extraordinary gains in 1987 and 1986, UAL would have reported losses of $4.2 million and $112.8 million, respectively.

Few American corporations suffered through as much turmoil in the last year as UAL Corp. Both the company's name and its chief officers changed twice, its major businesses changed, and the ownership of its major subsidiary, United Airlines, still could change. Even its annual report started out with somewhat of an understatement: "The friendly skies were turbulent last year."

UAL Corp. began 1987 as UAL, Inc. In February 1987, then chairman-CEO Richard Ferris announced his plan for a unified travel services company and a desire to change the company name to Allegis Corp.

Within six weeks UAL had agreed to acquire Hilton International Co. for $977.5 million, which gave Mr. Ferris' company United Air Lines, Hertz Corporation, Westin Hotels, Hilton International and Covia, its reservations system, as major subsidiaries. The name of United's in-flight magazine was changed to Vis a Vis and the parent company broke a $7 million image advertising campaign from Leo Burnett USA to support the name Allegis.

But Mr. Ferris' idea for a travel services combination and his personal style found little support among Allegis' airline employees and some investors.

In April, United Airlines pilots, afraid the airline wasn't getting the attention they felt it deserved, offered to buy the airline. The offer, since revised and solidified into a $110 a share bid, is still outstanding. In May, Coniston Partners said it had acquired 13% of what by then had become Allegis Corp. and wanted to replace the board and sell off non-airline assets.

By mid-June Mr. Ferris no longer worked for the company and the Allegis board had announced a restructuring that called for selling off hotel and rental car assets.

With Hertz president Frank Olson acting as temporary chairman, Allegis in fairly quick order sold off Hertz for $1.3 billion to Ford Motor Co. and Hertz executives including himself. It dispatched Hilton for $1.07 billion, and announced plans to sell off Westin Hotels, sending off the proceeds to shareholders. In December Stephen M. Wolf, a former Republic Airlines and Tiger International airlines executive, was named Allegis' new chairman and chief executive.

But the restructuring wasn't quite finished. This year, the company sold off half its reservations system to several European airlines and US Air and it took the old name, UAL Corp.

Against that considerable turbulence, UAL's principal remaining subsidiary, United Airlines seemed an island of relative placidity, though not without its own woes.

For the third year in a row, UAL reported a loss, this time $4.2 million on operating revenues of $8.2 billion. While UAL's sales of the other assets made clear the loss was due to the airline's performance, the loss still was a far cry from the 1986 $112.8 million loss (from continuing operations). And the hiring of Mr. Wolf gave the company someone with previous experience with an airline.

Mr. Wolf quickly blamed competitive cost pressures and competitors lower salaries as a major reason United lost money. But he also said improved scheduling and the purchase of newer and more fuel-efficient planes will help to increase United's efficiency and UAL's profits. United's opening of the new Chicago terminal also allowed it to schedule more flights through the city.

UAL reported a $27.9 million profit in the first quarter this year, against a $54.5 million loss in the same 1987 period. In the second quarter, it reported a record $124.2 million profit against $73.4 million last year when airlines were in the midst of fare wars. UAL also reported its break-even point on trips had dropped from 63% to 61% of capacity.

With company officials attention diverted elsewhere for much of 1987, the airline's advertising proceeded on its preset course. Leo Burnett USA's advertising, stressing the airline's business-class image and using George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" as theme music, continued at about the same level as 1986. And in Chicago, United opened its Terminal of the Future at O'Hare Airport, a futuristic structure that was quickly featured on some of the ads.

United's advertising also continued to point to its major service between Chicago, Washington, Denver, Washington and Los Angeles with hourly flights on most of the routes.

United also picked up some additional marketing muscle through agreements with British Airways and Alitalia that called for coordinating schedules, terminals and programs. One program with British Airways offered United travelers, who connected to British Airways flights, free trips from London to any place else in Europe. BA's U.S. agency Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, handled the advertising for the $1.6 million promotion, with United paying half the cost. The decision by BA, KLM Royal Dutch Airways, Swissair and US Air to buy part of Covia and join in developing a new computer system also is expected to help for the future.

At midyear, however, United Airlines still confronted some longer term problems.

Despite load capacities that reached 70%, United's share of the U.S. airline market had slipped to 17% against as much as 20% in 1987. Of the five top U.S. carriers, only United showed a share decline. And past delays in ordering planes made it difficult for United to add much additional service especially in the South, where the carrier has no major hub south of Washington.

The lack of planes also hurt on United's Pacific runs, among the carriers most profitable. Separately, United faced the possibility of losing its prized and profitable Seattle to Tokyo route because of a Department of Transportation ruling.

Finally United's Mileage Plus program, one of the largest of any carrier, was becoming more expensive to operate because of the necessity of matching competitors offers of triple mileage credit to people who flew early in the year. In June, United announced a new program that encouraged frequent flyers to take shorter trips.

Mr. Wolf, in a candid assessment to stockholders at UAL's annual meeting, said United will have to make some major moves in the next few years to restore profitability. But he suggested some of United's problems are temporary while it awaits arrival of new planes it ordered. Meanwhile United is revamping schedules in a bid to get more efficiency.

In August, United indicated it was considering the possibility of entering the Mexican market. Mr. Wolf also has said the airline wants another hub in the Southeast and is looking at the possibility of European service or further South American service.

Insiders say Mr. Wolf is making major changes in UAL's management team with new people in charge of scheduling, maintenance, Pacific service and public relations, among the major changes.

The merging of Chesebrough-Pond's personal-care products into its worldwide marketing operations provided the biggest test for Unilever in 1987.

Concentrating on building its core business of branded consumer goods, Unilever also divested subsidiaries that did not fit this strategy, including several operations acquired in the $3.1 billion buyout of Chesebrough-Pond's in December 1986.

From the Chesebrough buyout, it sold Prince Manufacturing Co., producer of tennis rackets and sportswear; Stauffer Chemical Co. and G.H. Bass Shoe division, all in mid-1987. That left Unilever with a more concentrated Chesebrough division that included divisions for packaged foods, health and beauty products and Prince Matchabelli.

To these divisions were added Lever Bros. personal products group including its oral hygiene unit. The Chesebrough acquisition also was to be only the first of many for Unilever which went on in 1987 to acquire 16 more companies for a total of $247 million.

Management of the company with joint headquarters in London and Rotterdam underwent reshuffling, notably, Morris Tabakblat rose to chairman of Lever Bros. from chairman-CEO of Chesebrough. He succeeded Gordon Stevens who retired. Robert M. Phillips continues as president of Chesebrough and adds the title of CEO, replacing Mr. Tabakblat.

In 1987, Unilever unleashed a slew of new products and line extensions, including a much bally-hooed Elizabeth Taylor's Passion from the Prince Matchabelli unit, and new tea lines from Lipton. In support of the new launches and existing brand lineup, Unilever hiked its U.S. ad spending by 6.9% to an estimated $580.7 million in 1987.

Lever Bros., despite its ailing personal-care units that were turned over to the stewardship of Chesebrough at mid-year, had a turn-around year in reporting $36.4 million in operating profits after reporting a loss of $37.5 million in 1986.

Lever Bros. household products and Lever foods/Shedd's divisions performed well in 1987, achieving all-time market share highs. Industry sources attribute this strong performance to successful national launches of products such as Surf detergents and Snuggle fabric softener sheets.

Lever's Snuggle fabric softener sheets grabbed a 10% share by spring 1987, up from a 7.5% share from 1986 when it rolled national, according to Jay Freedman, household products analyst at Kidder, Peabody & Co. But market share for Snuggle liquid softener declined from 14.3% to 12.0% by spring 1988.

Lever's Snuggle (liquid and sheets) and Final Touch fabric softeners combined attained a 29.5% share of the $630 million category in 1987. P&G remained the market leader with 51.5% share with its Bounce and Downy brands.

Spending for Snuggle softened to $18.8 million, down 22.2% from 1986. Final Touch was backed by $5.8 million, up 4.8%.

Even though Lever's Wisk (liquid) detergent jumped from 7.6% to an 8.5% market share in 1987, Lever could not retain its market share crown in the $3 billion laundry detergent category. P&G's Tide became the No. 1 selling brand in both liquid and powdered forms. Combined ad spending for Wisk (in both liquid and powdered form) in 1987 was down slightly to $21.1 million.

Lever Bros. rolled national its Surf detergent in both liquid and powdered forms in 1987. By spring 1988, Surf liquid had gained a 2.8% market share and Surf 5.0%. Combined ad spending in measured media for Surf liquid and powdered detergent jumped 41.7% to $18.2 million.

Lever also launched nationally its Sunlight automatic dishwasher liquid after a test run in Milwaukee and Phoenix in 1986. Sunlight automatic dishwasher brand (in liquid and powder forms) was backed by $6.1 million in measured spending in 1987.

In the $1.2 billion bar soap category, Lever's Dove beauty bar remained the No. 1 selling brand with a 14.0% share in 1987. Dove drew $13.6 million in measured media, up 11.8% from 1986. Caress bar, with a 6% share of the bar soap market, was supported with $10.2 million, up 1.2%.

Lever Bros. holds the lead in the $1.5 billion margarine category, with a 26.8% combined share for its Promise (4.5%); Shedd's (9.5%); "I Can't Believe It's Not Butter" (1.5%); Imperial (8.3%); Krona (0.5%) and Mrs. Filberts (2.5%) brands.

In the $1 billion dentifrice category, the Chesebrough division's Aim holds the No. 4 spot with a 7.0% market share, behind P&G's Crest lines (41.0%); Colgate-Palmolive's Colgate brands (22.0%); and Beecham Products' Aqua-Fresh (10.0%) share. Chesebrough put its ad dollars behind its newly formulated Aim Extra-Strength and anti-tartar toothpastes. Spending for regular Aim toothpaste was down 73.8% to $2.5 million, according to BAR/LNA.

The Chesebrough unit had net income of $76.2 million in 1987 and net sales of $1.1 billion, up 8% over 1986—the latter breaking down into revenues of $517.7 million for Chesebrough's packaged foods, up 14.3% from 1986; $393.2 million for its health and beauty products, up 1.9% and $176.3 for Prince Matchabelli, up 5.2%.

In 1987, Chesebrough's Prince Matchabelli division saw sales increase 11.1% over 1986, which it attributes largely to the success of Passion, Elizabeth Taylor's prestige fragrance. The fragrance, launched in July 1987, had the highest sales volume of any fragrance launched during the year. Passion, which is expected to gain a line of bath products, was supported with $2.9 million in measured media, according to BAR/LNA.

Prince Matchabelli's staple scents include Cachet, Verve, Wind Song and Aviance Night Musk.

In 1987 the Cutex line of nail-care products was moved to the Prince Matchabelli division from the health and-beauty unit of Chesebrough to "broaden the consumer base and unify the cosmetics and marketing approach of the Aziza and Cutex brands," the company said. Impulse body spray for women also was moved to the Prince Matchabelli division.

In the summer of 1988, Prince introduced a new Cutex product line called Strong Nail by Cutex. The line, containing nail enamels and nail treatment products, is billed as the "body builder for nails." The introduction was backed with $3 million in spending, via O&M, New York. Cutex has a 9% share of the estimated $750 million nail-care category.

Aziza cosmetics got a make-over early in 1988. The company decided to relaunch the line focusing on the brand's eye makeup heritage. In June 1988, ads appeared building around the idea of "eye art" to encourage experimental techniques with eye makeup.

Prince Matchabelli is readying a women's body spray, Tres L.A. and will introduce this fall, Hero, a men's fragrance. Also, the division is expected to launch a new women's fragrance in 1989.

Chesebrough continues testing of its Trust antiperspirant in the Southeast in an attempt to enter the highly-competitive $1.6 billion deodorant market. Measured spending for Trust was $3.7 million in 1987, according to BAR/LNA.

Chesebrough's packaged goods division experienced sales growth of 13% and a record 23% increase in net income in 1987. The company attributes virtually all the growth to the success of its flagship Ragu brand. Ragu maintains its No. 1 market spot with a 53% share in the spaghetti sauce market despite heavy competition from Campbell Soup Co.'s No. 2 Prego brand. Lever credits the brand's staying power to the introduction in early 1987 of Ragu Thick & Hearty spaghetti sauce which it claims captured a 10% market share after only three months of introduction.

Ragu Thick & Hearty represents Lever's long-term strategy to carve out new segments in the spaghetti sauce market. The Ragu line received $14.1 million in measured spending, up 23.6%, according to BAR/LNA.BBDO, New York, picked up the Ragu new products assignment. Chesebrough said it added a second agency to the Ragu business already handled by Waring LaRosa because of "rapid growth in the division and an aggressive new product development plan."

Unilever's Thomas J. Lipton unit reported net sales of $1.4 billion in 1987, up 8.4% from the year earlier. Similarly, Lipton's net income increased a healthy 18.7% to $108.6 million in 1987. Lipton credits its sales gains partly to new line extensions and heavy new product intros which totaled 165 in 1987.

In the overall $550 million tea category, Lipton is the undisputed leader with a combined market share of 50.5%. That will expand considerably if the acquisition of Celestial Seasonings from Kraft Inc. is approved. Lipton strengthened its lead in the herbal tea segment with sales gains of 8% for those brands.

Lipton took on Celestial Seasonings with the introduction in September of Oriental Treasures, an exotic line of herbal teas. Attention-getting magazine and TV spots asking "How do you make a Kabuki warrior smile?" supported the line. In 1987 Lipton spent $1.7 million in measured media for Oriental Treasures, according to BAR/LNA.

The Lipton/Celestial Seasonings combo would have an 84% share of the $77 million herbal tea market, but the proposed merger prompted competitor R.C. Bigelow to file suit in U.S. District Court. Bigelow claims the combined companies would create a monopoly causing it to incur inordinately high additional costs in advertising, promotion and slotting allowances. The case was scheduled to be decided this September.

Lipton made headway in the $200 million hot tea market in 1987. Its regular tea sales of 100-count tea bags rose 8% while those of the decaffeinated line, which last year rolled national, jumped 17%. Lipton will advertise the line as "naturally decaffeinated," a new process for the company, with in-store displays appearing in late spring.

Advertising spending for Lipton's decaffeinated teas softened somewhat in 1987. The company spent $3 million on its decaffeinated teas, down 8.3%, according to BAR/LNA. The company put its ad dollars behind regular teas, for which spending jumped 153% to $9.8 million.

In the powdered drink mix category, Lipton extended its Wyler's brand to include two new flavors—Strawberry Split Punch and Bunch 'o Berries Punch. Also under the Wyler's brand name, Lipton introduced this past April FruitSlush, a frozen treat.

Lipton is giving special attention to its dip/recipe soup mix varieties in 1988. This includes heavy couponing, promotions and a national sweepstakes. Last year the company spent $2 million in measured media, according to BAR/LNA.

In the estimated $475 million dry soup category, Lipton holds a 90% share. Its Cup-a-Soup brand achieved an 8% sales increase in 1987. Partly responsible for this boost, the company said, was the nationwide introduction in October of Lite Cup-A-Soups. The new brand has one-third less calories and less salt than the regular Cup-A-Soup line. Lipton spent $1.4 million on the product.

Lipton, which took over the No. 1 spot in the $900 million side-dish market from General Mill's Golden Grain division's Noodle Roni early in 1987, continued to add new varieties to its side dish lines. Spending for Lipton's Rice & Sauce side dish was down 51% to $3.2 million; $971,000 for Noodles & Sauce, down 54% and $622,000 for Pasta & Sauce, up 56% from 1986, according to BAR/LNA.

In the $313 million fruit snacks market, Lipton is the undisputed leader in the bite-size segment with its Sunkist Fun Fruits brand. Sales grew 19% for Fun Fruits last year. Lipton introduced Fun Fruits Dinosaurs to its letter, animals and numbers varieties last October.

Lipton said Fun Fruits Dinosaurs, which was designed to broaden the age appeal through their popularity with older children, is one of the most successful new product introductions in the company's history.

Lipton expanded distribution of its Sunkist Fun Fruit Surprises, first tested in Boston, to the eastern region. Also the company is testing Sunkist Two-T-Fruits, a tube-shaped snack targeted at young teens, in western and central regions.

In 1987 Lipton also branched out into a new category. The company is testing Country Fair Light Butter in Denver and Portland, Ore. The brand is touted as a reduced-calorie butter with 50% less cholesterol and fat than other brands.

Keebler Co., major U.S. operation of British cracker king United Biscuits Holdings PLC, launched a number of sweet- and salty-snack products in 1987 as the elves watched chief rival Nabisco log a total of 18 new products or line extensions of its own.

United Biscuits, the second largest cookie and cracker producer outside the U.S., operates UB Foods US division in the U.S.—comprised of Keebler & Specialty Brands—and separately, Shaffer, Clarke & Co., an importer of specialty foods. Sales at UB Foods US were up 5.9% to $1.21 billion, while sales at Shaffer, Clarke leaped 14.2% to $39.5 million.

Sales and earnings data in the accompanying box were converted at the rate of 1£ = $1.5764 for 1987 and 1£ = $1.4678 for 1986, which gave the company an 8.6% increase in worldwide dollar sales. Without the pound-to-dollar appreciation, UB growth would have been only 1.2% in pounds.

Keebler business accounts for over 85% of UB's total U.S. sales and the subsidiary's 18% increase in dollar trading profit came as Keebler gained 1 point in its share of the overall cookie/biscuit market to 17%. Over 90% of the company's total U.S. ad spending is spent on Keebler products.

Elfin Loaves single-serve snack breads, launched mid-year, was Keebler's first frozen snack introduction. Substantial marketing support accompanied this foray into the frozen baked goods business. Keebler spent over $5 million bringing out the first four flavors, and another $3 million in the first quarter of 1988 when it added another flavor.

Elf-ingenuity spurred other product launches including E L Fudge Cookies to which Keebler devoted $7.4 million in measured ad support. Another $4 million was spent on Keebler Chips Deluxe, which boast 50% more chips per cookie.

Overall ad spending in the cookie segment totaled $11.5 million, up 27.1% from 1986, according to BAR/LNA.

According to Snack Food, a trade magazine for the industry, Keebler's growth in the cookies and crackers segment secures its No. 2 position behind Nabisco. Keebler "is pretty much second down the line, in those product categories" said Snack Food editor Jerry Hess.

With the introduction of O'Boisies potato snack chips, Town House Cheddar Jrs., Whole Wheat Jrs. and Classic Jrs., Suncheros tortilla chips and Club Cracker & Cheddar, Keebler expanded and strengthened its multiple presence in the salty-snack category.

Salty-snacks account for about one-third of the Keebler ad budget, not surprising given the giant-size chore facing the elves as they challenge entrenched Frito-Lay and Borden nationally.

Specialty Brands in U.S. dollars suffered a 3% decline in sales on a 5.5% increase in trading profit. United Biscuits has reached tentative agreement to sell the spice, salad dressing and olive subsidiary. The sale, which involves a number of buyers, is awaiting final FTC approval.

Despite currency fluctuations, Shaffer, Clarke boasted a 14.2% rise in sales but only 1.8% growth in trading profit for its Carr's Crackers imports and other UB Biscuits products—Ryvita crisp bread and Rose's Marmalade from England; Bonne Maman jams and jellies from France; Finn crisp bread from Finland; Apollinaris mineral water from Germany; KA-ME (kamay) oriental foods and confections from Holland, Britain and Switzerland. In the second quarter of 1988 Shaffer, Clarke lost two products which had previously received significant ad support, Wasa crisp bread and Ideal fiber crisp.

Advertising by the country's diverse dairy groups is changing as fewer dollars come through production assessment channels, as public perception of calcium, calories and cholesterol evolves and as a national power struggle between private and government dairy promotion agencies continue to alter their composition and responsibilities.

The major switch in advertising direction came in July 1987 when the National Dairy Promotion and Research Board took over all national cheese, butter and ice cream advertising from the American Dairy Association (ADA), a near half-century-old private group compared to the five-year-old, federally-mandated NDPRB.

First off the block, the NDPRB moved the big national cheese account worth nearly $22 million to DDB Needham, Chicago, from D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, Chicago. Then, in January 1988, it shipped the $5 million-plus ice cream account to Grey Advertising, New York, from DMB&B.

The ADA got a further shock at the end of 1987 when the biggest of all state dairy promotion agencies, the Wisconsin State Milk Marketing Board, broke from the ADA fold to operate as an independent dairy marketing body. The breakaway pulled sizable Wisconsin funding from the ADA's budget. The Wisconsin board spends $7 million alone on its national cheese promotion program.

This apparent fracturing of dairy promotion groups and programs can be seen as the aftershocks following Congress' passage of the Dairy and Tobacco Adjustment Act of 1983. The law brought about an assessment of 15¢ per hundred weight of all fluid milk produced from dairy farmers and the creation of the National Dairy Promotion and Research Board (NDPRB), comprised of 36 members named by the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture from nominees proposed by dairy organizations across the nation.

According to the allocation, 5¢ goes to the NDPRB for national promotion, 5¢ is voted on by local dairy associations for state/regional or national promotion, and 5¢ must go to state and regional marketing promotion. These latter two nickels go to groups like the United Dairy Industry Association, Rosemont, Ill., parent of ADA.

The pot for dairy promotion funding is getting smaller, however. Total dairy promotion revenues received from U.S. dairy farmers in 1987 were $207.8 million, according to the NDPRB, down slightly from $208.3 million in 1986. The outlook for 1988 is flat to another slight decrease, partially because of the effect of the long summer drought on dairy production, say agricultural observers.

Revenue from dairy farmers for 1987 was down from 1986 for the two big dairy marketing promotion bodies—NDPRB and ADA. The National Board received $77.4 million for calendar 1987, off 3.3% from 1986. Its ad spending of $64.1 million was down 10% from a year earlier. ADA income from its members (including dairy processor manufacturers) dropped 15% in 1987, to $53.2 million. Its ad spending was about equal to NAPRB.

Specific 1987 expenditures for other dairy promotion units were: California Milk Advisory Board, $18.7 million; Oregon Dairy Products Commission, $850,000; Washington Dairy Products Commission, $3.5 million and Wisconsin Milk Marketing Board, $13.3 million. Altogether, these smaller regional units and the two big national promotion agencies totaled $161.4 million in spending, down 9.3% from 1986.

Operating on a mid-year fiscal year (May 1 to April 30), NDPRB reports its product ad backing for fluid milk at $15.8 million for 1987-88, up 17% from the prior-year period.

Backing for butter from the National Board was up 42% to $11.1 million as that body took over the national continuity program. Ice cream rose 6% in 1987-88 to $5.3 million. At the same time, NDPRB backing for dairy calcium dropped 53% in 1987-88 to $6.8 million.

The ADA's total fluid milk spending for seven measured media, as monitored by BAR/LNA, was $32.1 million, down 13.3%. Cheese advertising by ADA totaled $26.3 million, up 12%. Butter spending grew 5% to $15.5 million. Ice cream jumped sharply to $5.54 million from just $272,300 in 1986.

Television continues to be the top media choice for dairy advertising. Network, spot and cable TV accounted for $94.9 million, or about 75.5% of the 11-media total. Network alone claimed $76.7 million of the TV total.

While it has lost continuity advertising for cheese, butter and ice cream, the ADA still is a major factor in these areas because it continues ad campaigns that include local store tie-ins with point-of-purchase content and other promotional elements.

For ice cream, its June Dairy Month promotion included some continuity for that product. And it is responsible nationally for young adult—18 to 34 years—fluid milk continuity advertising.

Working with the Beef Industry Council and Beef Board, the ADA in February 1988 launched a program to prime sales of cheese and ground beef. In this $7 million campaign, NBC "Today Show" weatherman Willard Scott "forecast Gourmet Cheeseburgers" for the nation's backyard grills.

In other tie-ins, the ADA this summer ran its June Dairy Month "Get MOOOvin' with Milk" promotion via TV, radio, pop and consumer mail-in incentives. Related to this were other tie-ins urging "Have Your Veggies Willard's Way" showing Willard Scott enjoying buttered vegetables.

In another program, consumers received a coupon for a free half gallon of milk in return for three UPC codes from Sara Lee pastries.

Despite fractionalization, the industry has sought better promotional coordination, at least on paper. The United Dairy Industry Association in its "1987 Report to Investors," reported it had written to the Secretary of Agriculture stating its support of a single national dairy promotion organization. It also said it would pursue discussions with the NDPRB to achieve that goal, and at the same time coordinate grass-roots promotions with NDPRB activities in order to maximize UDIA program effectiveness.

Still, despite any differences, the goal of the 1983 Act was bigger ad dollars to boost dairy sales, and that clearly has happened. And those ad dollars have helped stimulate sales of dairy products. The ADA reports that dairy products sales since the passage of the Act in 1983 are up 10%; that total per capita U.S. milk product consumption had risen by 32 pounds in the first three years after passage.

Despite new paid and public service advertising campaigns, U.S. Government ad spending rose only 1.4% in fiscal 1987, to $311.3 million. Government spending is likely to dip this year, because of cutbacks in military ad spending and the fact that no new special ad programs have been launched this year.

Military recruitment advertising continues to account for two-thirds of federal ad dollars. In 1987, military recruiters spent $191.5 million, down 7% from 1986. The 1988 spending level is expected to be down another 1%, to $188.9 million. The cuts come as the Defense Department has been forced to slice spending in all areas.

Other major government advertisers saw their budgets stay stable or increase in 1987. The U.S. Postal Service hiked its spending in 1987 by 21% to $40 million. It hopes to stem its eroding share of the overnight delivery market; its Express Mail service had been the No. 2 player in the category but has slipped to fourth place, with a 10% share, down from 15% in 1986.

Young & Rubicam, New York, retained its grip on the USPS account, which will bill about $41 million next year. Y&R, which first won the account in 1974, competed against BBDO, DDB Needham Worldwide, Grey Advertising and Ogilvy & Mather.

Amtrak saw no change in its spending, remaining constant at $29 million. It is sticking with its three-year-old ''All Aboard Amtrak'' campaign via DDB Needham Worldwide. Ridership on Amtrak is up 16% and income is up 18% for 1988.

The U.S. Mint continues to be a major advertiser; it spent $22 million last year advertising a commemorative coin for the U.S. Constitution Bicentennial. That campaign, however, was 31% smaller than the ad budget for the Statue of Liberty commemorative.

The Constitution coin, using the theme ''Hold onto the Promise,'' raised $50 million. Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York handled. This year, the Mint hopes to raise another $50 million from sales of an Olympic commemorative. It is spending less, however, on advertising, with a $16 million campaign using the theme, ''Help America Shine,'' via Grey Advertising, New York.

For 1989, the Mint has no new commemorative but several coin proposals are currently under debate in Congress.

A new program in 1987, by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, was only a lukewarm success, but it served to teach government advertisers lessons they are now using in other advertising programs.

The INS $11 million service campaign sought to inform illegal aliens of changes in immigration laws and encouraged eligible aliens to apply for amnesty. However, the INS discovered its initial advertising by the Justice Group, Los Angeles, failed to reach many aliens, who were distrustful of government messages delivered via traditional and even ethnic broadcast and print media. The campaign became more promotional, using techniques such as fliers stuffed in tortilla packages and posters tacked up at local community centers.

The U.S. Bureau of the Census will copy some of the INS tactics in its advertising for the 1990 census. It found in 1980 that it missed at least 5% of the black and ethnic U.S. population. For the first time, it has hired black and Hispanic agencies to create advertising aimed at those groups. The Advertising Council continues to handle its public service campaign. This summer, the Census Bureau tested new advertising in St. Louis. The black campaign, with creative supplied by the Mingo Group, New York, uses the theme, ''Stand right up for who you are,'' while the regular advertising, by Ogilvy & Mather, New York, will use the theme, ''Put yourself in the picture.'' Hispanic advertising from Castor International, New York, is under development, and the Census Bureau also is looking for an Asian ad agency to reach Orientals.

AIDS awareness advertising in 1987 also was a sizable addition to the government spending total. The Centers for Disease Control awarded a $7.8 million assignment to Ogilvy & Mather, Atlanta and Washington, to handle public service advertising, as well as a major mailing to every household about the deadly disease.

''America Responds to AIDS'' is the theme of the ad campaign which broke in November 1987. New spots to be distributed to TV stations this fall will focus on women at risk and young adults. The campaign also will advocate use of condoms as the best method to prevent spread of the deadly disease.

Congress is considering legislation for AIDS education and research which may include a significant paid advertising component. The bill has passed the Senate, but a similar version introduced in the House would not authorize paid advertising.

Congress will be more powerful in deciding future federal ad programs than a new President, say government marketers who have been through many administration changes. The Army, for example, planned its ''Be all you can be'' campaign during the last year (1980) of the Carter Administration, and broke the advertising during the first year of the Reagan Administration.

New political appointees in the Department of Defense could alter slightly the distribution of advertising funds to the various services. The Defense Department has decided putting more media dollars behind an umbrella campaign for all the services will be more cost-effective than individual service advertising.

The philosophy sparked much controversy, particularly among Army recruiters, who have the largest quotas and the most difficulty attracting high quality candidates.

Joint advertising's budget increased by 25% to $21.5 million in 1987 and is slated to rise another 25% to $27 million in 1988. For 1989, the joint ad program has requested $35 million. In January, it intends to break its first new TV advertising in several years. Grey Advertising, New York, handles.

The Army's budget is dropping slightly. It spent $101.6 million in 1987, down 3%, and expects advertising to drop another 9% in 1988, to $93.4 million. For 1989, it has requested $98.9 million.

New this year was an Army ROTC test of its first paid TV advertising, which uses the theme, ''Army ROTC. The smartest college course you can take.'' ROTC recruiters haven't decided whether to expand the test. Other Army advertising increasingly will emphasize ways in which Army experience can be used when soldiers return to civilian life. Y&R, New York, handles both Army and Army ROTC.

The Navy, whose ad budget plummeted 56% in 1987 to $14.9 million, switched agencies to BBDO Worldwide, New York, and in 1988 is spending $17.7 million, up 18%, with a new campaign theme, ''You are tomorrow. You are the Navy.'' The TV and print campaign replaced its 12-year-old ''Live the adventure'' campaign by Backer Spielvogel Bates. The Navy seeks a $15.5 million budget for 1989.

The Marines' ad budget rose 29% to $20 million in 1987. It will spend only $17.7 million this year and has requested the same level for 1989. New creative, via J. Walter Thompson USA, Atlanta, will likely break later this year.

The Air Force continues to ''Aim High,'' but with budget cuts. Air Force in 1987 spent $16.8 million, up 3%, but its budget fell 11% to $14.8 million in 1988. Next year it requests a $14.3 million budget.

The Army National Guard spent $13.4 million in 1987, up 22%; the Air National Guard, $2.8 million, no change. For 1988, both Air and Army Guards expect to increase spending, with the Army Guard receiving a 7% increase to $14.4 million, and the Air Guard rising 18% to $3.3 million. They have requested slightly more for 1989.

The Coast Guard, which will for the first time become part of the joint advertising campaign, spent about $500,000 in 1987, and anticipates spending slightly more this year, about $600,000.

Military recruiters met their goals in 1987, with 93% of the new recruits high school graduates, up 1% from 1986. For the first half of fiscal 1988, the military has met its mission, with 92% high school graduates, but its goals were much lower than in previous years. Military recruiters worry they may not be able to continue signing up high quality recruits as the potential pool of eligible 18 year olds will shrink to a low in the next four years.

Public service advertising by government agencies more than doubled to $15.3 million, a 128% increase from 1986. Half of the total, however, went to the AIDS campaign. The Advertising Council also saw its billings rise 12% to $3 million. It expects its 1988 total to be even greater, about $5.5 million.

Volkswagen of America is hoping its new advertising strategy that emphasizes brand character will rebuild sales and set it apart from major competitors as it prepares to launch two new models in 1989.

A subsidiary of Germany's Volkswagen AG, the Troy, Mich.-based company reported a 35% drop in sales and an operating loss of $316 million. Volkswagen AG, whose results are reported in the accompanying box, saw sales and net income rise 5% and 2%, respectively. (Figures for both fiscal years were converted at the rate of DM1.81 = U.S.$1.)

VW sold 191,705 vehicles in 1987, well below its projected sales of between 225,000 and 230,000 units. The company's share of the U.S. import market dropped from 6.7% to 6.1%. Its share of the total U.S. market remained at just under 2%.

VW attributes these declines both to a drop in demand and higher prices due to the weak dollar. Some of the shortfall also can be traced to a poorer-than-expected performance by the Fox, VW's answer to the Hyundai Excel from South Korea, as well as low-end entries from both Japanese and Detroit automakers.

The company was hoping that sales of the $6,000 subcompact would total between 50,000 and 60,000 units in 1987, Fox's first year on the market. Actual vehicle sales, however, totaled 40,176 units. VW said this was due not to a lack of demand, but to delivery problems from Brazil, where the car is manufactured. Although the company is projecting sales again of about 40,000 units for calendar year 1988, it expects a stronger showing in 1989.

Both the broadcast and print ad campaigns for the 1988 model year centered around the "German Engineering. The Volkswagen Way" theme. "We believe our cars have a distinctive driving experience and we wanted to focus on that," said William A. Gelgota Jr., mgr-Volkswagen advertising.

Hoping to create enough of a performance image to differentiate itself from other low-to-mid-priced importers, namely Toyota, Honda and Mazda, the ads stressed German engineering as one factor in producing performance-oriented cars. Network spots included test-track shots of VWs speeding, swerving, spinning and breaking just in time before wiping out a group of stoically-standing, white-jacketed engineer-types.

National print ads also included the campaign's theme line, but were more model-oriented, featuring uncluttered shots of the cars with a catchy headline and copy underneath. An ad for the $9,000-and-up Jetta, for example, had a headline that read "Roads Scholar" and asked, "Who after all, but Volkswagen could build such a meticulously crafted German-engineered sedan for a price that's so refreshingly reasonable?"

Mr. Gelgota said VW is proceeding in the same direction for the 1989 model year, as it sets the stage for two new models: the Corrado, a supercharged performance car which will debut in the spring of 1989, and the mid-sized Passat, the Quantum replacement that will be launched the following fall.

VW also continued what Mr. Gelgota described as the company's "event strategy" during the 1988 model year, staking out auto exclusivity on the pregame and postgame 1988 Super Bowl shows. Mr. Gelgota said VW ads also will be seen during the 1988 World Series and that the company already has secured auto exclusivity for the first-quarter of the 1989 Super Bowl.

VW's line-up of cars was altered only slightly for the 1988 model year. A luxury Jetta and base Golf model were introduced; Golfs and Jettas featured increased horsepower; the Cabriolet convertible received its first facelift since its introduction in 1980 and the Quantum models now come fully equipped.

In July, VW closed its sole U.S. plant in Westmoreland, Pa. Production at Westmoreland began in 1978 against a background for growing demand for compact cars. Less than two years ago, the Jetta joined the Golf and derivative GTI as the only cars assembled there. Increased competition and slumping sales were behind the company's decision to cease production.

Audi of America, a division of Volkswagen of America, continued to be haunted by the controversy surrounding the Audi 5000 in 1987 as media attention and lawsuits over alleged incidents of unintended acceleration kept the company's problems in the spotlight.

Despite a massive marketing program designed to rebuild Audi's image and restore the public's faith in its cars, sales continued to spiral downward and the slide appears to be carrying over into 1988.

Unit sales for 1987 totaled 41,322 vehicles, a drop of roughly 30% from the previous year. Meanwhile, the introduction of the new $18,000-and-up 80/90 sports sedan series in November and an ad campaign designed to evoke buyers' nostalgia failed to stop the slide. Vehicle sales for the first half of 1988 totaled 11,733 units, down more than 50% compared to the same period in 1987.

Audi is pinning its hopes for a slight rebound during the remainder of 1988 on its new $24,000-and-up 100/200 series which debuted August 1. Buoyed by the launch of the new cars, facelifted versions of the 5000, Audi is projecting a stronger second-half and total 1988 sales of about 27,000 vehicles.

The ad campaign that broke in conjunction with the 100/200 launch, but also touts the 80/90 series, focuses on "The Audi Advantage," a new ownership program that features no-charge maintenance for the first three years or 50,000 miles and a Guaranteed Resale Index that certifies trade-in value.

The print campaign included four-page spreads in The Wall Street Journal and USA Today, while a national radio campaign broke in 34 major markets. George Pizzo, Audi creative advertising manager, said no national TV campaign is planned at this time.

Audi also saw a shakeup at the corporate level. This past January, Richard L. Mugg, formerly VP-corporate marketing, Volkswagen of America, took over as VP of Audi of America. Mr. Mugg is the fourth person to hold that title in less than eighteen months.

Warner Communications firmed up its marketing power in the entertainment industry through its acquisition of a half interest in Gulf & Western's theater interests and the buyout of Lorimar Telepictures, the latter of which should add about $13 million in measured spending to Warner totals in the coming year.

Warner's total U.S. advertising grew 38% overall in 1987, largely the result of boosting advertising for 18 films to $35 million in measured spending, up 40% from the prior year when it promoted 15 films. Total advertising returned to 1985 levels when Warner still owned and heavily advertised MTV Networks.

Warner Bros., which took 13% of the U.S. gross box-office receipts in 1987 that ranked it No. 3 behind Paramount with 20% and Disney with 14%, strengthened the television side of its business with the buyout of Lorimar for $1.2 billion.

Overnight it became the largest producer of television programs. Lorimar, producer of "Dallas" and "Falcon Crest," and Universal Television (MCA) at midyear led all producers with eight hours each of programming on the air. Warner Bros. Television had six and a half hours on the networks.

In first-run syndication, Lorimar Telepictures is clearly the biggest producer, with nine programs on the air—an enticement for Warner because it is an area of the business it has been slow to develop. Warner's syndication business is largely off-network with such current offerings as "Night Court," "Growing Pains" and "Head of the Class." Lorimar is just bringing into first-run "ALF" and "Valerie's People."

On the distribution side, where each company has separate units for theatrical film domestic and international sales, those units will be folded together. Lorimar's strong TV production arm should enhance Warner presence in the foreign markets which are becoming more lucrative as privatization of government-owned TV operations continues.

Under a May 1987 agreement with Walt Disney, Warner has been the overseas distributor for all Disney films, including those under its Touchstone banner. Warner previously had a distribution partnership overseas with Columbia Pictures, which it ended at the time of the agreement with Disney—a far more successful film studio than Columbia.

Domestically, it shored up its theater presence with the acquisition of 50% interest in Gulf & Western's domestic motion picture theater operation which controls more than 472 screens across the country. Early in 1987, Warner rescued from bankruptcy the Cannon Group, which operates the 425-screen Commonwealth Theaters. Part of the deal included North American distribution rights to 21 films.

During 1987, Warner's filmed entertainment division's revenues grew by 8% as operating income increased only 2% to $176 million, although the division is performing better in 1988 thanks in part to the highly-successful movie, "Beetlejuice," which through August had grossed $72.9 million in box office receipts. In the second quarter, for example, the division's earnings grew to $51.5 million, a 17.8% increase over second quarter 1987. The division accounted for 57% of Warner total earnings of $127.6 million for the quarter.

Spot and network TV drew most of the $35 million Warner Bros. spent in measured media on its films. Its biggest hit during 1987 was "Lethal Weapon" with domestic box office receipts of $65 million in 1987, according to Variety. Warner's "The Witches of Eastwick," was right behind at $63 million gross. "Lethal Weapon" drew $3 million in measured spending and "Witches" pulled $3.6 million, according to BAR/LNA.

Warner spent $3.7 million advertising its home video cassettes, up from only $656,000 in 1986. Entry into the Japanese market greatly contributed to revenue growth, said the company. Lorimar's troubled home video unit is being folded into Warner's much larger operation.

Warner's recorded music group, whose revenues advanced 35% for the year, did even better on a percentage basis in operating income, which climbed 42% to $214 million. While Madonna's "Who's That Girl?" movie did poorly at the box office, the singer's two album releases for Warner Bros. Records sold eight million units worldwide. Other million-selling titles included the soundtrack from "La Bamba" and George Harrison's "Cloud Nine."

Warner's cable and broadcasting division had operating income of $46.1 million, a 185% over 1986. Revenues grew 19%. Growth came from BQ Cable, a system under construction in Brooklyn and Queens, N.Y. That system's subscriber base increased when Warner Cable and Inner Unity Cable agreed to a 50/50 venture to own and operate a cable franchise in southern Queens.

It was a flat year at Warner's publishing division, consisting of Warner Books, DC Comics, "Mad" magazine and Warner Publishing Services. Revenues grew 2.3% as operating income increased 2.7%. The company spent $604,000 promoting Warner Books, up from only $84,000 in 1986. The big hit was author Sidney Sheldon's "Windmills of the Gods," which had more than four million copies in print.

During 1987, Lorimar Telepictures increased its total measured media by 14.5% to $12.6 million, largely backing movies from Lorimar Productions. None of its movies grossed enough during 1987 to rank among the top 50 in box office receipts. The company also spent $4.6 million on home video, up from $2.6 million in 1986.

In late 1987, Warner-Lambert Co.'s stock jumped five points when a major study revealed its anti-cholesterol ethical drug, Lopid, significantly reduces the risk of heart attacks by increasing high-density lipids that aid in unclogging arteries.

Lopid, facing competition only from Merck & Co.'s Mevacor which was found in the same study to be effective in reducing low-density cholesterol, is expected to jump from $85 million this year to $350 million by 1991, said analysts.

While product development characterized the pharmaceutical side, W-L pushed growth on the consumer side through acquisition. Its American Chicle unit in February 1988 acquired some of RJR Nabisco Inc.'s confectionery brands, including Junior Mints, Charleston Chew and Sugar Daddy, which had total sales of $57 million in 1987. Then in July, Chicle bought Societe Nouvelle's Pastilles de Vichy, a subsidiary of France's Perrier Group, and producer of a mint called Pastilles Vichy.

In the process, W-L's U.S. ad spending remained virtually unchanged from 1986 levels as the company poured money into new product research and development, which was up 22% to $230 million. These expenses helped influence a drop in net profits of 4.2% on a 12% increase in gross sales, although the prior-year period included a gain from the sale of W-L's Health Technologies business.

Net income has improved in the first six months of 1988 by 14% to $175 million on record sales of $1.9 billion, up 13%. Good growth has been recorded by each of its business segments.

In particular, product performances this year have been strong at worldwide gum and mint lines, which saw sales of $446 million in the first six months of 1988. In the same period, sales of prescription pharmaceuticals were $584 million; nonprescription pharmaceuticals were $611 million.

The market for anti-cholesterol drugs is booming. At only $500 million today with few products, the market is expected to mature in the 1990s into a $5 billion annual market, analysts predict.

W-L has far more in the works than Lopid, which still must receive FDA approval for anti-cholesterol treatment.

Squibb Corp.'s Pravastatin, an anti-cholesterol drug, also is seeking FDA approval. Another W-L product, Cholybar, a candy-flavored medicine designed to reduce blood cholesterol levels, also is before the regulatory body. Cholybar's development was a collaboration of the consumer product and prescription drug divisions, the company said.

In a related move, W-L launched Promega in 1987, a fish-oil vitamin supplement which also reduces cholesterol levels. It received $6 million in measured ad support during the year, half on network TV. W-L's market share in this new category is estimated at 38%, with Squibb Corp.'s Proto-Chol second with 22%. Other competitors in this emerging market include Carter-Wallace and Thompson Medical Co. Industry sales were expected to triple to $100 million in 1987.

The American Chicle Group, W-L's gum and mint operation, in 1987 began testing Sugar-free Dentyne in the western U.S. It has been marketed in Canada for the past year. The new gum, containing both sorbitol and saccharin, comes in several flavors, including cinnamon and cool mint.

Chicle also began marketing Assorted Fruit Flavor Rolaids in July 1988. In 1987, it introduced Certs Mini-Mints, which will compete with leader Ferrero USA's Tic Tacs in the $700 million mini-mint market. Also introduced were chewy candies called Candilicious and Rascals, and Sticklets gum.

Trident, the leader in the $486 million sugarless gum market with a 16.5% market share in 1987, next to Listerine was the second-most advertised W-L product with $18.6 million in measured advertising, down 2.6%. W-L ads focus on cavity prevention and run mostly on network and spot TV. W-L also raised its outdoor budget from $1,000 to $1 million in the year, all of which supported Trident. Competitors are RJR Nabisco's Care-Free, with 12.6% of the sugarless gum market, and Wrigley's Extra, with 11.1%.

Sticklets Gum received $8.5 million in measured support, down 11.5%. Sales were only $13 million for the new product, which faces a long, uphill battle with industry giants, such as Wrigley's Gum and RJR Nabisco's Bubble Yum.

Dentyne Gum got $10.2 million in measured spending, up 29%. Dentyne's sales stood at $84 million, up 11%, said analyst Jonathan Gelles at Wertheim Schroder, New York.

W-L spent the largest portion of its ad dollars on Listermint and Listerine Antiseptic mouthwashes—$25.6 million in measured media, up 4% from 1986. Listerine received a major boost from the American Dental Association's for claims that it fights gingivitis. Listerine has a leading 27% share in the $600 million market for mouthwash, followed by Procter & Gamble's Scope at 25% and Listermint with 7%, according to industry sources.

Sales were up 12% for Benadryl allergy products, which got a 38% boost in measured media to $16.5 million, mostly in network and spot TV. Benadryl's leading market share climbed four points to 40%, where it competes with Schering-Plough's Chlor-Trimeton Decongestant tablets which holds a 30% share in the $125 million (manufacturers dollars) allergy-relief market, according to industry analysts. An additional $9.5 million was spent promoting Benylin cough syrup, up 9.2%. W-L also recently developed Benadryl-Plus, a multi-symptom reliever, for the $1.3 billion cough/cold remedy market.

The Sinutab sinus remedy line got $9.25 million in measured media, mostly network TV, up 18%. Sinutab posted $53 million in 1987 sales, up 10%, said Mr. Gelles.

For the Certs line, W-L spent $13.5 million, up 38%, just about all on network and spot TV. Certs brought $115 million in 1987 sales, up 7% over 1986.

Among products in W-L's "other" category, Schick shaving products received $8.8 million in ad support, up 28%, three-fours of it on network TV. Schick is a distant second in the market dominated by Gillette with a 65% share.

Warner-Chilcott, W-L's new generic pharmaceutical division, had its first full year of operation in 1987. The division, which by year-end marketed 115 products, will add about 45 more to the total in 1988.

W-L made no agency changes in 1987, but added one for its Parke-Davis Group—Rolf Werner Rosenthal Inc., New York, the health-care division of the Ogilvy Group. There were three changes in marketing personnel. J.T. Roberts, VP-sales for Parke-Davis, and Harry F. Oberkfell, VP-marketing for Parke-Davis, traded jobs. Also, L.R. Moran was made VP-product management for the Consumer Health Products Group, replacing S. Morgan Morton.

Wendy's International

Dublin, Ohio
ADVERTISING: $ 107.6 MILLION

Now, while everyone else is sending mail that looks mass-produced, you can send mass-produced mail that looks personal, gets opened ... and gets read.

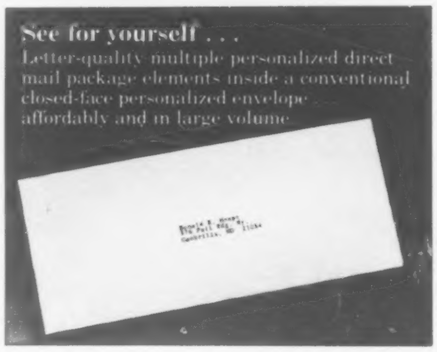
Introducing Opti-Scan: A breakthrough production technology that lets you personalize multiple direct mail package elements and insert them into a conventional closed-face personalized outer envelope.

It gives you the look and feel of an individually typewritten letter.
Opti-Scan uses advanced imaging technology to personalize multiple package elements, and then goes one step farther: It uses state-of-the-art lasers to optically read and match your personalized mailing components and insert them into a conventional closed-face personalized outer envelope. The result: a package that looks and feels as though it has been typed by your secretary.

It lets you meet your volume requirements—from as little as 10,000 to over 1,000,000 pieces per day.
Throw away the limitations of the past. You'll no longer have to settle for either a lower-quality product or a smaller-quantity mailing, because Opti-Scan provides both: the absolute highest quality, at production volumes that can meet virtually every direct marketer's need.

It's fast and it's accurate.
Opti-Scan personalizes, matches and inserts your package elements at a rate that is up to 10 times faster than any other technology in its category. And its advanced optical reader is far more accurate than the hand-match and semi-automated matching technologies previously available.

It's the single most affordable way to personalize multiple direct mail package components and insert them into a conventional closed-face outer envelope.
Here at last is an affordable way to create truly personal-looking direct mail that can break through today's mailbox clutter. And it is efficient to use no matter how small or large your mailing may be. That means flexibility to creatively do what you need to do to get your mailings opened and read in today's competitive environment.



See for yourself . . .
Letter-quality multiple personalized direct mail package elements inside a conventional closed-face personalized envelope affordably and in large volume

It's available only from LaSalle.
LaSalle has been serving the production and lettershop needs of the country's leading direct marketers for more than 40 years, providing responsive, personal service at an affordable price.

Wendy's International is continuing the slow and sometimes painful process of rebuilding what was once one of the fastest-growing global restaurant chains.

After record growth in 1984 and 1985, Wendy's lost its momentum. Then in 1986, sales grew only 2% systemwide and only 0.5% for company-owned stores as the company reported a net loss of $5 million, compared with a gain of $76 million in 1985.

Suddenly, Wendy's went from Wall Street's darling to a target of criticism from stock analysts, franchisees, shareholders and the business press, all of whom asked "What went wrong?"

Wendy's management responded that the real question was what needed to be righted and set about to turn around the chain's slumping fortunes. Throughout 1987 and into 1988, the company has pursued new strategies aimed at regaining lost momentum.

Those strategies have included a major structural reorganization, menu innovations and new marketing programs. The strategies have begun to pay off. Systemwide sales (including both company-owned and franchised restaurants) rose 4.4% to $2.87 billion. That gave Wendy's approximately a 5% share of the $56 billion quick-service restaurant industry.

However, total revenues for the company were down 7% due to declines in company-owned restaurant sales (down 4.7% to $987,071), franchise royalties (down 3.6% to $64 million) and "other revenues" (down 80% to $7.5 million). Those declines reflect falling sales that occurred during the first half of the year. Sales improved during the second half of 1987.

A priority for Wendy's management during 1987 was to slow what had been a dramatic decline in per-store sales, an important measurement of a chain's financial health.

The average sales for company-operated stores did improve, increasing 2.7% to $786,000 in 1987. But that still left the average below the $850,000 average from 1985. Average sales for franchised restaurants continued to slide, declining 1.7% to $721,000.

That decline in franchised-store sales led to a decrease in some local advertising expenditures, since a percentage of sales funds those efforts.

Wendy's spending on spot TV dropped to $31.7 million in 1987 from $37.9 million in 1986. Network TV spending increased, however, up 12% to $46.8 million in 1987 from $41.7 million in 1986, according to BAR/LNA.

Wendy's said it and its franchisees spent a total of $165 million on advertising and marketing in 1987, compared with $140 million in 1986 reported in last year's Leading National Advertisers issue. Wendy's media spending declined in 1986 with total measured spending of $83.7 million. That was down 5% from the previous year.

An estimated $155 million of that total was spent in the U.S. (vs. $133 million in 1986). The remainder was spent by Wendy's foreign operations, which include 104 units in Canada plus 130 other company-owned and franchised restaurants outside the U.S.

While total measured media advertising spending for Wendy's fell to $81.6 million in 1987 from $82.4 million, the company greatly increased its unmeasured marketing spending.

Non-media spending was an estimated $73.4 million in 1987, compared with $49.3 million in 1986.

AA estimates total U.S. ad spending at $107.6 for 1987, down 0.7% from 1986.

Seeking to broaden its customer base, Wendy's has increased emphasis on a variety of promotional efforts. Chief among them have been its marketing programs targeted to children.

The chain has improved the quality and value of the premiums included in its Kids Meal packs (such as Hasbro's Potato Head Kids) and increased the frequency of such promotions. In 1988, Wendy's offered a Kids Meal with premiums tied to the Lucas film motion picture, "Willow."

It also has encouraged local markets to develop promotions. In September 1988, for example, the Chicago co-op began offering Chicago Bears calendars as part of its first ever locally generated in-store promotion.

One of Wendy's turnaround strategies has been to refocus its media advertising more narrowly on its core business: hamburgers.

The humorous "Hamburger A" campaign from national agency Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, has run continuously since October 1987.

Wendy's also decided to work through only a single national agency. It ended its relationships with Lockhart & Pettus, New York, which had produced black consumer advertising, and Mendoza, Dillon & Asociados, Newport Beach, Calif., its Hispanic agency. Some local co-ops continue to air Spanish-language versions of radio commercials.

Wendy's major menu move was a departure from the hamburger focus. In 1987 the chain introduced SuperBar, an all-you-can-eat hot and cold buffet featuring pasta, Mexican foods and an expanded salad bar. SuperBar was installed in 800 company and 500 franchised restaurants-out of nearly 3,600 total U.S. units-by the end of 1987.

For 1988, the company set a capital expenditures budget of $40 million, of which $16 million was directed to additional SuperBar construction.

The SuperBar is a key element in Wendy's 1988 business plan. The company intends to use the buffet to expand its customer base (by attracting more family and dinner business) and to improve consumers' price/value perception of its menu.

Another goal is to increase business through its pick-up windows. To that end, Wendy's this year has introduced the Express Meal, a standardized hamburger meal promised to be ready within 30 seconds. TV advertising has been promoting the Express Meal.

Other elements in its 1988 plan include accelerated new product research and development. Items in test include a Bacon Swiss and Philly Swiss hamburger, and the chain has used hot dogs as a limited-time promotional menu item.

The goal is to improve restaurant operations throughout its system of stores in order to improve per-store sales and profitability.

In 1987, the company reorganized and decentralized its corporate organization. More than 400 corporate positions were eliminated while the number of franchise

CPMs are useful. They measure an important dimension—cost efficiency.

But they don't begin to measure what really counts—the return on your media investment—its ROI.

And that's where Sunset really shines.

Obviously, we can't predict the return on your investment in Sunset Magazine—there are too many variables—but we can predict that it will be better than in any other magazine.

That's the only reason 2,000+ advertisers invest in Sunset year after year (some for 80 years!). They've learned from experience.

Specifically, they've learned that Sunset—and only Sunset—offers these ROI-building attributes:

In April 1987, Wm. Wrigley Jr. Co. surprised the chewing gum industry by offering a five-stick pack for 25¢, undercutting competitors's even-stick, 35¢-packs—the standard since 1972.

At the end of 1987, Wrigley again surprised the industry by showing that its gamble had paid off. Wrigley, the world's largest gum marketer, reported global net income was up 30% and sales had increased by 30%. Heavy international unit sales (up 9%, compared with only a 2% increase in unit sales in the U.S.) and favorable foreign currency rates helped boost total sales.

But Wrigley's pricing gambit and other elements of a more aggressive marketing strategy also proved to be effective. At year-end, Wrigley's approximate wholesale share of the domestic chewing gum market was 48%, compared with 46.5% at the end of 1986.

Wrigley's so-called Value Pricing Program repackaged several of its top brands in five-stick packs: Doublemint (the top-selling gum in the world), Wrigley's Spearmint, Juicy Fruit and Big Red.

Chairman William Wrigley said research showed that unit sales of Wrigley's established brands would increase with the five-stick packs and the packs could bring new customers to the chewing gum category attracted by price. The company claims the five-pack helped Big Red pass Warner-Lambert's Dentyne to become the top-selling cinnamon-flavored gum.

Wrigley long has had a reputation for being extremely cautious in its marketing due to its reluctance to change advertising messages. But it has not been reluctant to increase spending for that advertising. The company's total spending on measured media jumped 17% to $103.5 million in 1987, after rising 18% in 1986.

Media spending in 1988 appears to be rising at a comparable or faster rate. The largest increase in 1987 was for top brand Doublemint. Wrigley spent $29.1 million behind it, up 25%. Beginning in January 1988, Wrigley launched a major outdoor campaign for Doublemint involving its heaviest use ever of that medium. More than 4,000 boards or poster went up in 75 markets promoting the five-stick pack and carrying the long-running "Double your pleasure" message.

Wrigley's Spearmint gum got $23.8 million in spending, up 3%. Spearmint is getting special emphasis in Wrigley's 1988 marketing plan. In February, it launched a new campaign for the brand anchored by a 60-second commercial. It was Wrigley's first use of a :60 since the August 1984 introduction of Extra sugarless gum. That 60-second commercial-airing on network, spot and cable TV-also was a creative departure for Wrigley. It involves a young man whose personal computer comes alive and promotes Spearmint's "Pure chewing satisfaction." While that would not be considered a breakthrough creative idea for most other marketers, its lack of reliance on a sung jingle was a major departure for Wrigley advertising.

Wrigley's Extra sugarfree gum, which was backed by $19.9 million in media spending in 1987, also is getting additional attention in 1988. New TV commercials were added during the second quarter. The cinnamon and wintergreen flavors introduced this year are being spotlighted in a major print campaign. Heavy couponing for Extra is planned for this year's third quarter.

Helping boost Big Red to the No. 1 spot in the cinnamon category was an increase in media spending to $9.7 million in 1987, up nearly 30%.

The largest percentage increase in media spending went to Freedent, a gum designed not to stick to dental work. In 1986, Wrigley cut Freedent's budget to $2.6 million from $4 million the previous year. In 1987, media spending on Freedent jumped to $6.6 million, or 154%.

Juicy Fruit brand continued with the ad theme, "The taste that's gonna move ya," for the fifth consecutive year, as media spending rose 5% to $12.2 million.

Wrigley's Amurol Products Co. division continues to have problems and to receive modest advertising support. Amurol's Hubba Bubba soft chunk bubble gum has declined in sales each of the past two years. Hoping to energize sales of the specialty and novelty brands Amurol markets (including Big League Chew, Tidal Wave, Rambo and others), Wrigley in February 1988 moved the Amurol assignment to Leo Burnett USA from DDB Needham.

EDITORIAL THAT ENCOURAGES RE-READING

Some 85 "how-to" articles per issue address readers' interests and move them to act.

That's why these activist readers typically read every Sunset page twice.

SELL-IN HELP

Only Sunset offers marketing specialists who create custom merchandising programs—and work closely with advertisers' Western salespeople to open new accounts and expand distribution.

RETAIL SUPPORT

Western retailers, who know better than anyone what moves goods and services off their shelves, invariably vote Sunset tops.

In part that's because we know them better than anyone else. We never stop listening to them… and working with them on behalf of our advertisers.

WESTERN MARKET KNOW-HOW

We probably know more about Westerners than anyone anywhere, and we're delighted to share what we know with our advertisers.

We also help them field custom surveys, and we arrange for them to meet with our editors to discuss specific problems and opportunities.

For more information on how you can use Sunset to boost your media dollars' ROI, call your Sunset rep, or our Ad Sales VP, Jim Baker at (415) 321-3600.

and prescription drug divisions came Cholybar, a candy-flavored medicine designed to reduce blood cholesterol levels. Cholybar and Lopid still await FDA approval for anticholesterol-specific designation.

The four companies that dropped from the Top 100 in 1987 were all buyout targets. The climate for buyouts was particularly inviting after the stock crash of October 1987 dropped many stock prices 50¢ on the dollar. Interest rates also were relatively low for borrowed funds.

Sterling Drug, No. 37 in 1986, was bought for $5.2 billion by Eastman Kodak Co. The deal vaulted Kodak to No. 7 in ad spending from No. 34 a year earlier. American Motors Corp., No. 72 in 1986, was bought by Chrysler Corp. and helped propel its new parent to No. 14 from No. 20 in 1986. Federated Department Stores, No. 98 in 1986, was purchased by Campeau Corp., a Second 100 advertiser. Zale Corp., the retail jeweler, was purchased by Peoples Jewellers Ltd., Toronto.

Media advertising has virtually been eliminated by Peoples, a company that prefers prime mall locations and in-store displays to media advertising.

Two 100 Leaders have escaped hostile takeover attempts in the past two years. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., No. 90, fended off Sir James Goldsmith two years ago, and No. 85 Gillette Co. paid greenmail to Revlon's Ron Perelman to stay independent last year and won a proxy fight this year against Coniston Group, a New York investment group that sought to stack the Gillette board with directors who would then sell the company.

The buyout of JWT Group by British holding company, WPP PLC, changed the agency landscape among a number of 100 Leaders. Goodyear, still reeling from its takeover battle with Sir James, warned WPP that it would withdraw its business from J. Walter Thompson if it succeeded in buying the agency's parent. When WPP completed the deal, Goodyear shifted much of JWT's domestic tire account business to Young & Rubicam.

IBM Corp., No. 39, pulled its account from Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein when two LGFE principals, largely responsible for the account, broke away after the WPP buy. The defection resulted in a suit filed by WPP to stop the breakaway group from taking clients from LGFE, which had been part of JWT Group.

> Ad spending gains for first half 1988 indicate this year may return the 100 Leaders to the more stellar growth years of the 1970s and early '80s.

A number of agency-client relationships were strained over conflicts resulting from buyouts and mediocre advertising. The stage also may be set for a possible revamp of the compensation system.

Nestle S.A. announced early this year it was considering inserting a compensation clause in contracts whereby agencies would pay Nestle should the advertiser have to find a new agency as a result of merger-related conflicts.

RJR adopted an incentive compensation system in 1987, giving a 20% bonus to agencies doing "outstanding" work. A 10% bonus is given for "very good." Average and poor are not given bonuses, but paid an undisclosed, fixed commission.

General Foods adopted a similar compensation deal for its U.S. business this May. Under the system, it may award up to 3 percentage points more in revenue for outstanding advertising. Based on an A, B or C grading system, the top percentage is believed now to be 16.3%.

Mars Inc., No. 24, carved out new guidelines for conflict. It fired Leo Burnett USA because it worked for H.J. Heinz Co., which became a Mars competitor overnight with the acquisition of Recipe dog food brand from Campbell Soup Co. Burnett handled none of Mars' U.S. pet food products, but Mars wanted its U.S. agencies to be capable of handling its products worldwide.

Mars also pulled $10 million in Milky Way candy billings from Backer Spielvogel Bates because Mars was miffed by a financial ad published by BSB's new parent, Saatchi & Saatchi PLC. The ad mentioned BSB's profits had risen 25% since the recent Saatchi merger. It later turned over the former Burnett business to BSB. Mars also forced Saatchi in London to resign its Carnation pet foods account there because of Backer's work on several Mars pet foods.

New edifying lingo entered the advertising lexicon in 1987: "Microbubbles" came from Cosmair Inc., No. 71, as in "microbubbles" give a smoother texture to the new Teinte Majeur cream compact and the loose powder makeup, Poudre Majeur; and "laserize," as in No. 89 S. C. Johnson & Son's Captain Raid who "laserizes" bugs dead.#

Nissan ads get real

New 'human race' drive tries to correct mistakes

By CLEVELAND HORTON

Nissan Motor Corp. USA, finally conceding its "yuppie engineers" TV spot failed to hit the mark, today breaks its model '89 drive with advertising that relies on real people.

Borrowing a technique from former client Apple Computer, agency Chiat/Day will advertise the new executions of its "Built for the human race" theme in a page ad in USA Today.

The ad alerts readers to the start of a "personal trek" series of TV commercials for Nissan's Pathfinder sport utility vehicle beginning on ABC-TV's "Monday Night Football."

Introductory spots for Nissan's new 240 SX, a sporty car on which the company is pinning its hopes of restoring its image among enthusiasts, also break on tonight's game.

"If we made a mistake, it was not using the real engineers," said Lee Clow, agency president and executive creative director, about the earlier commercials, which represented C/D's first effort on Nissan's estimated $150 million-plus account.

NISSAN
Built for the Human Race

Chiat/Day's Lee Clow dumps the "yuppie engineers" in Nissan's corporate campaign.

The spots, which aired from October 1987 to February 1988, featured several actors portraying engineers. They were controversial because the "yuppie-like" conversations in the spots seemed too staged to many observers, and the portrayals were considered offensive to some.

At the time, C/D officials defended the spots by saying the conversations were all based on real, taped conversations with actual Nissan engineers.

While not admitting the "engineers" are dead forever, the agency has several "real people" campaigns in the works for 1989-model advertising.

Tonight's new drive documents a young couple's trek in the Pathfinder truck from their home in Chicago to Rio de Janeiro.

The journey, featuring Kurt and Marty Anderson, was recorded on 16mm film, which will be cut into six commericals, each airing for a week.

The USA Today ad shows a color map of North and South America with the Anderson's path marked. The headline reads: "Tonight on Monday Night Football, Nissan goes out for a long one."

The ad is reminiscent of C/D's effort to boost viewership of Apple's ill-fated "Lemmings" spot, which ran only once at the end of the Super Bowl in 1985.

The "event marketing" term associated with that refers to carefully coordinated and orchestrated marketing pushes, not sponsorship of a sporting event.

For its Sentra advertising, C/D

General Mills rolls out three cereals

MINNEAPOLIS—General Mills is introducing three cold cereals this fall: Apple Cinnamon Cheerios, Fruity Yummy Mummy and Total Raisin Bran. All three will receive TV and print campaigns from Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton, New York. Total Raisin Bran has a $28.7 million introductory ad budget. Also, General Mills this week breaks TV spots touting the oat bran content of regular Cheerios. In a related development, General Foods is rolling national with Post Oat Flakes, an adult cereal touted on the package as "a good source of fiber." Grey Advertising, New York, handles.

'Time' will cut rate base 6.5%

NEW YORK—Time will forgo an ad rate hike and lower its guaranteed rate base 6.5% to 4.3 million as of Jan. 1 to discard what Publisher Bob Miller called "marginal circulation." "The total lower rate base will strengthen the composition of our audience," Mr. Miller said. Also, direct mail and TV toll-free call campaigns in certain U.S. markets face elimination. Ad rates are $120,130 for a one-time color page and $77,010 for a b&w page.

DDB, O&M share Cadbury confections

HERSHEY, PA.—Hershey split evenly an estimated $25 million to $30 million in Cadbury candy spending between DDB Needham Worldwide and Ogilvy & Mather, its New York-based agencies. DDB gets York peppermint patties, Caramello and all Cadbury-brand candy bars; O&M gets Peter Paul Mounds and Almond Joy bars plus Cadbury's creme-filled eggs. Wells, Rich, Greene, New York, the previous agency, will continue to work on Cadbury-Schweppes' Canada Dry soft

Attorney pulls TV nets into beer promotion trial

By SCOTT HUME

ST. LOUIS—Defense attorneys in the kickback trial of two former Anheuser-Busch executives claimed last week that TV networks routinely gave gifts to the giant brewer.

James Shellow, principal attorney for defendant Joseph Martino, claimed the A-B Business Ethics Manual, which cautions employees against conflicts of interest, "is full of pious statements. [But] it is honored in the breach, not in the observance. Everybody at A-B was getting gifts."

Mr. Shellow said company executives were given so many TVs, VCRs and the like from TV networks and others that "it looked like a warehouse [at A-B], there were so many gifts sometimes."

Mr. Shellow provided no substantiation for that allegation, which sources at the Big 3 TV networks immediately dismissed as baseless. The defense could begin calling its witnesses this week.

Mr. Martino and former VP-Wholesale Operations Michael Orloff are alleged to have conspired with Mark Shyres, former president of the Bingham Group promotion company.

The government claims the two former A-B executives received merchandise and cash that Bingham recouped through inflated or phony invoices.

The executives deny any conspiracy to fraudulently receive money and say any gifts that may have changed hands were the result of friendship rather than any business relationship that may have existed.

"I don't see where this becomes an industry issue rather than an Anheuser-Busch issue."

Following the opening remarks to the nine-woman, three-man jury by defense attorneys asserting their clients' innocence of the federal mail fraud and tax evasion charges, executives at the TV networks quickly dismissed the charges of rampant gift-giving as totally unfounded.

One TV executive who requested anonymity said the networks don't offer gifts, and most agencies and clients have strict guidelines against accepting anything if they did.

"It would give the appearance of conflict of interest," he added.

He said he knew of no instance in which a client or agency executive approached a network for a gift; the networks had stopped offering anything of value (i.e., hardware) as far back as the 1950s, he said.

The allegations of network gifts to A-B came as advertising, promotion and beer marketing executives took angry exception to an attorney's earlier statement that the defense strategy would include the claim that gift-giving is "commonplace" in relations between promotion agencies and clients (AA, Sept. 26).

"I don't see where this becomes an industry issue rather than an Anheuser-Busch issue," said Chris Sutherland, executive director of the Promotion Marketing Association of America. "It's simply not fair to extrapolate from this one case to indicting

States may target auto industry next

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

NEW ORLEANS—With fall auto introductions in full swing, state attorneys general are gearing up to make car ads their next regulatory target.

Although the states are just beginning joint efforts in this area, state officials meeting here last week sent out a warning.

"This seems like a perfect area for a multistate effort," said John Corwin, New York assistant attorney general and chief of that state's Consumer Frauds & Protection Bureau, before members of the National Association of Attorneys General Consumer Protection Committee.

Mr. Corwin said national guidelines for car manufacturers dealing with deceptive warranty, performance, price and safety claims should be considered.

He also suggested the committee not rule out national guidelines for auto dealers.

Committee members later met in executive session to formulate their direction on this issue, but officials declined to discuss what took place.

In a memo dated Aug. 24 from Illinois Attorney General Neil Hartigan, the consumer protection panel chairman, to New York Attorney General Robert Abrams, the NAAG president, "deceptive" automobile advertising was listed as one of two priorities for 1988-89. The other was health and disease-prevention claims in food ads.

The automakers would be the fourth major industry whose advertising has come under multistate scrutiny in the last 15 months, following airlines, car rentals and food.

Mary-Jane Raphael, Dan Jaffe and Wally Snyder at NAAG meeting.

At the NAAG conclave, ad industry association representatives tried to slow the states' efforts to use their collective power to control national advertising.

But a two-hour presentation on the merits of advertising self-regulation by five top executives seemed to fail to dampen their resolve.

"Where does all this stop?" asked DeWitt Helm, president of the Association of National Advertisers, after the meeting.

"What I'm hearing from the states is either all black or all white. There is no acknowledgment that there is good advertising out there. I'm hearing from them that all advertising is bad," he said.

Besides Mr. Helm, those addressing the officials from 32 states

P&G, Pillsbury just say no to big retail chain

By JUDANN DAGNOLI
and LAURIE FREEMAN

Tensions between the grocery trade and package-goods marketers heightened last week when Procter & Gamble Co. and Pillsbury Co. refused to comply with a new policy on promotional allowances by the nation's fifth-largest supermarket chain.

Winn-Dixie Stores stunned marketers earlier this month with a letter to hundreds of its suppliers saying it will no longer accept promotional allowances on a market-by-market basis.

Instead, it expects all such allowances to be offered chainwide. Winn-Dixie owns 1,300 stores in 13 Southern and Western states.

The new policy has caused a furor among package-goods marketers, who see it as a powder keg that could set a precedent for other chains and sound the death knell for regional marketing.

The policy also has angered smaller grocery stores, particularly Mauldin, S.C.-based BI-LO Corp., which fired off its own letter to suppliers asking them not to knuckle under to Winn-Dixie's demands.

A spokesman for BI-LO, a chain with 154 stores in many of the same markets as its larger competitor, said the policy is unfair because it could give Winn-Dixie better prices.

It may also be illegal under the Robinson-Patman Act, according to the Federal Trade Commission. The antitrust act stipulates that if a marketer gives a price break to one customer, it must give the same discount price to all competing customers. The act also makes it illegal for a supermarket chain to get

Olympics ratings worry advertisers

An Advertising Age roundup

NBC-TV's weak ratings for the telecast of the Summer Olympics have fueled an intense debate among advertisers over whether their buys were effective.

There is a growing concern among advertisers that the ratings may be masking more serious problems in the telecasts of major events like the Olympics. Some advertisers are worried that their huge Olympic campaigns may have been hurt by the negative publicity surrounding the Games' telecasts, especially questions about the merits of the production and concerns over commercial clutter.

Sources said there was internal dissent at General Motors Corp. over its big Olympics buy, due mainly to some of the bad publicity and the fact that ratings were running about 16.5% under expectations by the middle of the week.

"There are a lot of people questioning the veracity of the buy," said one source, who requested anonymity.

Still others said they were satisfied because NBC will give units in other programs to make up for the loss.

"Overall, we're satisfied," said Jay Qualman Jr., general director of advertising, Buick Division. "From an advertising sense, I've been pretty happy with the way they've run the commercials."

Even so, the company and other advertisers acknowledged they were looking for answers to the drop-off.

"One of the real issues here is whether there is something inherent going on in terms of viewing patterns that has created some of the diminished audience relative to expectations," said Phil Guarascio,

1992 means restructuring

Clients, agencies adjusting

By KEVIN COTE

LONDON—Fully half of the respondents to an ADVERTISING AGE poll of advertiser and agency executives said their companies are engaged in restructuring because of the approach of 1992.

The Editorial Sounding Board poll of 64 high-ranking European marketing executives was conducted in conjunction with AA's European newsletter, Euromarketing. The European Community will drop its remaining trade barriers by 1992, which will create a market of 300 million consumers and an increase in pan-European marketing strategies.

Twenty-one advertiser and 43 agency executives responded.

Many consumer products marketers said the trend to aligning major brands with the same agency across Europe will continue.

In the survey, brand alignment was cited by 76% of agency panelists as the "most effective response to the emerging pan-European marketplace."

A smaller majority of advertiser panelists, 57%, felt the same way about brand consolidation, with another 38% of those questioned saying they believe different agencies can effectively handle the same brand in different national marketplaces.

Robert Wilson, marketing director of Hattori, said in a written response: "There will be more coordination from the clients. The one-agency approach may not always result." Hattori markets Seiko watches.

The Sounding Board confirmed that recent European changes by agencies and advertisers are a result of preparations for a single European market.

For instance, Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide last month restructured its European chain of command to better serve the increasing number of clients handled in multiple countries (AA, Sept. 19).

Colgate-Palmolive Co. recently reorganized its operations, citing 1992 as the reason. The marketer has formed a European management board that's led by its European president, Brian Bergin (AA, Sept. 26).

Earlier this summer, 3M Co. consolidated its European roster of about 50 ad agencies by appointing the offices of Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, HDM and Grey Advertising here to handle separate units of related brands.

The poll results also showed that the majority of advertisers and agencies believe there will be increased use of "non-traditional agency services" in Europe when these services are offered by full-service ad agencies.

These services include event marketing, sales promotion, package design, direct marketing and public relations.

There's evidence that agencies are overestimating their ability to effectively provide fully intergrated communications programs.

Though 79% of agency panel members signified the increased use of these services as an area of flux in agency/client relationships, only 57% of advertiser panel members said they felt the same way.

Notably, none of the client-side panel members said agencies do a better job at providing specialized services than independent suppliers.

Some 37% of agency panelists said their companies or related subsidiaries could provide direct-mail campaigns of higher quality than independent agencies.

But 33% of the advertisers believe their agencies perform "poorly in direct mail and are not as effective as in-house or outside specialists."

While 25% of agency panelists think they can provide special event and sponsorship resources on a par with specialist suppliers, 76% of the clients judge agencies as relatively ineffective in that area.

A majority of the full panel predicted that ad spending in Europe will grow by 5% to 10% a year during the next two years.

Estimates of bullish growth by agencies tended to be more conservative than those of advertisers, however.

While only 11% of agency panelists expected growth of more than 10% annually, 19% of the clients said spending will exceed 10% per year.

Media inflation was most often cited as a key cause for increased ad spending.

New products also were cited by 57% of the marketers as contributing to European ad growth, and 39% of agency panelists expected substantial growth to come from new business.#

Bates struggles in Norway

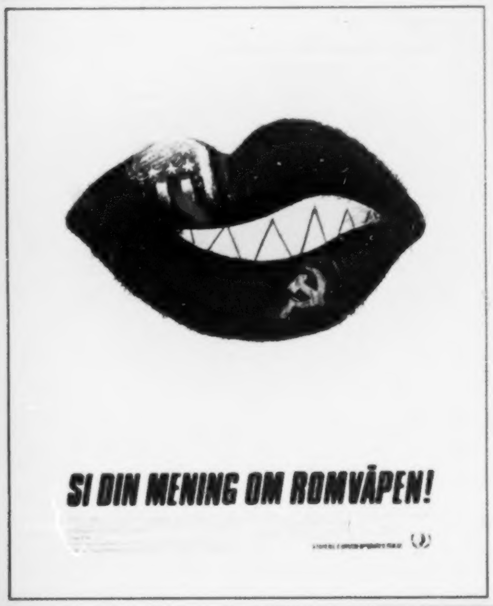
By DOUG MELLGREN

OSLO—Ted Bates A/S, Norway's No. 1 agency, is trying to heal its wounds after losing 8% of its billings—tough going during a downturn in the economy.

The shop is inching its way back from $6.6 million in business lost in December and January. Defectors included two airlines, Braathens SAFE and SAS, and a gasoline company, Norol.

Though the shop has regained $2.2 million in billings since spring, it's about to lay off 25 of its 205 employees.

In spring, the group froze hiring and shut down Ted Bates City, one of its 17 entities, and let 20 employees go.



SI DIN MENING OM ROMVÅPEN!

Norway's Government Information Service used rebounding Ted Bates A/S, Oslo, to develop this poster headlined "State your opinions on Star Wars."

"We thought those [earlier] reductions would be enough," said Erik Berg, Bates' managing director.

The agency, which had been in the black since 1966, expects to show parent Saatchi & Saatchi Co. a 1988 fiscal year bottom line of zero when results come out this month. This comes just one year after the agency hit record profits of $2.75 million on gross income of $28.3 million.

In the early 1980s, a loosening of traditionally tight credit and new wealth created by Norway's oil-based economy incited an unprecedented consumer spending binge. This created an average annual 10% to 15% growth rate for ad spending during the past decade, Mr. Berg said.

As the economy overheated, long-dominant Bates rose to new heights on the strength of its 98% domestic client list, billing $85.7 million last year. Now, all has changed, though the agency still is No. 1 in Norway.

"We had to change a company culture based on strong growth," Mr. Berg said. "We had to become crisis oriented."

Sources estimate 1987 ad spending in Norway at $1.5 billion. A 5% downturn is expected this year.

Recovery is coming but slowly. New business for Bates has sprouted from clients including the Norwegian Dairy Association's cream account, business newspaper Dagens Naeringsliv, and Nortra, the Norwegian tourism promotion agency. But Bates still needs $4.4 million more in new business to meet last year's billings total.

Despite the troubles, Mr. Berg isn't worried about the parent company. Saatchi "understands the market problems in Norway," he said.

In October 1987, Saatchi opened its own agency here, handling Saab Norway. Though its first-year gross income is expected to be only $735,000, Morton Stoevre Larssen, the Saatchi project manager, said that the sister agencies wouldn't merge.#

Thai TV grows nationally

By JOYCE RAINAT

BANGKOK—Thailand's five TV channels will be locking horns next year, competing for viewers and advertisers in a mad scramble for the No. 1 spot.

Though Thailand has only one true nationwide TV station—Channel 7, which reaches 98% of the country's 5.5 million TV households—that will change early next year when three of the four regional stations expand their coverage areas.

"Before, Channel 7 was king, and if you wanted prime time on a good program, you would have to block it in almost a year in advance," said Lintas:Worldwide Media Planning Director Sumala Mahasiri. "With competition surfacing, it's a month-by-month buy."

TV ad time attracts about $150 million to $180 million annually—from 50% to 60% of the country's total ad spending.

TV frequencies traditionally are government-owned but assigned to various government agencies: Channels 5 and 7 to the Royal Thai Army, Channels 3 and 9 to the Mass Communication Organization of Thailand and Channel 11 to the Public Relations Department.

Last year, Channel 3 got permission to extend its transmission area.

The network expansion, expected by March 1989, will allow Channel 3 to reach 86% of the population, said Andrea Cahn, the TV channel's assistant director-program department. Channel 9, also run by MCOT, will follow in Channel 3's footsteps, duplicating its competitor's expansion.

Each of the two channels now covers more than 47% of Thailand's TV households.

Channel 11, an educational channel, reaches 387,000 TV households. Benefiting from $1.25 million donated by the Japanese government, Channel 11 also has extended its coverage nationwide.

Channel 5, though not expanding its coverage area of 3.5 million homes, is beefing up its programming.

Broadcast buying had been simple under the old arrangement.

"If you wanted to reach the mass, lower end of the market you opted for Channel 7 and sometimes 5," said Prakit/FCB Media Director Paichit Thienthong. "And if your brand was geared to an upmarket audience, you looked at Channel 3 and, as an alternate, Channel 9."

But now that will change, though it will be at least a year before any thorough analyses on program ratings and audience coverage can be done, said Kenda Harris, director of the TV research unit for Deemar, a TV monitoring service.

Not only must homes outside the major cities reorient antennae to pick up the four channels, but Deemar is waiting for agencies and networks to sign contracts before installing a monitoring system.

The TV channels, too, have been reluctant to announce their new ad rates; each one is waiting for the other to announce its increase first.

How much upfront rate increase the advertisers will absorb is up for question, said Prakit/FCB's Mr. Thienthong. TV rates already are near saturation; an increase of 10% would be the maximum, he said.

Channel 7 now claims the highest prime-time 30-second rate, at $1,800, while Channel 9 has the lowest, at $860.

Each channel's ad time is limited to an average of 10 minutes an hour of broadcast time with a maximum of 12½ minutes in any one hour. The stations can broadcast seven hours on weekdays and up to 17 hours per day on weekends and holidays.#

Publicis was inadvertently excluded from ADVERTISING AGE's "Who's on top in Europe" survey (AA, Sept. 12).

With 1987 European gross income of more than $161 million, the French network ranks No. 9. European gross income accounts for 99% of its worldwide gross income, while European billings make up 98% of its worldwide billings.

This year, Paris-based Publicis entered into a joint venture with Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago (AA, May 23). If FCB and Publicis '87 figures had been combined for 1987, gross income would have totaled $247.84 million and billings would be $1.64 billion, putting the joint venture in the No. 2 slot.#

A fuller platter to choose from

Active segment builds variety for youngsters while developing alternate fare for other age groups

By Dee Ann Maki

Baby food marketers are very aware of the fact that booms usually turn to busts. Despite an upturn in baby food and infant formula sales as a result of the baby boomlet, marketers are mapping out strategies to cope with the next birth decline, expected by 1991.

They are preparing for that day by emphasizing nutrition and single-serving convenience and extending product lines, adding additional flavors and container sizes. The moves are designed to influence consumption by starting children on strained food earlier and keeping them on longer. Baby food market leader Gerber Products Co. is even targeting adults for future products. Annual consumption per baby is expected to increase from 45.8 dozen jars in 1987 to 46.3 dozen jars this year.

Nomi Ghez, an industry analyst at Goldman, Sachs, says baby food sales reached $785 million in 1987.

"The hottest category today is the 'smaller version,' single-serving size products," adds Eric Larson, analyst at First Boston Corp. These smaller sizes, generally 2.8 ounces vs. more traditional 4.5-ounce jars, promote less waste for younger children. The single-serving sizes have "been one of the most active areas in the market. Dried foods have basically been a niche product."

Both Gerber and Heinz tested instant baby foods in the early and mid-1980s, he says. "Heinz currently is the only one in instant baby food," says Mr. Larson.

He adds that he expects the first foods category to stay strong for years.

Gerber is so dominant it dictates the baby-food category's direction, says Ms. Ghez.

"When you're the leader in the market, you're safe and you stimulate the market by finding ways to continue usage. Gerber has demonstrated this, and with that formula, it can't lose."

The three companies involved in the business don't agree on exact market share figures, although Gerber is the clear leader. Nestle Corp. subsidiary Beech-Nut Nutrition Corp. is No. 2, and H.J. Heinz Co. ranks third. Gerber claims it has a 71.2% of the market, Heinz has 13%, leaving 15.8% for Beech-Nut. But Beech-Nut claims it has 17% of the market, and Heinz claims it has 15.8% of the market.

Gerber's First Foods, a line of single-ingredient, single-serving products available in nine fruit and vegetable flavors, has grown into a $25 million category alone, since its inception in July 1987, says Bob Johnston, exec VP-general manager of Gerber Products division.

Gerber positioned its line of single-ingredient foods, designed to be babies' first solid food consumed, toward first-time parents by emphasizing compatability with mother's milk and infant formula. The manufacturer emphasizes its line as a natural transition between milk and solid foods, but suggests parents first get pediatricians' recommendations.

Gerber plans to counter the projected birthrate decline by targeting adults with its nutrition-based food product lines, hoping to snag a higher percentage of health-conscious consumers and reach the $1 billion mark by 1991.

Gerber introduced Fruit Classics, an apple sauce-and-other-fruit combination product, available in 4-ounce single servings, in selected markets last May. The product, still in test, directly competes with Mott's USA in the lunch bucket category.

Gerber is testing shelf-stable milk in the Quad Cities. On the shelves since last May, the milk does not compete with infant formula because it is being positioned as a post-formula whole milk alternative for babies, Gerber says. Sterile

CATEGORY REVIEW: Coffee

'Fast roast' turns into weighty issue

Marketers respond to P&G's 'downsizing' of coffee containers, usage declines

By Judann Dagnoli

A revolution in the coffee market has taken place on supermarket shelves, but most consumers have not even noticed.

The 1-pound coffee container is going the way of the Edsel. Adopting a less-is-more attitude, most major coffee marketers are replacing the 1-pound ground with a 13-ounce "fast roast" blend.

The movement started last spring when No. 2 coffee marketer Procter & Gamble Co. revamped its Folgers line, saying the new roasting process "fluffs" beans to the point where 13 ounces by weight equals 16 ounces by volume. Market leader General Foods and Nestle Foods followed with 13-ounce products. Regional roaster Chock Full o' Nuts reportedly is converting to a 13-ounce size.

An industry source says, "P&G has been successful in downsizing the entire coffee industry."

Many consumers have not noticed the change because it is not being advertised, for an obvious reason. "The consumer is not getting any bargains because the fast-roast coffees are weaker and of lower quality than regular brewed coffees," says an industry source. "It takes more scoops to make a cup of the same strength and taste of regular coffee."

The change cannot be detected on the shelves, either; the fast-roast coffees are still packaged in 1-pound cans.

What consumers notice, say grocery buyers, is fast-roast coffee prices. Both P&G and GF say they are pricing their fast roasts 20¢ below list price because they use fewer beans.

Coffee industry sources contend the real savings goes to the coffee marketer, not consumers. "There's greater yield and less shrinkage," says a coffee industry insider. "Since the [coffee marketer] buys less green beans, he makes a higher margin, which is passed along to the trade."

Higher margins are crucial in the $4.8 billion coffee industry, where prices have bounced erratically in the past few years. A 1986 Brazilian drought forced coffee prices to skyrocket to more than $5 per pound. When bean prices tumbled later, retail prices dropped to $2.95.

In 1987 when import quotas on coffee beans were not reinstated, prices fell to less than $2 per pound. When the quotas were re-established later last year, coffee prices rose, hovering at $2.87 per pound in July.

To complicate matters, the ground-coffee market continued to skid as consumers increasingly turned to soft drinks. According to SAMI/Burke figures, ground coffee sales plunged 18.7% to $2.6 billion for the 52 weeks ended June 17, 1988, from the previous 52 weeks.

The suspension of import quotas produced a margin squeeze among coffee manufacturers. General Foods especially suffered from an excess of high-priced inventory when prices plummeted. At a spring 1988 shareholders meeting, GF's then president-ceo Philip Smith called 1987 "a painful year in domestic coffee."

GF responded by slashing ad spending for its flagship Maxwell House brand, first by 25% or $17.5 million, and then even lower by year's end. Maxwell House's agency is Ogilvy & Mather, New York.

Archrival P&G took advantage of the cut, aggressively advertising Folgers via N W Ayer, New York. P&G spent $33 million in 1987, while GF spent $24 million on Maxwell House. GF's share, according to P&G sales materials, dipped to 34.6% from 35.9%; P&G's shot up to 31.4% from 28.2% (AA, April 4).

P&G's switch to fast roast forced other manufacturers to convert because they could not match Folgers' 13-ounce price. "If you look at trends [in the industry] sooner or later most competitors fall in line," says George Boecklin, president of the National Coffee Association.

Less than a month after P&G introduced fast roast, GF downsized its Maxwell House and Yuban lines to 13 ounces, says GF spokesman Peter Ackley. Unlike P&G, which does not call its fast-roast coffee high-yield, GF says its coffee is high-yield although it does not flag it as such or mention the downsizing in advertising.

GF has reinstituted a heavy schedule of Maxwell House advertising, abandoning its "Coffee Made Our Way" campaign and reviving its "Good to the Last Drop" theme first begun when Theodore Roosevelt was U.S. President. The company also is emphasizing its brick-pack coffee as the market's freshest with new ads that bowed this summer via O&M.

The 13-ounce changeover has not reversed the slide in ground coffee sales, however. SAMI/Burke reports show that four-week dollar volume of regular coffee for the period ended July 15, 1988, was $185 million, down slightly from $187.4 million for the same period a year ago. June sales were $200.4 million in 1988 from $204 million in 1987. In May, the first nurser water went into test last month in Fort Wayne, Ind.

Gerber also hopes to capture additional sales by extending its product lines into areas such as reusable decorator bottles and microwaveable feeding dishes.

Gerber Products division, which markets baby food and infant-related merchandise, accounted for 55.7% of the company's total sales of $942.6 million in fiscal year 1988, ending in June, up 14% from the same period in 1987.

Beech-Nut sought to encourage brand loyalty with parents by introducing its Stages line of baby foods in 1984. The brand is pitched as "foods designed to change with the baby's growing needs." This year Beech-Nut added prunes and yellow wax beans to its Stages One line of fruits and vegetables.

Industry observers see Beech-Nut's April launch in test markets of Baby's First single-ingredient, single-serving fruit and vegetable products as an attempt to enter the Gerber-dominated first infant food category. Baby's First is positioned as having a smoother texture for good digestibility, while Stages One is positioned for older babies' tastes.

Heinz last month launched its version of single-ingredient, single-serving transitional baby foods. The manufacturer is positioning its Beginner Foods line as a natural introduction to solid foods, providing the baby with a bridge between cereal and traditional strained foods.

Beech-Nut also entered the cereal category this year with its rice and oatmeal based Fruit Cereals, available in three added fruit varieties. The company notes the cereal is the only line in the baby cereal category without sugar; the company claims to have taken 10% to 12% of the segment. In 1987, Beech-Nut also launched a four-flavor line of 32-ounce fruit juices.

Unlike Gerber, Heinz launched new products rather than expand its existing categories. The Baby Food division reintroduced Heinz Strained Yogurts into the market, after an unsuccessful attempt several years ago, and plans to add additional flavors to its line of five varieties this year.

Beth Adams, Heinz's manager-public communications, says baby yogurt has become a fast-growing category for the manufacturer.

The company's mainstay remains its 40-product line of dried, instant baby food, which the marketer positions as an alternative to the strained, jarred variety.

According to a study last year by New York-based Packaged Facts Research, baby food sales are predicted to increase an average of about 3% to 4% by 1991.

Overall sales for the baby-food market are expected to reach $3.2 billion by 1991, representing a 6% annual rate of growth for the category. The growth is attributed to a higher number of first-time parents who are placing a greater emphasis on quality.

Because of an increasing number of working mothers, the infant formula product category is expected to rise sharply 8% to 9% over the next few years.

month of GF's 13-ounce introduction, sales were down even more, to $207.7 million in 1988 from $212.3 million in 1987.

No major coffee marketer seems to be fighting the 13-ounce trend. Nestle Foods has been testing a 13-ounce ground coffee under its Taster's Choice label since September 1987; Della Femina McNamee WCRS handles.

And although some northern New Jersey supermarkets were carrying Chock Full o' Nuts 16-ounce can with a special label reading, "Still one full pound," sources say New York-based Chock's strategy is only temporary and designed to sell existing 1-pound inventory. The company could not be reached at presstime for comment.

In late summer, P&G took downsizing a step further, converting its established Folgers Special Roast Flakes high-yield coffee to fast roast. Now in 66% of the country, excluding the Eastern seaboard, the new Special Roast Flakes container holds 11.5 ounces, but produces 12 more cups of coffee than the now discontinued Folger's 1-pound coffee, says company spokeswoman Belinda Baxter-[illegible]ch.

Observers expect Maxwell House to follow suit and convert its Master Blend high-yield line, now packaged in 11.5-ounce cans, to fast roast. With its flagship Maxwell House line producing the same number of cups as 16 ounce, the high-yield Master Blend "has no reason for being," says a source. GF had no comment.

But even with the margin cushion of 13-ounce coffee, insiders say marketers are in for a tough 1988.

Coffee prices are increasingly uncertain; 1989 green coffee bean quotas are due to be set this month.

If levels cannot be agreed upon, current quotas will be suspended, says Mr. Boecklin. That will cause coffee prices "to come crashing down," says another source, resulting in a "free-for-all."

CATEGORY REVIEW: Yogurt

Yogurt breaks out of chilled section

Versatile U.S. staple moves into wide-ranging areas

With refrigerated yogurt now assimilated into American culture, marketers are moving to bridge that success across category boundaries.

But while refrigerated yogurt sales have tripled in the last five years, marketers including Dannon Co., General Mills and Del Monte Corp. have only started to make headway in frozen novelties, desserts, lunch snacks and beverages.

Howard Waxman, editor, Find/SVP's Ice Cream Reporter, estimates that supermarket sales still account for only $35 million to $50 million, or about 5%, of total frozen yogurt sales. SAMI/Burke placed 1987 frozen yogurt sales at $26.4 million—small, but up 185%.

Piggybacking on the success of frozen-yogurt chains, supermarket sales should take off as national marketers broaden their offerings.

Danny-on-a-Stick, Dannon's initial experiment with frozen yogurt in the 1970s was a flop; only this year did the company revive the product with frozen yogurt bars, which rolled national this spring.

Through its Vroman division, General Mills has extended the Yoplait name to soft-frozen yogurt: first in 1987, in single-serve packages, and then this spring in pint containers. Castle & Cooke also launched a Dole Fruit & Yogurt bar this year.

Miscellaneous yogurt products, characterized as yogurt drinks and shakes such as Dannon's Dan-up, is another small but growing category; 1987 sales rose 272%, to $10.6 million.

Del Monte wants to develop yogurt's image as a snack. After introducing yogurt-covered fruit snacks last year and testing but rejecting a refrigerated yogurt in the early 1980s, the General Foods unit this summer rolled out a shelf-stable Yogurt Cup, adding to its line of fruit and pudding cups.

Yogurt Cup technically competes with all portable snacks, from salty snacks to "Ding Dongs," says Clyde Noel, marketing manager. Yogurt Cup is Del Monte's first yogurt, although the company tested a chilled yogurt a few years ago.

Yogurt Cup is specially formulated to meet kids' tastes with a smoother taste and in a smaller size than regular yogurts. Spot TV and free standing inserts, themed "Now yogurt is kids' stuff," support via agency McCann-Erickson, San Francisco.

Market leader Dannon has been working on changing yogurt's positioning from a "health food" to a good-tasting healthy snack, says a spokeswoman.

Dannon ads are designed to be "myth-shattering," says the spokeswoman. In print, Dannon features non-traditional yogurt eaters such as male teens and male construction workers. The campaign pits Dannon against fast food—tortilla chips and double cheeseburgers—with tag lines such as, "The fastest growing fast food isn't a double cheeseburger"; HDM, New York, handles.

The refrigerated yogurt category continues to outpace virtually all other supermarket categories in the dairy section; sales have nearly tripled—up 188%—in the past five years. In 1987, sales totaled $1 billion, up 18.2% from 1986, according to SAMI/Burke.

According to a 1986 Find/SVP report, 45 brands of cup yogurt are on the market, with more than 30 producers each registering $1 million in sales. "Few products have demonstrated the kind of sales growth and increase in consumer acceptance that yogurt has over the last 10 years," the report concludes.

The four national competitors are Dannon, Yoplait, Kraft Dairy Group's Light n' Lively and Breyers, and Kellogg Co.'s Whitney's.

H.J. Heinz Co., which markets a low-fat yogurt under the Weight Watchers name, says low-calorie, non-fat yogurts, at $221 million in sales, now account for 17% of category sales. With NutraSweet now approved for use in refrigerated yogurts, marketers are rushing products to stores; Kroger Co. in July introduced Kroger Lite, the first NutraSweet yogurt, and Kraft is readying a Light n' Lively version for test market.

French-style yogurts now account for more than 65% of branded, pre-stirred yogurts.

To capitalize on this growth, Heinz in July introduced A La Francais, a creamy, 150-calorie per serving yogurt in nine flavors.

The line is available in 85% of the U.S., excluding the Northeast.

Phil Lempert, president, Lempert Group, an advertising agency handling Tuscan yogurt, says "non-fat yogurts are growing by leaps and bounds." This will create new opportunities for new yogurt products, he says, including yogurt puddings and yogurt desserts such as yogurt cheesecakes.

CATEGORY REVIEW: Granola

Early-decade hit gives way to fruit snacks

By Julie Liesse Erickson

Granola snacks are growing stale on the shelves.

A star performer in the early 1980s, granola snacks—including not only granola bars but other grain-based bars—have experienced a 32% drop in dollar sales since 1985, when sales peaked at $439 million. Last year, sales fell 17% to $300 million, according to SAMI/Burke.

Granola snacks have suffered from two problems, analysts say. In their eagerness to expand the products' appeal, marketers added pudding flavors, chocolate chips and coverings, sacrificing granola's health-food image. Simultaneously, those marketers found themselves competing with new healthy and portable snacks—often from their own R&D departments.

For instance, while granola snack sales have declined 32% in the past two years, sales of fruit snacks have exploded, passing up granola last year when total sales rose 15% to hit $313 million. General Mills competes in both markets, with Nature Valley granola bars and Fruit Corners/Betty Crocker fruit and pudding snacks.

> Describing the explosion in new snack products on the shelves, "There's only so much Mom can put in a lunchbox."
> Linnea Johnson
> Thomas J. Lipton Inc.

Shelf-stable puddings, yogurt and fruit compete for the kids' market, while a rapidly growing grain cake market attracts adults.

"There's only so much Mom can put in a lunchbox," says Linnea Johnson, product manager for Thomas J. Lipton Inc.'s Fun Fruits line.

Quaker Oats Co. still retains about a 45% share of granola snack sales and is dedicated to sticking with its lineup. Quaker believes the market is "rationalizing" after a glut of new competitors and will plateau at a comfortable—and profitable—level.

Trying to piggyback on fruit snacks' success, Quaker in September introduced strawberry and apple flavors of its Chewy Granola Bars, which lead the market with a 25% share. Granola Dipps, Quaker's chocolate-covered bar, are second with about a 20% share.

But Quaker has focused more on its grain cakes line as a growth vehicle. It markets corn, rice, rye and wheat cakes under both the Quaker and its Mothers health-food labels.

Likewise, despite some renewed vitality for its Nature Valley granola bars—which saw unit sales up 14% on the strength of heavy trade promotions—General Mills has refocused its new product and marketing attention on its line of fruit snacks. This fall it moves into fruit shapes with the introduction of Berry Bears and Shark Bites fruit snacks, under the Fruit Corners nameplate. A $7 million marketing effort supports, including TV spots from Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton, New York.

General Mills already has stumbled in the fruit snacks market; analysts say Pudding Roll-Ups and Fruit Swirl Bars, introduced in 1987, both have damaged consumers' perception of fruit snacks as a healthy alternative to candy.

Lipton seems determined to avoid the problems experienced by granola bars. Its concentration on the bite-size fruit snack segment of the overall wholesome snack market has paid off. Unlike General Mills, Lipton never introduced a granola bar and further narrowed its sights by discontinuing all but one of its fruit roll products in favor of bite-size products.

As a result, Lipton more than doubled its share of the fruit snacks category to an estimated 54% from 20% in 1986. Meanwhile, General Mills, which tried a number of new roll products, watched its share slide to 40%.

Despite fruit snacks' potential to replace granola snacks as the healthy snack of the late 1980s, however, marketers must watch their step.

Del Monte Corp. already offers yogurt-covered, bite-size fruits that some industry analysts believe may lead fruit snacks down the same self-destructive path granola snacks covered.

A backward glance at the litter of discarded or struggling brands—from trail bars to bite-size granola snacks to breakfast bars—begs the question: Are these snacks doomed to the short-lived life of a fad?

consumers decide where and what they're going to eat," he says. "Today, supermarkets compete with restaurants and other retailers."

How drought-related food price hikes will affect the shift toward imagery is unclear. With 1989 food prices expected to be 6% higher than this year's it seems a move toward softer image advertising would help lessen consumer sticker shock.

But few supermarket executives expect the weather to affect ad plans. "The drought affects us all equally," says one retailer.

West Point Market does not emphasize price because it is in a saturated market, Mr. Vernon says. "We can't compete in the newspapers on price. We haven't built our business on price. We look for quality first."

Supermarket industry executives say the gourmet foods market is growing, but BMW owners aren't the only ones looking for fresh Norwegian salmon and imported Havarti cheese. Now ads targeting main-line consumers reflect tonier tastes.

"It may have started with the upscale or yuppie market, but now there's a broad spectrum of customers interested in new foods, in a wide variety of produce and fresh seafood, and in nutrition," says Michael Rourke, VP-community and corporate affairs at A&P Supermarkets.

"Where we once carried 110 produce items, we now carry 300. We once offered 30 to 40 different kinds of cheese in a store, now we have 170 kinds from all over the world," he says.

To reach consumers interested in quality perishables and personal service, A&P combines image and price advertising for its mid-Atlantic Superfresh subsidiary. Image spots boasting the chain's "proud new feeling" run on TV, supported by printed price-item ads and inserts.

CHRISTMAS 1988 Bouncing back?

Joe Taylor/RHI Graphic Design

Retailers learn from bitter 1987

An Advertising Age roundup

Just one year ago, the stock market plunge was threatening to drag down the holiday selling season. Survey after survey showed that consumers were nervously clutching their pocketbooks and shopping conservatively.

For most retailers, that crucial sales period was a crapshoot.

But looking toward this Christmas, those same retailers' spirits are on the rebound. While surveys show that consumers still aren't in a strong buying mood, retailers are ready for whatever fickle shoppers decide to throw at them.

Since last year's troubles, retailers have cut costs, trimmed bloated inventories and ordered from suppliers more cautiously in a drive to junk the bad habit of overloading on merchandise and then selling it in unplanned deep discounts late in the season.

"Stores have taken measures to protect themselves," said Kurt Barnard, retail consultant and publisher of Retail Marketing Report. "They are buying merchandise from their suppliers on a hand-to-mouth basis, and they have bought only what they believe they can sell."

> "Last year retailers were loaded down with inventory; this year they'll be lean. They're going to make a lot more money."

The true test of this holiday season will be how much—or how little—it takes before retailers hit the panic button and start heavily discounting.

Optimists say stores will stay firm and abide by their existing sales schedules. "You'll see a lot of planned markdowns as opposed to unplanned markdowns at the end of the season," said William Flatley, principal, Kurt Salmon Associates, a retail consultancy.

But pessimists believe that competition is so fierce, and price-cutting habits so deeply ingrained, that significant promotional activity is inevitable.

"Any retailer that is not promotional will be left standing at the gate," said John Landschultz, retail analyst at Mesirow & Co.

The difference this year, he predicted, will lie in re-

What GrandMet plans for Pillsbury

By LAUREL WENTZ and JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Burger King Corp. can expect an injection of marketing dollars if Grand Metropolitan's proposed acquisition of Pillsbury Co. succeeds.

But N W Ayer then could have to win the advertising account all over again.

Sources familiar with the London-based conglomerate say it has a history of aggressively funding advertising and making dispassionate decisions about agencies.

While that doesn't mean GrandMet would start a formal review of the existing $200 million Burger King account, the British company's top executives wouldn't hesitate to drop the agency if they thought better work could be had elsewhere, sources said. Ayer has had the Burger King account for a year.

Despite frantic actions by Pillsbury, analysts and GrandMet officials seemed confident at the end of last week that the $5.2 billion unfriendly takeover attempt would succeed.

"We are confident that the blend of Grand Metropolitan's experience, innovation and resources with Pillsbury's established brand names, quality products and talented employees will create an organization with the potential to be a worldwide leader in the manufacture and sale of branded foods," said Ian Martin, ceo of GrandMet USA, in a letter to Pillsbury CEO Philip Smith.

Those familiar with GrandMet paint it as a company dedicated to brand marketing but also as a lean and efficient organization that acts quickly to solve problems.

"This is not a buy-it-and-break-it-up plan," said Frank Krum, president of Alpo Pet Foods, a key GrandMet subsidiary in the U.S. "GrandMet will be investing heavily in all the Pillsbury brands.

"They are committed to becoming a force in foods and committed to brand development. They move very quickly; they have an exciting attitude of being dissatisfied with things as they are."

That may not be good news for New York-based Ayer, which might also be troubled by comments from Keith Holloway, GrandMet's commercial affairs director in London.

"Our belief is that Burger King needs a very superb advertising campaign, and we'd go to a lot of trouble to get the best creative product," Mr. Holloway said. "We've already pinpointed advertising that has not been consistent over time. A big idea is needed that can be built over time. We would bring additional support and consistency to the advertising."

Ayer officials weren't available for comment at press time.

GrandMet's style also may mean trouble for Mr. Smith,

CBS takes promotions in-house

NEW YORK—CBS-TV Network has pulled its on-air program promotion assignment in-house from Backer Spielvogel Bates. Backer keeps media planning, print advertising and collateral. Backer won the $40 million account last year (AA, Aug. 31, 1987), but affiliates severely criticized the agency's promotions for CBS' prime-time shows. The creative assignment may go to another agency. New on-air promotion breaks next week.

Wrangler splits with Saatchi

GREENSBORO, N.C.—Wrangler is reviewing agencies for its estimated $10 million account after splitting with Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton, New York. Finalists are the Martin Agency, Richmond, Va.; Henderson Advertising, Greenville, S.C.; HutchesonShutze, Atlanta; and W.B. Doner & Co., Baltimore. A decision is expected by mid-November.

Hawley Martin rethinks shop buy

RICHMOND, VA.—Hawley Martin Partners, the new shop created by Martin Agency founder David Martin, is dissolving its unsigned agreement to buy Ford & Westbrook, sources said (AA, Aug. 22). Hawley Martin claimed to have combined billings of $50 million, $35 million of which came from Ford & Westbrook. The merger wasn't completed because Ford & Westbrook was too deeply in debt, the sources said. Brad Armstrong, a Ford & Westbrook partner who was to be president of Hawley Martin, confirmed last week that his old agency "had some cash flow problems that affected the structure of the agreement." But he denied that Mr.

ESPN to kick off sports magazine

By PATRICK REILLY

ESPN, the nation's largest cable TV network, will unveil a monthly sports magazine to be distributed in home-delivered Sunday editions of major metropolitan newspapers.

The New York Times, The Boston Globe, San Francisco Chronicle, The Dallas Morning News and eight other newspapers have signed on.

The advertiser-supported magazine, called TV Sports, will be created by Crosby Vandenburgh Group, a Boston-based custom magazine publisher. It will be launched in December.

The full-size book will appear in the last Sunday edition of each month, only in home-delivered copies to neighborhoods wired for cable and only to homes with median household incomes of $35,000 or more.

CVG, which will handle the editorial and sales functions of TV Sports, said it has already signed RJR Nabisco and Philip Morris Cos. as advertisers for multiple products.

Ad rates are $21,500 for a b&w page and $30,200 for a color page. Rate base will be 2 million.

TV Sports will be subtitled "The Magazine of Televised Sports" and carry listings of sports events on ESPN as well as the Big 3 TV networks and other cable services.

Editorial will include features on TV sporting events and will be mixed with a prime-time chart of events and an innovative listing of monthly programs by sport.

"We are trying to make the magazine as usable as possible to the viewer," said Roger Werner, president of ESPN. "The [broad range of] listings in the long

Grocery chain dumps major package goods

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

The nation's fifth-largest supermarket chain, Winn-Dixie Stores, is dropping products of grocery marketers that have refused to comply with its demand for standardized promotional allowances.

ADVERTISING AGE has learned that products from Campbell Soup Co., General Mills, Quaker Oats Co. and Procter & Gamble Co. are among those not being restocked by Winn-Dixie, a 1,300-store chain based in Jacksonville, Fla.

General Mills, Quaker and General Foods Corp. last week joined P&G and Pillsbury Co. in making it clear they had no plans to comply with Winn-Dixie's pricing demand (AA, Oct. 3).

"We have had some items discontinued," said Sydney McHugh, a P&G spokeswoman. "We're disappointed, but that's Winn-Dixie's prerogative."

The chain has said it no longer will accept promotional allowances on a market-by-market basis but will place chainwide orders at the lowest available prices—even if those prices are offered in only one of its markets.

Some of the big food marketers are contemplating retaliatory coupon blitzes in Winn-Dixie markets to boost demand for the discontinued products.

"This is more than a single account at issue. This speaks to the need for reviewing the industry's long-term strategies for trade allowances," said Craig Shulstad, director of media and financial relations for General Mills.

1992: a false sense of 'Europhoria'?

By LAUREL WENTZ

LONDON—The skeptics are starting to emerge on the subject of a barrier-free Europe in 1992.

Marketers have been carried away by the euphoria of a European Community that supposedly would be similar to the U.S., but now a few companies are beginning to realize it won't be that easy.

At a "Euro 1992" conference here last week, organized by the International Advertising Association, some executives said cracking the European market still will be hard after trade barriers fall.

Europe is gripped by "Europhoria," ignoring difficult details such as the loss of economic independence to focus on a rosy long-term future vision, said Mike Johnson, editor of International Management.

He compared European Parliament Commission President Jacques Delors to "Julie Andrews in 'The Sound of Music' with a family of cute little bureaucrats yodeling in the background."

The business monthly's September cover story on 1992 said industry restructuring to prepare for a single European market will eliminate between 250,000 and 500,000 jobs. Restructuring also could lead to labor unrest, economic disruption and protectionism arising from a worsening trade deficit.

European Community to scrutinize 'media moguls'—P. 74

The passing of 300 EC directives to cover every trade aspect could result in more regulation than deregulation.

"We may see proposals for directives on videotex, tobacco advertising, sexism [in advertising] and certain types of food claims," said Alastair Tempest, secretary general of the European Advertising Tripartite.

As companies focus on the cost savings of 1992, the consumer could end up being worse off—rather than better off—than he is today, Clay Timon, VP-director of worldwide advertising at Colgate-Palmolive Co., said in a speech at the conference.

A European Community housewife won't suddenly emerge on Jan. 1, 1993, Mr. Timon said. "Her needs, her desires and her consumption habits are not going to change appreciably. And this we cannot ignore."

For example, toothpaste and oral care can't be marketed in the same way across Europe because they aren't perceived the same way everywhere, Mr. Timon said.

In Spain, toothpaste is regarded as a cosmetic. Spanish toothpaste commercials look glamorous, like soft-drink commercials. In the U.K. and the Netherlands, toothpaste consumption is three times as high as in Spain and Greece, and the product is seen as therapeutic.

Sometimes products themselves have to change from country to country. Mr. Timon cited the example of Ajax household cleanser, used straight out of the bottle in northern Europe to obtain a glossy shine in spot cleaning.

In southern Europe, Ajax is used

Towne shop on the block

By JON LAFAYETTE

NEW YORK—After chasing away all potential suitors two years ago, Towne, Silverstein, Rotter, an $80 million agency, is inviting acquisition proposals.

"The economics of the agency business have changed," said TSR President Steven Rotter. "I'd listen to offers now."

His admission is unusual. Most agency executives deny being involved in merger discussions and loudly proclaim the virtues of independence up until the moment the ink is dry on a contract selling their shop.

Mr. Rotter, who said he hasn't received any feelers in the past six months, said his change of heart is partly based on figures he's seen on how much an agency of TSR's size would be worth.

Using one standard formula based on the agency's $12.3 million in gross income, a ballpark price for the agency would be $6 million to $7 million, industry observers say.

Mr. Rotter said that in addition to "putting a bunch of money in the bank," a sale would give TSR clients the support of a large agency.

Although he would be willing to sell, given the right offer, Mr. Rotter added, "we wouldn't do it [just for the money] if we didn't fit."

TSR is owned by Mr. Rotter, 38, and CEO Leslie Towne, 55. William Silverstein, who'd been chairman-director of creative services, retired a year ago, Mr. Rotter said.

The agency has been profitable in 21 of its 22 years, landing in the red once in the mid-'70s because of problems with one of its accounts, the popular Rubik's Cube toy (then marketed by Ideal), he said.

The agency's clients include Canandaigua Wine Co., Lewis Galoob Toys and Emerson Radio Corp. However, Levy, King & White, a Buffalo, N.Y., agency near Canandaigua's headquarters, is eager to pick up more business from the wine company.

Levy King has been handling Sun Country cooler's sales promotions for the past year. A few months ago, the small shop was named agency of record for Canandaigua's latest product, Marcus James White Zinfandel.

Mr. Rotter believes that because his agency's key clients are in "unusual categories," TSR should be "more appealing" to an acquisition-minded agency and be able to command a good price. Also desirable, Mr. Rotter said, is the agency's recently launched sales promotion division.

There are several agencies reportedly pursuing acquisitions in New York. Among them are Roux, Seguela, Cayzac & Goudard, Paris; WCRS Group, London; and Dallas-based Tracy-Locke, a subsidiary of Omnicom Group.#

'Cosby' starts slow on syndicated TV

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—The new fall season has kicked into high gear on syndicated TV, but it appears few viewers have noticed.

A batch of new, highly touted shows hit the air last week, including "The Cosby Show" and "Family Feud." Initial audience reaction, however, appears lukewarm, based on overnight ratings in a handful of markets.

"The Cosby Show," which made its debut Oct. 3, bowed to an 8.5 A.C. Nielsen Co. rating on WWOR in New York. The show on Oct. 7 turned in ratings of 8.6 on WFLD in Chicago and 8.9 on KCOP in Los Angeles.

LBS Communications' "Family Feud," which has early-morning placement on three major CBS owned & operated stations, got a 5.6 rating on WCBS in New York on Oct. 5. But it earned ratings of only 1.6 in Los Angeles (KCBS) and 2.0 in Chicago (WBBM). LBS said the show eventually will do between an 8 and 10 national rating.

Many stations paid a king's ransom for the syndicated "Cosby" and staked their financial futures on the show's outcome.

Chiat/Day execs break away

By CLEVELAND HORTON

The breakaway bug has reached the West Coast. Three senior executives have bolted Chiat/Day to hang out their own shingle.

Greg Helm, 41, former senior VP-general manager at Chiat/Day's Venice, Calif., office, is now managing director of the new agency, Stein, Robaire & Helm.

John Stein, 37, and Jean Robaire, 31, both VP-associate creative directors at Chiat/Day, are co-creative directors of the new agency.

The Stein-Robaire creative team, best known for its celebrity Pizza Hut campaign, has won numerous creative awards and is considered a West Coast powerhouse. Mr. Helm distinguished himself at Chiat/Day when he managed the often-stormy Apple Computer account.

Unlike the high-profile breakaway from Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein in New York last March, where about 60 employees left to join Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners, the former Chiat/Day executives say they won't go after their alma mater's clients or staffers. The new agency has no start-up accounts and is looking for office space in Los Angeles.

Both Mr. Helm and Bob Wolf, Chiat/Day vice chairman and president of the Venice office, said the departure was amicable, but it was also abrupt. The three principals offered their resignations on Sept. 30 and were immediately escorted out of the agency.

"I offered them as much [notice] as they wanted," Mr. Helm said. "But they said, and I agree with this philosophy of management, 'Thank you, but with all due respect . . .' "

Mr. Helm said he was concerned that the breakaway would be interpreted as hostile, even though he said it wasn't.

"It's something I've always wanted to do, but I didn't want to leave Chiat/Day," he said.

However, he indirectly attacked the agency's recent expansion. "I hope [Stein, Robaire & Helm] will always be as challenging as Chiat/Day was at the beginning, when it was a smaller agency, where people call each other by their first names," Mr. Helm said.

Mr. Wolf took exception to any suggestion that Chiat/Day has suffered from the growth associated with the win of Nissan Motor Corp. USA's $150 million-plus account and later the $80 million in Nissan dealer business.

Asked about reports that Chiat/Day is an agency split between those who work on the Nissan account (the haves) and everyone else (the have-nots), Mr. Wolf said: "I don't agree with it, and I don't want to talk about it. Everybody who writes a story wants to write that story." The breakaway team didn't work on the Nissan business. #

Marcy Magiera in Los Angeles contributed to this story.

Mail-order ads planned for Soviets?

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—A major U.S. consumer-products company is negotiating with Soviet officials about airing mail-order commercials in Soviet TV programming, says a leading producer of joint U.S.-Soviet programming.

Ed Wierzbowski, president of Global American Television, last week refused to identify the U.S. marketer but said such an agreement would represent a "breakthrough" for advertisers.

The spots would direct viewers to send money to a post office box in the Soviet Union; from there, it would be relayed to the U.S. marketer, he said. The marketer then could send the product to the Soviet Union.

Only a handful of U.S. marketers have used TV to reach the Soviets, mostly because U.S. goods aren't readily available in the Soviet Union.

Another issue that must be resolved is how U.S. marketers in general can bring their profits out of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Wierzbowski is also looking for U.S. advertisers to buy time on the Nickelodeon children's series "Fraggle Rock," which he said will make its Soviet TV debut early next year. #

Retailers hope for holiday jingle

Analysts expect improved fourth-quarter profits

tailers' pricing policies. Mr. Landschultz said he doesn't think retailers will mark up merchandise as steeply or subsequently take as sharp a markdown as last year.

One source of optimism is expected fourth-quarter sales in key categories. Because of current strength in apparel and home-related, recreational and upscale merchandise, industry analysts expect fourth-quarter retail sales to rise 5% to 8% over the same period last year. With inflation running at 3% to 4%, "real" gains should be in the 2%-to-4% range.

Those figures resemble last year's fourth quarter, when general merchandise sales climbed 5.5% to $109.7 billion, inflation hit 3% and real sales were up a modest 2.5%, according to the National Retail Merchants Association.

But the crucial element is profits, not sales.

"In terms of profitability, this Christmas is going to look a whole lot better," said James Newton, president of Economic Perspectives, a research and consulting company.

If things shape up as expected, merchants stand a chance of breaking out of their price-cutting spiral even though no hot new items have yet appeared on the horizon.

In fact, retailers run the risk of running out of merchandise if sales exceed their relatively modest expectations.

Analysts are upbeat

"This Christmas will be much better. Retailers will do very well on their bottom lines," said Mesrow's Mr. Landschultz.

"It will definitely be a better Christmas than it was last year," said Fred Wintzer, specialty apparel retail analyst at Alex. Brown & Sons. "Last year retailers were loaded down with inventory; this year they'll be lean. They're going to make a lot more money."

In his opinion, specialty retailers' profit margins should rise by 2% in the fourth quarter, compared to a drop of 3% to 4% in last year's final quarter.

Despite consumer surveys (see related story on this page), industry experts have high hopes that consumers are ready to buy, if only somewhat more cautiously than in previous years.

"The environment looks different this year than it did last year," said Rosalind Wells, chief economist at the National Retail Merchants Association. "The economy is in good shape, employment and income levels are high, and consumer confidence levels have been extremely good. Barring some unforeseen event, like last year's stock market crash, demand should pick up and stores should panic less."

Paul Leblang, senior VP-director of marketing at Saks Fifth Avenue, agreed. "Assuming that nothing unexpected happens, customers should be in good shape," he said, noting that last year's market volatility had a definite impact on Saks' business.

Even the less-than-thrilling consumer spending surveys are consistent with retailers' feelings that consumers are choosing quality over quantity and exercising greater control over their buying.

"Customers today are older, more conservative, not as easily swayed," Mr. Barnard said. "And retailers are gradually beginning to realize that the impulse-buying customer of the past is giving them a cold shoulder."

As baby-boomers have become older and more mature, "they're less prone to self-indulgent spending sprees," said Carol Farmer, president of Carol Farmer Associates, her own retail consultancy. "They're shopping now with lists, and that makes a big difference in what they buy."

In general, high-quality items targeted at upper-income consumers stand to reap substantial gains because virtually all of the nation's income growth this year has been concentrated in the wealthiest 20% of population.

The immediate consequence is that the broad middle- and lower-middle-class markets probably won't have as much to spend, said Carl Steidtman, chief economist, Management Horizons, a retail consultancy.

The longer-term consequence is an increasing split between the haves and the have-nots that's gradually changing the shape of retail markets.

"At the top, people are in a better condition to buy luxury goods like cashmere, natural fibers or whatever the latest toys are," said Fred Marx, president of Marx & Co., a retail consultant. "At the bottom, people are extremely price-oriented. . . . But it's the middle market that's kind of treading water."

Apparel sales crucial

Apparel is a critical category. Although sales figures for September aren't available yet, "Retailers are saying women's apparel is showing signs of life again," said Ms. Wells of NRMA.

She noted that stronger apparel sales will give a needed lift to specialty stores and general merchandise stores, which have been hurt most by the yearlong slowdown in apparel sales.

Apparel's recovery is being driven by pent-up consumer demand and more acceptable fall fashions, rather than a much-hoped-for fall fashion trend that never materialized.

The themes of the season are "more colors, better silhouettes, more variety in hemlines, suede shoes: a hodgepodge," said William Smith, retail analyst at Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

"With so many fashions revolving around miniskirts, women delayed buying apparel, but we're feeling the benefits of those postponed purchases now, [and] we expect this to continue through Christmas," said Bob Capelli, senior VP-sales promotion at Marshall Field's.

Like last year, "hot" items in everything from toys to consumer electronics are in short supply this holiday season.

Service isn't just for holidays

That leads Morris Saffer, president of Toronto-based Saffer Advertising, which specializes in retail, to draw an analogy with the automobile industry.

"Retailers are having the same problem as auto manufacturers had when the new model year no longer automatically resulted in a surge in sales. Then they had to become good merchants all year long. We're seeing the same kind of thing happening in fashion and other industries, and that's changing the tenor of Christmas."

In Mr. Saffer's view, the merchants' main task this holiday season is to "woo" customers who've been disappointed in the lack of newness or excitement in store offerings. He believes stores that provide good service, well-selected merchandise and a sense of drama in their presentation will have success, while stores that adopt superficial sales promotion tactics will lose share.

Experts suggest that the "identity" of stores is important this year because of the wave of mergers and buyouts that has swept the retail industry, creating unprecedented turmoil.

"When you have changes as dramatic as these, the nature of individual stores changes and consumer allegiances are going to be more questionable than they historically have been," said Bernie Feiwus, senior VP-marketing and advertising at Nieman Marcus.

"This is a real opportunity for retailers to come up with a clear and focused strategy to pick up con-

Consumers remain cautious

CHICAGO—Consumers appear to be approaching the holidays this year as cautiously as they did after the October 1987 stock market plunge.

Leo J. Shapiro, head of Leo J. Shapiro & Associates, a consumer research company, expects this holiday season to be a "cliff-hanger" for retailers.

"Consumers are making their buying decisions later and later, because they are waiting to see if the products will go on sale," he said.

In its latest survey of consumer plans, Shapiro found the spending outlook gloomier in September 1988 than the precrash outlook a year earlier.

This year, 63% of the respondents said they plan to spend more or the same as they did last year, compared with 72% a year ago.

Suprisingly, the results are even gloomier than last November, when 65% planned to spend more or the same as a year earlier.

In another major survey, the Conference Board's ongoing consumer confidence survey of 3,500 people found last month that confidence levels dropped almost 11 points compared to August.

"That ain't no kid stuff," said Fabian Linden, executive director of the board's consumer research center.

"It's hard to tell if this is merely a pause in consumer optimism or the beginning of a larger decline," Mr. Linden said.

A similiar survey at the University of Michigan Institute for Social Research found consumers are "quite concerned" about inflation, said Richard Curtin, director of the survey.

But he said preliminary data for September show a slight rise in consumer confidence.

"I think Christmas sales will somewhat benefit from this attitude, but we won't see a boom in Christmas sales," Mr. Curtin said. "I think consumers will be spending a little more than usual, but this is because inflation will be higher than in the past year."

Impact Resources, a retail consulting company that tracks consumers' intention to buy various goods, reported an across-the-board drop in purchase intentions between this year's third quarter and a year earlier.

The drop cuts across all categories, including cars/trucks, computers, furniture, home appliances, homes/land, jewelry/watches, recreational vehicles/boats, stereo equipment, TVs/videocassette recorders and vacation/travel.

The score for consumers' purchase intentions in the third quarter was 141.1, down 17.7%. The score reflects consumers who say they definitely or probably intend to buy a given item.

Of the categories listed, stereo equipment suffered the steepest decline, furniture was second and computers third.

"What we're seeing is something pretty typical of an election year. It's not that the economy is falling apart; it's just that people are uncertain and waiting to see what will happen," said Gary Drenik, president of Impact Resources.

Ironically, he expects that Christmas this year will be a "moderate success" in part because the data also indicate a fair amount of pent-up demand.#

Plain backdrops let viewer focus on the ad's pitch

NutraSweet Co., Xerox Corp. and Interstate Bakeries Corp. are among the marketers who've discovered the virtues of plain backgrounds in TV campaigns.

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Sometimes the more complicated a commercial gets, the simpler it needs to look.

Several new technologically manipulated TV spots have caused agencies to produce ads with plain backgrounds. Campaigns now running for Xerox Corp., American Isuzu Motors and the National Dairy Research & Promotion Board feature neutral backdrops as settings for unusual images.

The Xerox campaign uses actors and dancers to demonstrate the features of the company's line of copiers, facsimile machines and other business equipment (AA, Sept. 12).

"We not only used the backdrop to give a strong graphic look to the spots, but there's so much electronic manipulation of the images that it was necessary. We needed a way to shoot scenes separately but marry them cleanly. So there was a real technical reason for it," said Howard Benson, group creative director for Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, which produced the ads.

A new execution in Los Angeles agency Della Femina, McNamee WCRS' Joe Isuzu campaign features a shower of paper money that's attracted like a magnet to an Isuzu Trooper II, which sits—of course—in front of a plain white background.

And in the dairy board's milk campaign from McCann-Erickson, San Francisco, children grow up and become adults in front of a plain backdrop.

But agency creatives opt for a plain background for other reasons.

NutraSweet Co. used pint-size actors to impersonate Whoopi Goldberg, Robin Leach and Joan Rivers in its current campaign for Equal tabletop sweetener.

The Equal spots used a gray, crinkled backdrop because "We wanted viewers to look at the kids; the simple surroundings give a confused feeling at first about whether they are kids or adults, and that's what we wanted," said Joe Johnson, art director at Ogilvy & Mather, New York.

Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Minneapolis, decided to shoot its new spot for Interstate Bakeries Corp.'s Butternut bread on a plain backdrop rather than in a schoolroom setting.

The commercial promotes white bread as one factor in reducing the risk of heart attack. A group of children play musical chairs, with one child left out at the end.

"The message here is that heart disease is as unsuspecting as the kid who doesn't get a chair. So the idea was to make these kids symbols—of any innocent person in any environment who loses out," said John Borchardt, C-M-E broadcast producer. "We felt that putting them in a specific location would cause viewers to see them as representatives of a specific demographic group."

Mr. Borchardt went on to say, "The backdrop offers a nice-looking, generic but dramatic way to present an idea. It's kind of an artsy thing to do, but it's nice to move away from putting shadows of venetian blinds on a blank wall."

"It gets a fresh look and moves away from the clutter of live-action spots," said Backer's Mr. Benson. "With these kinds of ads, the message is in the graphics of the spot—and the audience really understands that."# sumers," and also address consumers' confusion, Mr. Feiwus added.

However, retailers' overall conservatism is expected to be reflected in their holiday advertising and marketing plans. "No one wants to change their marketing strategies dramatically, because no one is sure where the consumer is or where he is going," said Mr. Barnard of Retail Marketing Report.

For their part, retailers express cautious optimism and a reluctance to give away specifics of their holiday marketing strategies early in the season.

Some, like Wal-Mart Stores, are starting the holiday season this month. "Customers gear up earlier and earlier every year," said Stacey Duncan, Wal-Mart public relations coordinator.

Rival K mart Corp. anticipates a "reasonably good" season, with Christmas ads breaking around Thanksgiving and December sales increases of 6% to 7%, said Orren Knauer, director of investor relations.

Although many retailers including K mart overestimated demand for stuffed Christmas bears last year, K mart is bringing back "Our Christmas Bear" as a purchase-with-purchase promotion; that is, the bears are sold to customers who make other purchases at K mart.

Retailers are divided on the subject of the bears, with some arguing that the marketing ploy has become tired and others counting on them for yet another year.

Minneapolis' Dayton Hudson Department Stores Co. is credited with introducing the bears in 1985; this year, it's selling a limited edition of its Santa and Miss Bear characters and paring related Santa Bear products to 130 from 160 last year, said Cyndi Schlosser, director of public relations.

In sunny California, however, Dayton Hudson Corp.'s Mervyn's division has decided not to bring back last year's plush Christmas bunny or 1986's Max the Reindeer.

Marshall Field's in Chicago agrees and isn't bringing back its Mistletoe bear as a purchase-with-purchase promotion. Instead, it will use bear logos on some merchandise, like children's apparel, and make Mistletoe bear one of its Christmas tree characters, along with Uncle Mistletoe and Aunt Holly.

Other retailers, which have made the characters a critical part of their holiday strategy, are more sure of their lasting appeal. For instance, the Broadway-Southern California, a division of Carter Hawley Hale Stores, is counting on its Jingle Bear to be a "goodwill ambassador" during the holidays, a spokesman said.

And in Boston, Filene's has added several characters to its Felix and Felicia bear couple this year, including Fi-Ling, a Chinese panda whom they adopt, and new friends Betsy Bunny, Otto Owl, Sidney Skunk and Rusty Raccoon.

The tactic, used by stores in other parts of the country, is to create a story line around the characters and advance it each year.

Some stores still think that purchase-with-purchase or gift-with-purchase promotions are important but see the need to move beyond plush stuffed animals.

In Washington, for instance, Woodward & Lothrop this month introduced Talk of the Town, a red-and-gray telephone, selling for $18.50. As of Dec. 3, the phone will be sold for $7.50 with each $50 purchase.

Separately, instead of using its plush Kringle bear as a promotional tool, like last year, the chain will sell the bears for $10 with no related purchase requirements.

Several retailers are counting on stronger holiday ad budgets to pump up sales.

Toys "R" Us intends to be "very aggressive" with a strong TV and print presence, said Ernie Speranza, VP-advertising and marketing.

In response to continuing pressure to start the holiday season early, the chain will kick off its efforts this month, with its major ad push coming after Thanksgiving.

Rival FAO Schwarz is also boosting its print-only ad budget, which will be devoted to ads that have a strong emotional appeal, said President-CEO Peter L. Harris.

Bloomingdale's also will spend more on advertising that will "sell the store, rather than price," Gordon Cooke, exec VP-sales promotion, said recently in an interview with a retail publication.

Categories that should do well this year include fragrances, cosmetics, jewelry, compact disc players, home furnishings, sporting goods and home videos.

On the video front, marketers are slashing prices and creating special holiday packages in preparation for what's expected to be the most competitive video selling season ever.#

Computers brace for battle over lap models

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

Compaq Computer Corp. today unveils its first laptop personal computer in a long-awaited move that raises the stakes in the $1 billion market.

In presenting the Compaq SLT/286 at a New York news conference, the No. 2 business PC marketer takes aim at laptop leaders Toshiba America, Zenith Data Systems and NEC Home Electronics USA instead of longtime rival IBM Corp.

IBM, the business PC leader, may not be far behind, however. IBM and Apple Computer are expected to announce their own smaller portable PCs soon. IBM planned a news conference for this week, but details weren't available at press time.

Compaq is backing its introduction with a $4 million print advertising campaign that breaks Oct. 18 in The Wall

Outdoor ads use regional moves as springboard

By ALISON FAHEY

The regional marketing trend and declining dominance of network TV are playing right into the hands of the outdoor advertising industry.

Despite heavy cuts in tobacco and liquor spending, revenues for the $1 billion-plus industry are expected to jump 6% to 8% this year, compared to a 4% annual growth rate in the past two years.

And while outdoor accounts for only 1.5% of the nearly $100 billion in national ad revenue, Don Byer, new president of the Institute of Outdoor Advertising, expects that figure to double in the next five years.

"The outdoor medium is being rediscovered," Mr. Byer said.

Contributing greatly to the resurgence are changes in

Premier under fire

States could ignite regulatory war over RJR product

By JUDANN DAGNOLI
and MELANIE JOHNSTON

Health organizations in two states are trying to snuff out R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s new Premier cigarette by having local agencies regulate it as a drug.

Premier, which could get a $125 million marketing push if it goes national, is taking additional heat from health officials in three other states.

If the states succeed in regulating the cigarette, it could mean curtains for Premier in those states and likely would result in a regulatory quagmire for both Reynolds and the U.S. Food & Drug Administration.

Since April, the FDA has been reviewing Premier to determine whether it's a drug and should be regulated on the federal level.

William Grigg, director of press relations for the FDA, said that "unless the company or the FDA sues to pre-empt" states regulating the product as a drug, the state regulations would hold.

That could result in all 50 states having different rulings on the product, making it impossible for Reynolds to market Premier nationally.

An FDA official who requested anonymity said that, under the Reagan administration, the agency has traditionally "been loathe" to sue for pre-emption. The FDA's ruling on Premier is due by November or December.

Impatient for action from the FDA, a coalition of local Arizona chapters of the American Lung Association, the American Cancer Society and the American Heart Association is readying a formal request to be filed this week with the state Board of Pharmacy.

The request asks that the pharmacy board determine whether Premier is a cigarette or a drug that presents health risks warranting its removal from the market.

Premier is being test-marketed in Phoenix and Tucson, Ariz., and St. Louis. Young & Rubicam is handling advertising.

In New Jersey, where Premier isn't being marketed, a regulatory board has scheduled a Nov. 21 hearing on the product's safety. The Public Health Council, which is taking the action, is an eight-member board of appointees empowered to create regulations under the New Jersey Sanitary Code.

The council could seek to ban the product not just on the grounds it may be a drug but as a health nuisance.

Rumblings also are coming from Missouri, which has the product, and Colorado and Minnesota, which do not. Health com-

Agency execs rap candidates on ad tactics

By CLEVELAND HORTON

SCOTTSDALE, ARIZ.—The presidential race is coming under attack within the agency community, particularly for the negative slant both candidates have adopted in their advertising.

Agency executives attending the American Association of Advertising Agencies western region conference here had little positive to say about political advertising. Comments characterizing the ad campaigns ranged from "cutthroat" to "huckstering."

Conference attendees expressed the increasing concern that the ad industry as a whole may suffer from the negative ad campaigns, which to the public presumably showcase the talent of the best creative minds. "The presidential

Doner ad team takes high road for Dukakis TV

By JANET MEYERS

Hope for rejuvenating Michael Dukakis' presidential campaign appears to rest with a new pool of issue-oriented, more positive TV spots created by a special team of executives from W.B. Doner & Co.

The TV spots represent a dramatic shift in strategy for the Democratic governor from Massachusetts.

Sources say the spots, which may have started airing over the weekend, will replace the much-maligned negative commercials that have been airing. Other sources say the negative spots may continue as well.

Those spots focused on Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle, the Republican vice presidential candidate, and on the political "handlers" of Republican presidential

States show car-rental ad guides

By SCOTT HUME

The final draft of car-rental ad guidelines issued by the National Association of Attorneys General last week focuses on price advertising and collision insurance.

A spokesman for industry leader Hertz Corp. called the guidelines "a positive step in the right direction."

"If [the guidelines] had meant the end of price advertising, we would have opposed them," said Joe Russo, VP at Hertz. "But in fact they'll make it possible to compete on the basis of real prices for the first time. No illusory prices, no low-ball prices. The consumer will be able to price-shop for the first time, and that should make for some very intense competition."

But an American Advertising Federation official warned that the restrictions, if approved by NAAG, could "put advertising in a straitjacket."

"If we have one real difference with NAAG, it's over this question of how much information should go in an ad," said AAF Senior VP Wally Snyder. "They view an ad almost as though it's a final contract that the consumer somehow signs. We view an ad as an offer of a service available."

Rental-car companies have until Oct. 21 to respond to the 44-page draft of advertising and business-practice guidelines assembled by NAAG's Task Force on the Car Rental Industry.

The final draft contains a few surprises. One is its conclusion that "the marketing and sale of CDW [collision damage waivers] have been fraught with deception. For that reason, the task force recommends that each state strongly support legislation that would make the sale of this product illegal."

If the waivers aren't eliminated, NAAG has come up with a list of disclosures that would have to be made both in advertising and during counter or phone reservations.

Consumers, the report admits, "simply would not be able to read and understand such disclosures in print or broadcast advertising."

Another change is the expansion of the definition of advertising to include computer screens.

Initially, the task force hadn't treated computer terminals as a separate advertising medium. But the expanded definition was expected, rental company sources said, because NAAG's airline guidelines included computer reservation system terminal screens.

Under the guidelines, any use of a price in rental-car advertising would have to be accompanied by a detailed disclosure of any restrictions that could affect the given price.

For print ads that quote a price, the 11 disclosures that would have to be present are: expiration date for the price if less than 30 days; geographical limitations on use; advance reservation or payment requirements; airport access fees; refueling requirements; required number of days of use for rate eligibility; cost of additional-driver fee; any blackout dates; non-availability of the offer at all locations, if so; mileage charges; and full disclosure of collision damage waiver costs.

These disclosures must be set in type at least one-third the size of the largest type in the ad, with a minimum of 12-point type.

TV and radio commercials must disclose expiration dates; non-availability of the advertised price at some locations, if so; mileage limitations; and the price or price range for the waivers. The other disclosures required in print ads may be eliminated from TV and radio but must be made on request by rental agents.

The task force admitted that its requirements for TV spot disclosure might make it impossible to use 15-second commercials for price advertising.#

Upjohn to break consumer ads for hair restorer

By PAT SLOAN

Upjohn Co. in January will start advertising the benefits of its Rogaine prescription hair restorer directly to consumers.

A $20 million budget has been set for the consumer "health information" campaign, which won't mention Rogaine by name.

Upjohn President Lawrence Hoff said the company has recognized that Rogaine "will have to be consumer driven to be successful."

The drug is even packaged like a consumer product, in a sleek black can with white lettering and a choice of applicators.

Upjohn also is expected to introduce a non-prescription shampoo as a companion product to Rogaine later in 1989.

The shampoo might carry the Rogaine name in some form, said Viren Mehta, a financial analyst with SG Warburg, who attended an Upjohn briefing for securities analysts.

However, the product won't be part of Upjohn's joint venture program with Procter & Gamble Co., which is studying line extensions and new delivery systems for antibaldness products both in prescription and non-prescription form.

Rogaine's consumer advertising from Klemtner Advertising, New York, will follow 12-page ads that broke this month in medical journals.

The consumer ads will focus on male pattern baldness in a so-called "disease" ad format used by other pharmaceutical companies. Some of those efforts discuss herpes, smoking and other conditions without mentioning specific treatments.

This technique avoids federal regulations requiring data on side effects and other information in pharmaceutical product ads.

The U.S. Food & Drug Administration has approved the first of several 30-second TV spots, said Robert Perino, executive director of Upjohn's Group II. Klemtner also is working on two print ads.

Mr. Hoff put the budget for TV alone at $20 million, but Mr. Perino said it hasn't been finalized and that $20 million could end up being the amount for both print and TV.#

More blasts leveled at network TV

By SCOTT HUME and JON LAFAYETTE

It's open season on network TV.

Both Time and Newsweek last week ran major stories examining the declining power of the Big 3 networks, once the unquestioned star of the media mix.

Alvin Achenbaum, chairman of New York consultancy Canter, Achenbaum, Associates, took his attacks on the road, too, telling the Point-of-Purchase Advertising Institute at its Chicago convention that TV has lost much of its previous luster as a marketing tool (see related story below).

Mr. Achenbaum long has chastised marketers and their ad agencies for blindly relying on TV to carry their selling messages, despite sweeping changes in the media and marketing environment.

He amplified those criticisms last week, saying TV has been "debased by clutter and fragmentation."

He pointed to lower-than-expected ratings for NBC-TV's commercial-laden coverage of the Summer Olympics as a further example.

TV remains an effective tool for creating brand awareness "but that's not enough," Mr. Achenbaum said. "Marketers must deal more aggressively with all parts of the media mix, not just TV."

Mr. Achenbaum's latest assault follows similar criticisms from him and other prominent industry executives at a recent Association of National Advertisers media workshop in New York.

"TV is showing signs of wear," Roger Godbeer, corporate director of media at Colgate-Palmolive Co., said at the ANA meeting. "We buy more [time] to compensate as it loses reach."

"The medium is being tarnished through overcommercialization and the lack of distinctive programming," said Jules Fine, vice chairman-worldwide director, marketing services, at Ogilvy & Mather. "Even prestigious events, like the Seoul Olympics, are not drawing up to expectations."

Mr. Fine said TV's "halo is slightly askew. The deference, the almost blind allegiance paid to this medium, is being shaken."

Still, he said, "It would be foolhardy and totally unrealistic to suggest that television, in one form or another, won't continue to be the medium of choice. The inherent power of TV for the creative product cannot be ignored."

Mr. Fine also responded to some of the criticism by Mr. Achenbaum, who's claimed that agencies don't come up with more imaginative media plans because they make more money by sticking to network TV.

"Decisions are not made based on cost," the agency executive said, noting that O&M has staffed its media department with specialists in alternative media, including cable and interactive media, and is considering specialists in video and in-store.

"That's not the simplest way to do business," he said.

Mr. Achenbaum last week said the breakdown of TV's effectiveness is one reason consumer marketing finds itself in "a state of crisis" to which "advertising agencies have not helped in identifying or providing a solution."

Ad agencies, he charged, have become "greedy dinosaurs, more concerned with mergers and acquisitions than with providing service."

Colgate's Mr. Godbeer said his company is "actively exploring all media opportunities."

But to do that, he said, clients must think of ways to motivate their agencies, because if a product has a TV-based campaign, "working in other media adds to the workload with no incremental revenue to the agency."#

POP posts big gains in early '88

By SCOTT HUME

CHICAGO—Claiming we're witnessing "the end of a golden era for broadcasting," the president of the Point-of-Purchase Advertising Institute said he expects record growth for non-media advertising.

POP sales during 1988's first quarter hit a record $3.1 billion, 9% above last year's first three months, said POPAI President John Kawula. For the year, he projects total POP sales will be up nearly 14% to $13.4 billion.

Mr. Kawula claimed the marketplace has shifted from being "image-driven to impact-driven," a change he said favors non-media advertising such as in-store merchandising and promotional marketing.

"Image advertising [on TV] can make things happen," he said, "but only when that POP is there to close the sale.

"Consumers are increasingly dissatisfied with [TV] programming and are changing channels to avoid commercials or unwanted shows, playing VCRs or watching cable. The result is that the marketers are reaching the consumers in the store where 66% of all buying decisions are made."

Through the first quarter, product areas showing the greatest increases in POP use included roofing products, lighting and fixtures, housewares and distilled spirits.#

CORRECTIONS & CLARIFICATIONS

- In the "August consumer magazine ad linage" report (AA, Sept. 19, P. 64), Personal Computing's year-to-date figures should have been 1,535 for 1988 and 1,201 for '87. Also, Mademoiselle misreported its current-month 1988 ad page total, which should have been 191.1.
- DDB Needham Worldwide handles Ford Motor Co.'s New Zealand account. Mainstream/FCB has only the dealer network account (AA, Sept. 12, P. 82).
- Walker & Associates, Memphis, Tenn., handles advertising for National Bank of Commerce's Mississippi branches; Ward Archer & Associates, Memphis, handles advertising for the bank's Memphis branches. Archer also handles Boyle Investment Co. (AA, Sept. 12, P. 86).#

VIEWING
IS UP 90%

The Family Channel's fall launch is off to a great start. Our prime time household delivery is up 90%[1] over the same period last year. And our 18-hour average is up 32%.[2]

We've got other great news as well. Our new original Rin Tin Tin K-9 Cop scored a 4.3 rating cume[3] in its third weekend airing—that's almost 1,900,000 homes. And Bonanza: The Lost Episodes placed first among the major basic cable-oriented networks in its time period.[4]

So when you want families to pay attention to you, call The Family Channel. And tuck your message into our unique environment of premiere originals, cable exclusives, movies, and more.

Tobacco tug of war

RJR, Philip Morris try divergent tactics

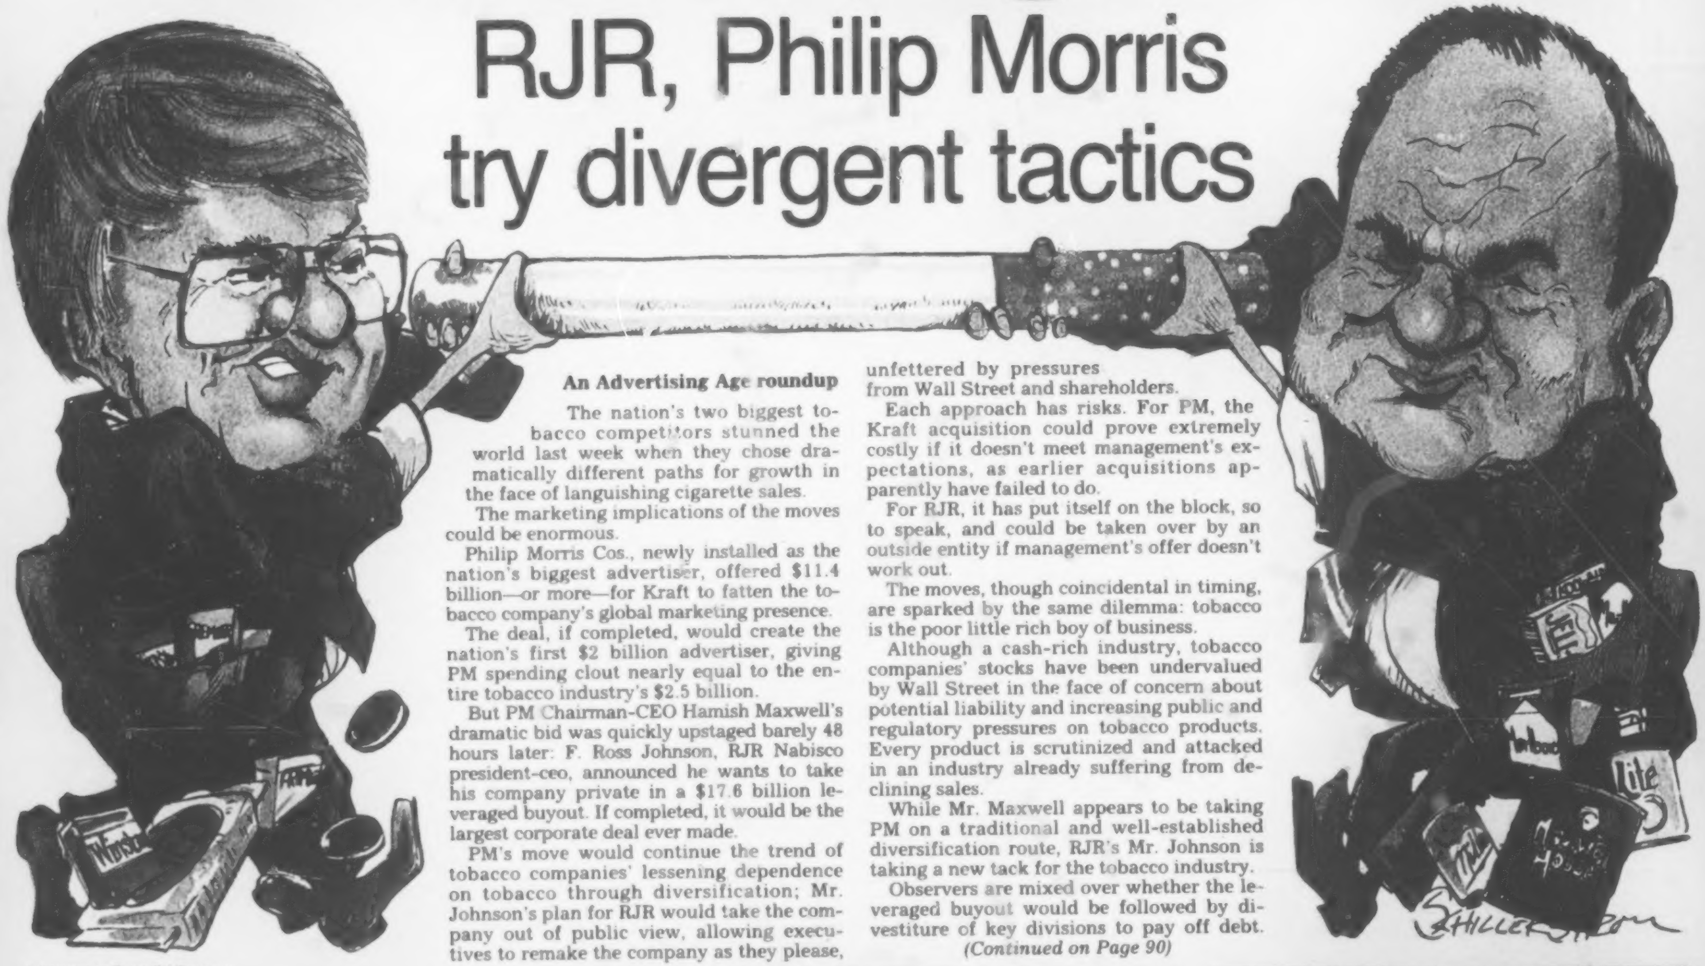

Illustration by Roger Schillerstrom

An Advertising Age roundup

The nation's two biggest tobacco competitors stunned the world last week when they chose dramatically different paths for growth in the face of languishing cigarette sales.

The marketing implications of the moves could be enormous.

Philip Morris Cos., newly installed as the nation's biggest advertiser, offered $11.4 billion—or more—for Kraft to fatten the tobacco company's global marketing presence.

The deal, if completed, would create the nation's first $2 billion advertiser, giving PM spending clout nearly equal to the entire tobacco industry's $2.5 billion.

But PM Chairman-CEO Hamish Maxwell's dramatic bid was quickly upstaged barely 48 hours later: F. Ross Johnson, RJR Nabisco president-ceo, announced he wants to take his company private in a $17.6 billion leveraged buyout. If completed, it would be the largest corporate deal ever made.

PM's move would continue the trend of tobacco companies' lessening dependence on tobacco through diversification; Mr. Johnson's plan for RJR would take the company out of public view, allowing executives to remake the company as they please, unfettered by pressures from Wall Street and shareholders.

Each approach has risks. For PM, the Kraft acquisition could prove extremely costly if it doesn't meet management's expectations, as earlier acquisitions apparently have failed to do.

For RJR, it has put itself on the block, so to speak, and could be taken over by an outside entity if management's offer doesn't work out.

The moves, though coincidental in timing, are sparked by the same dilemma: tobacco is the poor little rich boy of business.

Although a cash-rich industry, tobacco companies' stocks have been undervalued by Wall Street in the face of concern about potential liability and increasing public and regulatory pressures on tobacco products. Every product is scrutinized and attacked in an industry already suffering from declining sales.

While Mr. Maxwell appears to be taking PM on a traditional and well-established diversification route, RJR's Mr. Johnson is taking a new tack for the tobacco industry.

Observers are mixed over whether the leveraged buyout would be followed by divestiture of key divisions to pay off debt.

Gallo loses Crawford

MODESTO, CALIF.—John Crawford Creative, San Francisco, last week quit E&J Gallo Winery's Bartles & Jaymes wine cooler business. The creative boutique had been creating B&J spots for Gallo since early this year. Sources say Gallo is in contact with other creative resources, including Los Angeles production house Bert, Barz & Kirby, about continuing the Frank & Ed saga. Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco, resigned the $75 million overall Gallo account in December (AA, Dec. 7).

EPB to buy troubled Va. shop

RICHMOND, VA.—Earle Palmer Brown Cos., Bethesda, Md., this week is expected to buy part of what's left of financially strapped Ford & Westbrook here and F&W's subsidiary, Martin Remick Moore. EPB plans to merge the purchase into its Richmond office and hire Bill Westbrook, Ford & Westbrook's former partner and creative chief, sources said. The sources added that such a move

Audi, GMC Truck drop network TV from media plans

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

Audi of America and GMC Truck are dropping network TV from their 1989 model year media plans because of high costs and questions about the effectiveness of the buys.

Both marketers are shifting out of TV in favor of print and several other media to develop consistency in reaching target groups.

Combined, the two spent $22 million on network TV and another $10 million on spot TV in 1987, according to Leading National Advertisers.

The shift is intended to "maximize efficiency and effectiveness," said Mike Wilberding, senior VP-account representative on GMC Truck at McCann-Erickson, Troy, Mich.

Anthony Kirton, director of marketing for Audi, a unit of Volkswagen of America, said, "We really can't afford the cost [of network TV] on an ongoing basis. To run a six-week flight, we'd spend 30% of our budget."

But he added, "For any major new-product launch in the future, we'll still use TV." DDB Needham Worldwide's Troy and Chicago offices handle Audi.

Factors other than just budget entered into consideration, Mr. Kirton said.

"One of the complications of TV

ANA hits NAAG

Responds to car-rental ad rules

By JENNIFFER LAWRENCE and SCOTT HUME

The Association of National Advertisers blasted proposed car-rental ad guidelines last week, saying they might cripple broadcast advertising and violate the U.S. Constitution.

The ANA, which opened its annual meeting in New York last weekend, urged the National Association of Attorneys General task force on car-rental advertising and practices to "reconsider the guidelines in light of constitutional requirements" that courts have found protect advertising from overregulation.

The recommendation was made in a seven-page letter from ANA Senior VP Dan Jaffe to Art Weiss, Kansas deputy attorney general.

The American Advertising Federation and the American Association of Advertising Agencies also filed comments with the task force late last week. Both groups are concerned about lengthy disclosure requirements in price ads.

But it's unlikely NAAG will back off its regulatory warpath after successfully implementing airline ad guidelines (AA, Sept. 7, 1987, et seq.) and moving on to other areas like health/nutrition food claims and automobile advertising (AA, Oct. 3).

"I think this is a phony issue," California Senior Assistant Attorney General Herschel Elkins said of the ANA's belief that the states are acting beyond their authority. "These are not statutes. We won't throw out the whole guidelines, but we will listen to specific recommendations. . . . We don't intend to have a guideline on every subject known to man."

The NAAG task force circulated

Tracy-Locke stumbles in Los Angeles

By CLEVELAND HORTON

LOS ANGELES—Abandoned by Princess Cruises' estimated $20 million account, Tracy-Locke last week laid off eight employees just as it's trying to build its presence here.

The loss of the cruise ship account in mid-October (AA, Oct. 17) "forced us to assess the needs and the service requirements for Taco Bell," the agency's only other significant account, said Tom Morris, exec VP-director of client services.

T. Morris

With the $60 million-plus Taco Bell business, the office remains financially stable, Mr. Morris said. Unlike the demise of Tracy-Locke's Denver office, the shop here will "live to see another day," he said.

Earlier this year in Denver, Tracy-Locke lost Mountain Bell when U.S. West consolidated the accounts of its regional telephone companies. Once a full-service shop, the Denver operation is now simply a service office.

Similar to the Denver situation, Tracy-Locke here has suffered from a new-business drought and several shifts in its management suite.

With the exception of Princess Cruises, Tracy-Locke's West Coast office hasn't won any new business since it opened three years ago at Taco Bell's request. During the same period, the agency has restructured its management three times. It now has 102 employees.

Most recently, Chairman-Chief Creative Officer Phil Slott moved here from Dallas to inject new creative life into the agency. According to sources, Mr. Slott brought with him the creative portion of Frito-Lay's Doritos account.

The office is interviewing public relations agencies to help the agency create a better image for itself in California.

Tracy-Locke is pitching several new accounts, including Toshiba America's $6 million copier business.

Although the office doesn't need new business to survive, Mr. Morris acknowledged the importance of winning accounts. "New business helps in building strength, in building a presence," he said.#

Olympics ads score: Lintas

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—Despite disappointing ratings for NBC-TV's broadcast of the 1988 Summer Olympics, several advertisers emerged as big winners in ad recall, according to a new study by Lintas:USA.

Although the survey showed viewers complained a lot about ad clutter, their opinions of most advertised products weren't affected adversely or positively. That finding led Lintas executives to conclude the Olympics still are an effective ad vehicle.

> "I can say that the Olympics are still a damned good event. Clients are not wasting their money by getting involved."

Spots for McDonald's Corp. were found to have the highest unaided recall among viewers in the survey. Of those questioned, 23% recalled the McDonald's commercials without prompting. Anheuser-Busch placed second (17% recalled), and General Motors Corp. and Coca-Cola Co. third (7%).

Other advertisers mentioned included Miller Brewing Co. (6%), GM's Chevrolet (4%), Eastman Kodak Co. (3%), K mart Corp. (3%) and Reebok International (3%).

Viewers only recalled three other advertisers: IBM Corp., Visa International and American Express Co. However, only 2% or less of those surveyed remembered their ads.

The Lintas executives said GM's recall was lower because there were several GM divisions as advertisers, as opposed to a single dominant advertiser. With a $40 million-plus Olympics budget, GM was the biggest NBC advertiser.

The survey showed that 69% of the viewers said they were "satisfied or somewhat satisfied" with the telecasts, but 67% said there were too many commercials during the 179½-hour broadcast.

The viewers who said they were dissatisfied cited "too many ads," not enough coverage of events they liked and overexposure of Bryant Gumbel, the telecast's anchor.

Complaints of excessive advertising weren't without merit; Lintas executives said NBC ran about 10.2 minutes of commercials per hour. ABC-TV's 1984 Summer Olympics telecast had 8.4 minutes per hour; the average prime-time commercial load is 7 minutes.

Lintas, through Survey Sampling, a Fairfield, Conn.-based market researcher, commissioned the survey to determine how viewers watched the telecasts and whether the weaker-than-expected ratings on the telecasts were symptomatic of a bigger problem, said Lintas Exec VP Lou Schultz. NBC got an average

Eveready hops on Duracell's idea

Eveready Battery Co.'s Energizer unleashes a room full of drum-banging pink bunnies (above) to take a jab at Duracell. Undaunted, Duracell is reviving its own rabbit to participate in a new promotion.

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Eveready Battery Co. tweaks rival Duracell's advertising in the new Energizer TV campaign it unveiled last week.

In place of former loudmouth spokesman Jacko, the new effort parodies Duracell's windup-toy commercials.

Eveready's new campaign ends Jacko's tenure as Energizer spokesman, though sources say the Australian media star probably will be featured in short-term promotions.

The new Energizer spot stars a mechanical pink bunny similar to one Duracell used in TV commercials several years ago and is reviving for a fall promotion.

The Energizer spot, which broke on NBC-TV's World Series telecast, uses a room full of mechanical pink bunnies to mimic Duracell.

"For years, one of our competitors has been telling you they have the longest-lasting battery," the voice-over says. "But they haven't invited us to the party."

As one by one the bunnies stop drumming, a larger pink bunny—carrying a drum with an Energizer logo—struts past.

The new Energizer tagline is "A word to the wise: energize." DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, handles the $30 million campaign.

Duracell, which is recycling its bunny as part of a major fall promotion, criticized the Energizer campaign.

Eveready's "use of our pink bunny shows just how effective Duracell's advertising has been," said Jim Donahue, Duracell's director-communications. "Eveready also is showing that they are questioning the marketing decisions made over the past two years."

In the new promotion, Duracell will give away more than $1 million in prizes to consumers collecting game cards from Duracell battery packages. Each "Power Picture" game card features one of the toys used in the Duracell campaign.

Print ads will support, starting in early December. Ogilvy & Mather, New York, handles Duracell's $30 million account.

Rayovac Corp., meanwhile, marches to the beat of a different drummer in its own new $12 million campaign, breaking tonight.

The new campaign, themed "Batteries that turn people on," dramatizes situations described in consumer letters to the company. One features a raving husband playing with a remote-control toy car; his wife complains to Rayovac that the batteries should have died a long time ago.

The other spot shows a couple dusting off a battery-operated back-scratcher, whose batteries still work after 18 years. Visitors are treated to back-scratching—even the pizza delivery man.

"A lot of Rayovac's competitors are parts of conglomerates and have changed ownership over the past few years. We wanted to portray Rayovac with the words and endorsements of real consumers," said Cynthia Perry, senior VP-management director at FCB/Leber Katz Partners.

A husband, obsessed with a remote-control car, drives his wife to complain to Rayovac that the batteries should be dead by now.

Additional TV executions—some featuring Rayovac's flashlight line—newspaper ads and holiday magazine ads are also planned.

In the past year, both Rayovac, with a 14% estimated share of the $2.5 billion U.S. battery market, and Duracell, with 28%, have gained on Eveready, whose share now stands at 37%, according to figures compiled by A.C. Nielsen Co. and other measurement services (AA, July 11). Eveready had a 50% share when Ralston Purina Co. bought it in 1986.#

- A chart listing SAMI/Burke statistics on sales of dried fruit snacks (AA, Oct. 3, P. S-6) used inaccurate numbers. The following are the correct numbers: Sales of fruit rolls and bars: 1983—$113.2 million; 1984—150.4; 1985—211.7; 1986—272.7; 1987—312.0. All other dried fruit: 1983—$414.4 million; 1984—391.6; 1985—383.8; 1986—411.0; 1987—433.2.#

If you're looking for food sales, there's a market in Michigan that'll make your mouth water.

If you're hungry for an appetizing market, here's a place you can sink your teeth into–Booth, Michigan. By consuming over $2.5 billion worth of groceries per year, we make up America's 18th largest food market. Detroit papers only reach 11% of the Booth market. A market whose food sales have grown nearly 5 times faster than Detroit's in the last five years. And we've got impressive numbers in other markets, too. We're America's 15th largest retail market. And number nine in general merchandise sales. If you and your clients are looking for numbers that are easy to swallow, phone Booth Newspapers at (313) 540-5600. You get 8 newspapers at a 15% discount with just one call. One order. One bill. Represented nationally by Newhouse Newspapers.

Ad-to-sales ratio study uncovers big hikes

EVANSTON, ILL.—Candy, costume jewelry, motion pictures, and perfume and cosmetics are among the major U.S. industries that boosted their average ad spending growth rate by 25% or more this year, according to a new study by Schonfeld & Associates.

Using data from more than 5,700 companies, Schonfeld has compiled estimates of 1988 advertising-to-sales ratios for more than 390 U.S. industry sectors (see chart).

In 1988, the candy industry is expected to raise its ad spending growth rate by 28.7%, costume jewelry will boost its rate 26.7%, movies by 30.4%, and perfume and cosmetics by 32.3%.

Among the major categories expected to show significant downturns in the growth rate are food stores (down 47.4%), leather products (down 12.6%) and shoe stores (down 10.9%).

Schonfeld also has a more complete "Advertising Ratios & Budgets" report that contains ad-to-sales ratios and ad-to-gross margin ratios for individual companies, and high and low ranges for ratios by company. In addition, it contains forecasts of 1989 ad spending by company, grouped by industry sector.

Estimates for the categories of advertising and ad agencies showed that aggregate company ad expenditures will be up more than 25% this year.

The data are compiled from a variety of sources, including the 10-K reports of publicly held companies. Estimates and forecasts are based on trends developed through historical data.

To make the forecasts, Schonfeld applied three techniques to historical data for each company. These methods include projecting a time trend, estimating using a multivariate industry model and extrapolating using a constant ratio model. The final forecast is a weighted composite of the forecasts from each method.

Based on these data, the table here shows industries listed by four-digit standard industrial classification code, advertising expenditures as a percent of sales and as a percent of gross margin (net sales minus cost of goods sold), and the expenditure growth percentage for 1988 compared to 1977.

Eugene P. Schonfeld, author of "Advertising Ratios & Budgets," notes that cautious interpretation is advised in using the data, since:

1. Expenditures included as advertising in 10-K reports may vary from company to company.

2. Events such as mergers, acquisitions and divestitures may distort spending patterns.

3. Private ownership of very large companies in specific industries may mean that some advertisers are omitted.

4. Multi-industry companies are reported only in their primary industry (based on sales of their dominant line of business). This may overstate expenditures in the primary industry and understate expenditures in the subsidiary industries.

Copies of the complete 205-page study are available from Schonfeld & Associates, 2530 Crawford Ave., Evanston, Ill. 60201. Phone: (312) 869-5556. Price is $295, or $275 prepaid. Data are also available on diskettes. #

As 'People' goes, so . . .

Magazine sales keep pace with America's interests

By Patrick Reilly

As go the masses, so goes People. The publication is so keyed to popular tastes that its covers often are seen as dependable barometers of America's interests, passions and concerns.

For years People's cover subjects were dictated by a golden rule developed by Richard Stolley, Time Inc.'s director-special projects and People's founding managing editor. Stolley's Law read: Young is better than old, pretty is better than ugly, music is better than movies, movies are better than television, television is better than sports and anything is better than politics.

When the Dec. 22, 1980, cover on John Lennon's death broke People's newsstand sales records, Stolley's Law was amended: The celebrity dead, particularly still warm, sell best of all.

Under James Gaines, managing editor since 1987, the weekly has taken a noticeable turn toward covers more related to news events or issues of the day.

"The Stolley list of what makes a great cover really doesn't work anymore," says Mr. Gaines. "I would say birth, marriage, divorce, the elemental moments of human life, are what is selling People at the moment."

Mr. Gaines points to two recent covers, one of actress Cybill Shepherd, holding her two babies, and one of parents with quintuplets. Both sold equally well on newsstands. "We have found celebrities per se don't sell the magazine as they used to. There was a time People could put any hot celebrity on the cover and still make rate base," he says. "Now babies and families sell issues."

OUR AMERICAN HOSTAGES
CAUGHT IN THE CROSSFIRE
The Iranian air tragedy threatened to make them pawns in a deadly game of retribution. Here's how their families endure.

This year's hottest at People: "Burt and Loni's Wedding"; coldest, American hostages in Lebanon.

However, Mr. Gaines violated Stolley's Law this year and got burned. By putting the American hostages in Lebanon on the cover of the July 18 issue—remember, anything is better than politics—Mr. Gaines produced People's lowest-selling newsstand issue in its 14-year history. The "Hostage" cover sold only slightly more than 1 million on newsstands, at a time when People's average weekly sales topped 1.7 million.

The best seller of 1988 combined both Messrs. Stolley's and Gaines' rules: Two attractive, semi-young TV and movie celebrities getting married. The May 16 issue featuring "Burt and Loni's Wedding," as in Reynolds and Anderson, sold a whopping 2.4 million on newsstands.Mr. Gaines has formulated his own cover law: "There should never be any rules or notions about what should be on a cover. I stay away from concepts on what works on a cover."

So what about Burt and Loni? "I knew Burt and Loni would do well," he says. "Anytime you have two celebrities as big as they are getting married, you are sitting pretty."

End of lesson.

SPEAKING WITH AUTHORITY

Agency media buyers

How much emphasis should be put on newsstand sales when making a media buying decision?

John Meskil, exec VP, Warwick Advertising, New York

"It's difficult to determine whether newsstand sales are better than subscription sales. Personally, I like to see as many newsstand sales as possible because they show the desirability of the magazine.

"It's challenging because there are fewer newsstands and there is a lot of competition at the grocery checkout, which makes it particularly tough for magazines that don't tailor themselves to be newsstand sellers.

"Although I like to see as much single-copy sales as possible, generally and increasingly, magazines have to rely on subscriptions to fulfill their rate base so it's not a fundamental consideration when we make a buying decision."

Paul Zuckerman, senior VP, director-media planning and operations, DDB Needham, New York

"I've always felt that newsstand sales are very important because they're indicative of reader involvement with the magazine. That doesn't mean that certain forms of subscriptions don't show the same thing, and that a former newsstand buyer who becomes a subscriber is no longer interesting to us.

"But when circulation is used to show reader involvement with a magazine, it's the newsstand sales that show that, not the reader profile. A study can show how tall you are and how much money you make, but it can't tell if you're involved with the magazine."

David Buckley, VP, media director, The Shalek Agency, Los Angeles

"The importance of newsstand sales varies from client to client and, obviously, from magazine to magazine. Specialty magazines like Surfer and Surfing are heavy newsstand sellers; they're oriented to that type of product and that type of reader.

"Strategically, we'd gauge what kind of magazine it is and have to judge it specifically based on why it's being used. There's a different level of importance put on newsstand sales in each buy.

"Too often, buyers simply set up a formula, set up all their criteria, and then aren't flexible. You need to adapt, and any smart planner will want to 'deformulalize' the process and make it as human and unique as possible."

Michael Drexler, exec VP, director-national media, Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, New York

"Newsstand sales don't really play a very significant role in the overall analysis when deciding whether to buy a certain magazine. Although they give an indication that there's a general vitality at the magazine, newsstand sales are such a small part of most magazines' circulation that it really can't carry much weight.

"Obviously, you look at it, but you must look at it in terms of what it does for the magazine as a whole.

"Newsstand sales are a highly profitable method of distribution, and although that has to be balanced against the fact that it's more volatile, the profits it generates may miti-

Crowding crisis on German shelves

There are now 55 titles competing for women's eyes

By Dagmar Mussey

When Conde Nast of Munich started Vogue in 1979, German publishing houses were skeptical about its success. There was a suspicion that many Germans would not find the high fashion editorial appealing.

Two years later, the magazine was in the black; ad pages soared, and now have reached about 2,000 annually. Vogue grew gradually at first, in part because the international high fashion advertisers hadn't developed high profiles in Germany. Current circulation of the monthly is about 92,000.

It's little wonder German publishing houses today are looking at the upscale women's magazine segment, which provides exclusive target groups for advertisers. The established women's books, including Gruner & Jahr's Brigitte, Burda Verlag's Freundin ("Girl Friend") and Jahreszeiten-Verlag's Petra, long have passed their zenith, and the low-priced section is crowded. In 1975, Germany had only 23 women's titles; now there are 55 for the 23.8 million women over the age of 14.

After talking with various publishing rivals, Paris-based Hachette Group joined with Burda in a 50% joint venture last year to produce German Elle, which hit the newsstands Sept. 22, with 368 pages—164 of them ads—and a $3.33 cover price, far below Vogue's $6.11.

But Elle was not the only newcomer; a week earlier Gruner & Jahr introduced Viva with a 308-page folio, 149 pages of ads and a $3.05 cover price. Both are monthlies.

Elle printed 360,000 copies of its first issue, and Viva had a press run of about 300,000. Elle targets prosperous women between 25 and 35, who are interested in art, travel and fashion, and Viva has a similar target audience.

At this point nobody will venture which of these two will fare the better or even forecast whether the established premium-priced books such as Vogue, Madame and Harper's Bazaar will be pressured.

Dagmar Mussey is an ADVERTISING AGE correspondent based in Duesseldorf, Germany.

The German version of Elle is aimed at women aged 25 and 35 with interest in art, travel and fashion. Press run for its first issue was 360,000.

gate a rate increase, or may be poured back into the magazine to improve the editiorial product.

"Newsstand sales can also act as a mechanism for subscription conversions.

"All those are important considerations, but in the overall scheme of things, the consideration of newsstand sales on their own is a small part of the total picture."

Leo Scullin, senior VP, director-new electronic & print media, Young & Rubicam, New York

"We're not of the mindset that newsstand sales are more important than subscriptions. The weight we put on it is the weight each magazine puts on it. We don't go into any planning situation with a leaning toward one or the other.

"Our contention is that each individual publisher and company has figured out the best way to make a profit and the best distribution mix for the magazine.

"The decision, therefore, is theirs, and we look at each individual case on its own merits.

"Most senior media and client people are now aware of the intricacies of circulation, and there's growing sophistication so the decision is never cut-and-dry in putting full weight on one type of circulation over the other."

IBM taps Lintas to buy media

ARMONK, N.Y.—IBM gave its media assignments for both TV and print to Lintas:New York (AA, Sept. 12), sources said. Most of IBM's buying had been handled at Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, New York. IBM spent $97.5 million on measured media last year, according to Leading National Advertisers. The company moved its advertising account to Lintas and Wells, Rich, Greene, New York, from Lord Geller in September.

Daihatsu to try another agency

LOS ALAMITOS, CALIF.—Daihatsu America this week will pick its third agency in less than two years, one week after splitting with Admarketing, Los Angeles. Admarketing had the $8 million account for only six months. Kresser-Craig/D.I.K., Los Angeles, is among the agencies that kept in contact with Daihatsu after the initial review two years ago.

Gillette: $80M to rebuild image

Ends 2-year stall from takeover wars

By ALISON FAHEY and PAT SLOAN

Gillette Co., in a massive effort to rebuild its image following a series of takeover attempts, will increase advertising for shaving systems by 45%, emphasize global and regional marketing, and launch new products in 1989.

Gillette will ring in the new year with its first global effort, built around an $80 million multimedia campaign for its Atra Plus blade-and-razor system. TV will break Dec. 31 in the U.S.

Several executions of the new "Best a man can get" pan-Atlantic campaign will run throughout 1989 in the U.S., Canada and Europe, where Atra Plus is called Contour Plus.

Atra Plus will be Gillette's only advertised shaving system next year.

Gillette, trying to recapture momentum lost during more than two years of battling hostile takeover attempts by Revlon Group, Coniston Partners and others, will boost its pan-Atlantic ad budget for all shaving systems to more than $100 million by 1990, said John Symons, president of the Gillette North Atlantic Blade & Razor Group.

During the past few years, the $3.2 billion company diverted its financial and human resources from product marketing while fending off takeover attempts. In 1986, Gillette bought back shares acquired by Revlon Chairman Ronald Perelman, and last August, it agreed to pay $720 million to buy back shares from Coniston.

Although Gillette still may be a takeover candidate, financial analysts agreed the attempts have subsided enough to allow the company to start rebuilding its image.

The company plans to shift dollars away from disposables in its new plan for shaving systems. "Disposable [shavers] threaten traditional Gillette business," Mr. Symons said, noting that those disposable-shaver users are more

ANA tries to shake things up

By JUDANN DAGNOLI and PATRICIA WINTERS

NEW YORK—Advertisers are mad as hell, and they're not going to take it anymore.

That was the posture at the 79th annual meeting of the Association of National Advertisers last week. Facing not just corporate takeovers and consolidations, but stagnant markets, price competition and the rising power of retailers, advertisers said it's time to fight back.

Top executives called on the estimated 300 attendees—down from 500 last year—to return to image advertising, take a new look at globalization, increase support in the battle against undue government interference in advertising and, most of all, reduce price promotion, couponing and other short-term marketing methods.

Whether marketers will go back to their companies and heed the call is in doubt.

An informal survey of members by ADVERTISING AGE found that five out of 16 marketers predict flat budgets for 1989 or minor budget increases that may just keep pace with inflation. The majority predict ad spending increases, but some boosts might not exceed inflation by much.

Campbell Soup Co., Gillette Co., Adolph Coors Co., Nestle Foods Corp., Kraft, Carnation Co., Ashland Oil, Brown-Forman Corp.'s Korbel division, Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., Archway Cookies and Kayser-Roth Hosiery all predicted ad spending increases ahead of 1988.

Coming in flat were General Foods Corp., Thomas J. Lipton Inc., Stroh Brewery Co. (for outdoor and radio spot buying), AT&T Co. and GTE Corp.

"The reality is everyone is wrestling with budgets," said Kim Armstrong, AT&T director of advertising and promotions, noting that AT&T will try to "hold the line" on ad spending next year.

ANA members worry about the impact of takeovers—P. 60
New chairman speaks his mind on P. 62, with photos on P. 46

"Every company I know of is looking at every expense line on the budget without abandoning position in the marketplace," Ms. Armstrong said. "Advertising isn't alone. It's part of what's going on."

Food products apparently won't get the hefty budget hikes next year that they've received in the past, several executives said.

"The food business is flat, particularly in dry grocery and frozen," said Herb Baum, president of Campbell USA, and that's forcing companies to build volume through promotion "rather than taking the time to do long-term brand building."

Campbell's ad budget will increase 5% to meet inflation, but its promotional budget, including co-op ads, will rise 20%, Mr. Baum said.

Last year, Campbell trimmed 115 new products, including line extensions, and this year will eliminate another 100.

In new products, the company has been testing Souper Combos, a frozen soup and sandwich line, for almost a year.

"Two years ago, we would have rolled it out nationally," Mr. Baum said, "but now we're taking a very slow, disciplined approach."

Slow growth in the food industry, said Edmund Ladendorff Jr., VP-marketing support at Lipton,

WRG exits Pan Am review

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE and JON LAFAYETTE

Pan American World Airways will add one or more agencies to its $65 million account review because incumbent Wells, Rich, Greene dropped out of the running late last week.

The nation's eighth-largest carrier said it would contact other agencies this week.

The New York shop resigned the account less than a week after learning the financially troubled carrier would conduct a review. The resignation takes effect Jan. 25.

Pan Am plans to separate shuttle advertising from its main domestic and international business.

The battle for the main $55 million account so far includes Della Femina, McNamee WCRS; Ogilvy & Mather; and J. Walter Thompson USA, all New York.

The Bloom Agency and Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein will vie for the $10 million shuttle account. Scali, McCabe, Sloves was asked to pitch the business but declined.

Agency presentations are scheduled for early December; a decision is expected by mid-to-late December.

The review, prompted by Thomas Plaskett, who was named chairman-ceo of Pan Am in January, hit Wells, Rich, Greene at a bad time. The agency can't afford the extra strain of a review as it gears up to handle the IBM Corp. account it won in September.

"We see no benefit to either Pan Am or Wells, Rich, Greene in the review," said Kenneth Olshan, Wells, Rich, Greene/Worldwide chairman. ". . . Ironically, Pan Am's decision comes at a time when they are announcing record revenue due to strong passenger traffic."

The agency that wins the main account will face the challenge of repositioning Pan Am as both a quality and viable airline.

Despite some market share gains since 1986, Pan Am has been fraught with financial and image problems.

Mr. Plaskett last week told financial analysts that when he arrived at Pan Am, the company didn't have a marketing plan.

"As a result," he said, "its entire marketing and selling effort was fragmented and unfocused—literally out of control."

Mr. Plaskett is regarded as a marketing whiz. While the top marketing executive at American Airlines, he developed the country's first frequent flier program and instituted Maxsavers deep discount fares.

He moved to Continental Airlines, serving as president for a brief eight months before he was fired.

Pan Am, a unit of Pan Am Corp., is looking for ideas on how to deliver a message of an improved product, said Jeff Kriendler, VP-corporate communications.

Despite its smaller size, the shuttle account will be important; Pan Am is preparing to compete with real estate mogul Donald Trump, who's agreed to purchase Eastern Air Lines' Air Shuttle.

Mr. Trump has said he intends to upgrade the shuttle as a quality carrier between Boston, New York and Washington—which is also Pan Am's shuttle's main turf. #

Atari awards $25M account to unit of DDB

By CLEVELAND HORTON

Atari Corp.'s Federated chain of consumer electronics stores last week moved its $24.5 million account to DDB Needham Retail from in-house.

DDB Needham Worldwide's retail division became an Atari agency earlier this year when it picked up the videogame division's $6 million account.

Atari Chairman Jack Tramiel subsequently decided to consolidate all Atari advertising, including the $2 million computer account formerly handled by Richard & Edward's, New York.

The Federated chain has 60 outlets in California, Arizona and Texas. Atari purchased Federated a year ago but has yet to realize a profit from that investment. For the quarter ended July 7, Federated posted a $5.7 million loss on sales of $63.1 million.

While the chain's corporate offices are located in City of Commerce, Calif., Atari controls all marketing decisions from its Sunnyvale headquarters.

DDB Needham Retail now reports billings of $94 million, half of which represents business won since DDB Needham created the division with the December 1987 acquisition of Girvin, Conrad & Girvin.

Dick Girvin, president-ceo of the division, said he expects continued growth through additional new business as well as acquisition of other agencies. The division currently has offices in Sacramento, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver, and expects to acquire agencies in other cities within the next year.

The Federated win creates a conflict for the agency with The Good Guys, a smaller electronics retailer operating in northern California with annual broadcast billings of about $2.5 million. DDB Needham Retail will continue to handle the account through the end of this year. #

Mojo stock fuels WPP buyout talk

By LAUREL WENTZ and GEOFFREY LEE MARTIN

Mojo MDA's low share price once again has sparked speculation that the Australian-based agency will be taken over by WPP Group.

Industry sources say London-based WPP is negotiating to buy Mojo MDA to strengthen WPP's position in Australia and the Far East.

Mojo MDA is the largest publicly quoted agency in Australia and the No. 3 agency in gross income. It has 35 offices in Australia, Asia, the U.K. and U.S.

WPP wouldn't comment on takeover rumors. Gawen Rudder, Mojo MDA corporate affairs manager, denied WPP—or anyone else—is about to take control of the company.

"It's fair to say that we get an approach, or an offer, just about once a week," Mr. Rudder said. "But that's nothing new—it was the same when [the agency was] just a small creative shop."

Neil Blackley, an analyst at U.K. stockbroker James Capel, said a takeover is "likely from WPP's point of view, because they're very keen to improve their Far East exposure. I wouldn't discount it, depending on price."

Mr. Blackley said Mojo's stock "was looking very cheap." The stock has been selling in the $1.50 Australian-to-$1.60 Australian range since July. Before last year's stock market plunge, Mojo stock was selling for $3 Australian a share.

Sources close to WPP said the rumors are false and could have been started to boost Mojo MDA's low stock price.

About two months ago, Mojo MDA Group Managing Director Malcolm Spry and other executives met with U.S. institutional investors to increase interest in the company on an investment-only basis.

Campaign flak flies

Pols' ads have negative charge

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—With political advertising dominating the presidential campaign, the Nov. 8 election looks like it could be a showdown between George Bush's tank ads and Mike Dukakis' anti-tank ads.

Whether the forum is The New York Times or NBC-TV's "Today" show, campaign ads have been examined, dissected, reviewed and reviled more than ever before.

Advertising has become so critical to the candidates' election hopes that both sides have unleashed "truth squads"—teams of designated politicians—to rebut the opponent's ads.

Not surprisingly, Bush media adviser Roger Ailes has a curt explanation for the prominence accorded this election year's advertising.

"The news media hate substance and love pictures and mistakes," Mr. Ailes said. "News is who has the hottest attack ads and who can get the highest ratings. What would a journalist rather cover—new TV ads or the latest proposal to change the capital gains tax?"

But even Mr. Ailes conceded that TV's pervasiveness and persuasiveness are factored into the creation of a candidate's media plan.

"We sit around to decide how to do an ad for the network news" that will generate coverage, he said. "We know that if it's clever or funny, it will double our gross rating points because [NBC anchorman Tom] Brokaw or [ABC anchorman Peter] Jennings will cover it."

Sig Rogich is the Bush advertising director and president of his own Las Vegas, Nev., agency, R&R Advertising. A veteran of presidential politics, Mr. Rogich called this year's presidential ads "not the most memorable, but effective."

He thinks there may be "a little more" negative advertising this election than in past races, but he said that's because "never before have there been two candidates so different and with so many differences.

"The media are focusing on the advertising so much because the other side [Dukakis] has made it an issue," Mr. Rogich said. "When you're losing, it's natural to attack the ads, so, hopefully, people will write the ads off when they see them."

Jeff Greenfield, political reporter on ABC-TV's "Nightline," dismisses Mr. Ailes' anti-media views and puts the onus for advertising's prominence on the campaigns themselves.

"The Bush campaign this year launched their negative ads very early, compared to the historic pattern of first using ads to establish your candidate's positives," Mr. Greenfield said. "This is the first time that negatives came so early, and it shocked people."

A senior member of the Dukakis ad team, who asked to remain anonymous, thinks the 1988 presidential ads have been accorded unprecedented attention because no one can—or wants to—focus on the candidates themselves.

"People are having a tough time determining what George Bush or Mike Dukakis stand for," he said. "So that's when the advertising comes to the forefront, when it has to supply the passion that the candidates cannot. In this race, the candidates have become almost irrelevant to what's going on. They might as well sit home and watch TV themselves."

He agreed with Mr. Ailes' blast at TV news but said the "quick-and-dirty" facet of TV is a fact of modern political life.

"That is the nature of TV and of TV news," he said. "And that may be the fault of the TV media, but it's not going to change. So we have to play by their rules. . . . that sound bites are the nature of the beast."

Others believe that "this year's ads aren't that negative," said Bob Gardner, president of Gardner Communications, San Francisco, the co-creative director on President Gerald Ford's 1976 campaign. "On a scale of 10, it's probably a 5."

Phil Dusenberry, vice chairman of BBDO Worldwide, New York, who worked on the 1980 and '84 campaigns of President Reagan, said the candidates may have lit the spark of ad attention when they criticized not only each other, but each other's ads.

"Usually they attack each other, but now they're taking pokes at each other's ads," he said. "They're calling attenion to the ads and not the issues. In the cola wars, people ask, 'Who won, Coke or Pepsi?' Well, both win because the ads increase attention and awareness. Here, I'm not sure the candidates win."#

Duke makes final TV buys

WASHINGTON—The Dukakis campaign will pull out its last advertising stops this week with five-minute commercials scheduled for Nov. 1 and Nov. 5 on network TV.

The commercials will supplement a flight of four issue-oriented 30-second spots already airing (AA, Oct. 17).

Late last week, the ad team for the Democratic presidential candidate hadn't decided whether the campaign's last two five-minute commercials would feature Michael Dukakis by himself; with his wife, Kitty; or with running mate Lloyd Bentsen.

The four 30-second spots, created by executives from W.B. Doner & Co., Baltimore, started airing last week in "spot markets in battleground states," said Lorraine Voles, the campaign's assistant press secretary. She said the broadcast and cable buy included more than 10 states at a cost exceeding $1 million.

All this maneuvering will lead up to a 30-minute Dukakis commercial that will run on election eve on all three networks at 8:30 p.m. (ET). The Bush campaign has bought a comparable half-hour starting at 8 p.m.#
